The work of preparing the records of the war for public use was begun under the resolution of Congress of May 19, 1864, by Adj. Gen. E. D. Townsend, U. S. Army, who caused copies to be made of reports of battles on file in his office and steps to be taken to collect missing records.

Under the provisions of joint resolution No. 91, of 1866, Hon. Peter H. Watson was appointed to supervise the preparation and formulate a plan for the publication of the records, but he did no work and drew no pay under this appointment, which expired July 27, 1868, by limitation of the resolution. This resolution also repealed the former one and work ceased.

The first decisive step taken in this work was the act of June 23, 1874, providing the necessary means "to enable the Secretary of War to begin the publication of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, both of the Union and Confederate Armies," and directing him "to have copied for the Public Printer all reports, letters, telegrams, and general orders, not heretofore copied or printed, and properly arranged in chronological order." Appropriations have been made from time to time for continuing such preparation. Under this act the preliminary work was resumed by General Townsend, who first outlined the plan on which the records are printed, though it appears that originally he contemplated publishing to the world only the more important military reports.

Subsequently, under meager appropriations, it was prosecuted in a somewhat desultory manner by various subordinates of the War Department until December 14, 1877, when the Secretary of War, perceiving that the undertaking needed the undivided attention of a single head, detailed Lieut. Col. Robert N. Scott, U. S. Army, to take charge of the bureau and devote himself exclusively to the work.

The act of June 23, 1874, greatly enlarged upon the first crude scheme of publication. On this more comprehensive basis it was determined that the volumes should include not only the battle reports, but also "all official documents that can be obtained by the compiler, and that appear to be of any historical value." Colonel Scott system-atized the work and the plan and presented the records in the following order of arrangement, which has been adhered to by his successors:

The first series will embrace the formal reports, both Union and Confederate, of the first seizures of United States property in the Southern States, and of all military operations in the field, with the correspondence, orders, and returns relating specially thereto, and, as proposed, is to be accompanied by an Atlas.

In this series the reports will be arranged according to the campaigns and several theaters of operations (in the chronological order of the events), and the Union reports of any event will, as a rule, be immediately followed by the Confederate accounts. The correspondence, etc., not embraced in the "reports" proper will follow (first Union and next Confederate) in chronological order.

The second series will contain the correspondence, orders, reports, and returns, Union and Confederate, relating to prisoners of war, and (so far as the military authorities were concerned) to State or political prisoners.

The third series will contain the correspondence, orders, reports, and returns of the Union authorities (embracing their correspondence with the Confederate officials) not relating specially to the subjects of the first and second series. It will set forth the annual and special reports of the Secretary of War, of the General-in-Chief, and of the chiefs of the several staff corps and departments; the calls for troops, and the correspondence between the National and the several State authorities.

The fourth series will exhibit the correspondence, orders, reports, and returns of the Confederate authorities, similar to that indicated for the Union officials, as of the third series, but excluding the correspondence between the Union and Confederate authorities given in that series.

The first volume of the records was issued in the early fall of 1880. The act approved June 16, 1880, provided "for the printing and binding, under direction of the Secretary of War, of 10,000 copies of a compilation of the Official Records (Union and Confederate) of the War of the Rebellion, so far as the same may be ready for publication, during the fiscal year;" and that "of said number 7,000 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Executive Departments." Under this act Colonel Scott proceeded to publish the first five volumes of the records.*

*All subsequent volumes have been distributed under the act approved August 7, 1882, which provides that:

"The volumes of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion shall be distributed as follows: One thousand copies to the Executive Departments, as now provided by law. One thousand copies for distribution by the Secretary of War among officers of the Army and contributors to the work. Eight thousand three hundred copies shall be sent by the Secretary of War to such libraries, organizations, and individuals as may be designated by the Senators, Representatives, and Delegates of the Forty-seventh Congress. Each Senator shall designate not exceeding twenty-six, and each Representative and Delegate not exceeding twenty-one, of such addresses, and the volumes shall be sent thereto from time to time as they are published, until the publication is completed. Senators, Representatives, and Delegates shall inform the Secretary of War in each case how many volumes of those heretofore published they have forwarded to such addresses. The remaining copies of the eleven thousand to be published, and all sets that may not be ordered to be distributed as provided herein, shall be sold by the Secretary of War for cost of publication with ten per cent. added thereto, and the proceeds of such sale shall be

Col. Robert N. Scott died March 5, 1887, before the completion of the work, which, during a ten years' service, he had come to love so dearly. At his death some twenty-six books only had been issued, but he had compiled a large amount of matter for forthcoming volumes; consequently his name as compiler was retained in all the books up to and including Vol. XXXVI, although his successors had added largely to his compilations from new material found after his demise.

The Secretary of War, May 7, 1887, assigned Lieut. Col. H. M. Lazelle, U. S. Army, to duty as the successor of Colonel Scott. He had continued in charge about two years, when, in the act approved March 2, 1889, it was provided—

That hereafter the preparation and publication of said records shall be conducted, under the Secretary of War, by a board of three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Army, and two civilian experts, to be appointed by the Secretary of War, the compensation of said civilian experts to be fixed by the Secretary of War.

The Secretary of War appointed Maj. George B. Davis, judge-advocate, U. S. Army, as the military member, and Leslie J. Perry, of Kansas, and Joseph W. Kirkley, of Maryland, as the civilian expert members of said board. The board assumed direction of the publication at the commencement of the fiscal year 1889, its first work beginning with Serial No. 36 of Vol. XXIV.

July 1, 1895, by direction of the Secretary of War, Maj. George W. Davis, Eleventh Infantry, U. S. Army, relieved Maj. George B. Davis, U. S. Army, as the military member and president of the Board of Publication.

Each volume includes a copious and accurate index, and for the further convenience of investigators there will be, in addition, a general index to the entire set when complete, in a volume by itself.

Nothing is printed in these volumes except duly authenticated contemporaneous records of the war. The scope of the board's work is to decide upon and arrange the matter to be published; to correct and verify the orthography of the papers used, and occasionally to add a foot-note of explanation.

covered into the Treasury. If two or more sets of said volumes are ordered to the same address, the Secretary of War shall inform the Senators, Representatives, or Delegates who have designated the same, who thereupon may designate other libraries, organizations, or individuals. The Secretary of War shall report to the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress what volumes of the series heretofore published have not been furnished to such libraries, organizations, and individuals. He shall also inform distributees at whose instance the volumes are sent."

Miscellaneous Union Correspondence, etc., Relating to Political Arrests During the First Year of the War.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 16, 1861.

G. HEINEKEN, Esq.,

Agent of the New York and Virginia Steamship Company, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have received your letter* of yesterday's date asking me to give you in writing my reasons for considering an acceptance on your part of Governor Letcher's proposal to purchase the steam-ships Yorktown and Jamestown, recently seized by his orders and now in his possession, an act of treason. With this request I readily comply.

An insurrection has broken out in several of the States of this Union including Virginia designed to overthrow the Government of the United States. The executive authorities of the State are parties in that insurrection and so are public enemies. Their action in seizing or buying vessels to be employed in executing that design is not merely withholding authority of law but is treason. It is treason for any person to give aid and comfort to public enemies. To sell vessels to them which it is their purpose to use as ships of war is to give them aid and comfort. To receive money from them in payment for vessels which they have seized for those purposes would be to attempt to convert the unlawful seizure into a sale and would subject the party so offending to the pains and penalties of treason, and the Government would not hesitate to bring the offender to punishment.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

OFFICE OF THE SUPT. OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, May 17, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: On the arrival of the family of Mr. Faulkner and of Dr. Gustavus Holland, of Texas, I immediately telegraphed you and requested to be informed whether it was the desire of the Government to detain either of them (supposing at the moment that Mr. Faulkner was himself in company). Not receiving a reply I deemed it proper to act on the rumors rife and made an examination of the papers of Dr. Holland on the morning of Wednesday. Nothing, however, was found on him that was calculated to sustain the unfavorable report of his being a bearer of dispatches from Messrs. Mann, Yancey and company to the Confederate States of America. But I found on him copies of four letters (evidently made in the counting room of the writer) of the dates of March 23 and 27 and April 27 and 27, addressed to "Jefferson Davis, President of the Confederate States of America," on the subject of loaning money by capitalists in Europe to the Confederate States of America, and refusing to do so until a full recognition of the repudiated debt of Mississippi should be made. I am having copies of these letters made and will forward them to you to-morrow.

Meanwhile a little incident has occurred that induced me to bring the doctor before me this evening when he informed me that an entire change has taken place in his views of the policy the South should pursue in the few days he has been here, and desired me to inform you that he is anxious to exert himself in restoring his Southern friends to reason; that he can convince them that they need expect no help from Europe; that he induced Mr. Gregory to make the motion in Parliament for the recognition of the Southern Confederacy under wrong information, &c. He expresses himself willing to call on you in Washington, where he can inform you further both in relation to things in Europe and at the South if you desire it. He was about to leave the city for Texas in a day or so, but will now await your pleasure. It would probably be best to notify me of your wishes in the matter, when I could communicate them to him. If you desire to address him direct you can do so by sending to Saint Nicholas Hotel.

Very truly, yours, &c.,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

OFFICE OF THE SUPT. OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, May 18, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: As I advised you in my note of yesterday I herewith inclose copies of four several letters of the dates respectively of March 23 and 27 and April 27 and 27 from Edward Haslenwood, of 7 Lothbury, East Chelsea, London, to Jefferson Davis, President of the Southern Confederation, on the subject of obtaining European loans for the South. These copies are made from manuscript copies furnished at the office of Mr. Haslenwood, the sheets bearing the printed heads of his office. I have engaged with Doctor Holland in whose possession they were found that no use should be made of them to his personal annoyance or disadvantage.

Very truly, yours, &c.,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

President of the Southern Confederation.

SIR: It must be evident to you that the principal difficulty with which the South has to contend is the want of money and the want of credit. As long as Mississippi forms part of the Southern Confederacy and as long as the bonds of Mississippi issued through the Planters' and the Union banks are unsettled no loan can be negotiated in Europe. Mississippi must either go out or settle with her creditors. Within a few days you shall have a letter showing how other nations have compromised their debts and that the repudiation difficulty can be arranged.

I remain, your obedient servant,

EDWARD HASLENWOOD.

7 LOTHBURY, EAST CHELSEA, LONDON, March 27, 1861.

JEFFERSON DAVIS, President of the Southern Confederacy.

SIR: On Saturday last I forwarded a few lines to you on the subject of the future credit of the Southern Confederacy and how far it would be injured by the course heretofore pursued by Mississippi with regard to her bonds. Outside of that letter I did not put any superscription beyond your name and address because I felt that it might become the ground for detention of the same by any of the postmasters of the Northern States who might wish to embarrass your movements.

Annexed to this letter you will find a copy* of the law of the London Stock Exchange which will hopelessly exclude any new loan until Mississippi shall make satisfactory arrangements with her creditors, and it is of no use to try the Continent because it is a standing rule with them never to take any loan which has been openly refused here. I am a member of the London Stock Exchange. I know perfectly the workings of the rule. I also know how futile your hopes will be of raising any money here except upon the conditions I mentioned, that the Mississippi debt must be acknowledged and settled. Moreover, I am one of the committee for settling the debts of Spanish America and have made arrangements for the debts of Peru, Chili, Buenos Ayres, Venezuela, New Grenada and Central America and in a future letter I will give you the benefits of my experience and show to you the nature of the compromises of other nations in the settlement of their debts. I am also the secretary of the committee appointed by the Mississippi bondholders having special reference to that class issued through the Planters' Bank, though I do not now address you in my official capacity.

I am well aware of the difficulties of the question for raising money for the South, but I do not regard them as insurmountable provided that the two debts of Mississippi are arranged for. Hopeless without it and among the difficulties are the non-recognition of the Southern Confederacy by the United States and by European nations, the probabilities of war between the North and South, the fact that the entire income of the South depends almost upon one staple; that the condition of their exchanges is such that any money advanced would take the form of a direct shipment of gold coin thus reducing the bullion in the Bank of England and prolonging the rate of discount at 7 per cent. per annum.

Slavery.—There are armies of annuitants who would not lend a sixpence on the slaves on principle; anyhow the rate would have to be very high because at all times the Southern sixes were only equal to Northern fives under the best circumstances. But the greatest difficulty is repudiation. Apparently it would seem to be unfortunate that you, the principal exponent and defender of repudiation, should have been chosen as the head of the Southern Confederacy. I regard it in quite another light. One word from you showing the necessity for retracing the steps of Mississippi would have more effect than a volume from any other man. Remember there is more joy over one error repaired than over myriads to ———. If you have not the courage to do this then your position is a mistake. To-morrow I will send you much valuable information foreshadowing a solution to your difficulties.

I remain, yours, very truly,

EDWARD HASLENWOOD.

[Inclosure No. 3.]

7 LOTHBURY, EAST CHELSEA, LONDON, April 27, 1861.

JEFFERSON DAVIS, President of the Southern Confederacy.

SIR: According to the promise contained in my former letters I will give to you the outline of a compromise for both debts of Mississippi drawn from my experience in these matters. The first step is to obtain power from the legislature to the executive to make satisfactory arrangements with her bondholders within the means of the State. The question is not how much does Mississippi owe but how much can she pay? What is the maximum annually she hopes to set aside for redeeming her credit? What is the minimum she can guarantee? Above all things let her acknowledge as a debt the whole of the principal and the whole of the arrears of interest and make one common homogeneous debt of it, and then the sum the State can pay annually; whether it is large or small let it be equally divided over the whole debt. The system is to call a public meeting of the bondholders, obtain their consent to the acceptance of an arrangement on any basis proposed, appoint a representative or a committee to settle the details and immediately after the issue of the new bonds the Stock Exchange of London is open to the negotiation of any new loan or industrial enterprise of the State.

Among the very large number of the compromises which I have effected as one of the committee of Spanish-American bondholders I have never failed in convincing the creditors that they ought to accept the offer, provided that first of all I was myself convinced of the justice of the compromise. I have always been an advocate where the debt is very large and the revenue small that a fixed percentage of the total receipts should be set aside and taken by the creditors in full each year for the interest of that year. This prevents any great accumulation of unpaid arrears against the State, and also induces the creditors to benefit the State if in any way in their power. Any proposition should be accompanied by statistics showing the position of the State for the past few years, and that the new taxes are as much as the people ought to be expected to carry.

Until the Mississippi debt is settled the credit of the South is just nothing at all.

I remain, yours, very truly,

EDWARD HASLENWOOD.

[Inclosure No. 4.]

7 LOTHBURY, EAST CHELSEA, LONDON, April 27, 1861

JEFFERSON DAVIS,

President of the Southern Confederacy, Montgomery, Ala.

SIR: It may so happen after all that the Southern Confederacy may again pass into and become part of the United States of America, and if so the opportunity ought not to be lost for merging the debts of the individual States into one common homogeneous debt, including Mississippi, and also insisting on a great reduction of the tariff. Apparently the credit of the United States is at a low ebb, but let the whole be once more united and I have no hesitation in stating that a loan could be raised bearing 4 per cent. interest large enough to absorb the whole of the States' debts (including Mississippi), and that the price of that stock would soon be higher than any of the Southern 6 per cents or Northern 5 per cents of the separate States. Another point of great importance would be to stipulate that the number of States in the Senate should be equal for the South as for the North. To effect this there must be ultimately an extension by purchase or conquest of Mexico, and nothing would give greater satisfaction in Europe than to see the whole of that country absorbed into the States, provided that the debt of Mexico was acknowledged and guaranteed. The peon law of Mexico is not far removed from the slavery of the South.

I remain, your most obedient servant,

EDWARD HASLENWOOD.

OFFICE U. S. DISTRICT ATTORNEY FOR

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK,

New York, May 20, 1861.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War.

SIR: In pursuance of the instructions of Col. James Cameron, your accredited agent, I made arrangements with the marshal and with our general superintendent of police which resulted in the simultaneous possession by the Government to-day, May 20, at 3 o'clock p. m., of all telegraphic dispatches sent to or received from the Southern section of the country for a year and upward. They are so numerous and bulky and so systematically arranged that the marshal determined not to remove them at present and to place two deputy marshals in continual charge of the apartments in which the dispatches were found and are stored with instructions to permit no person to have access to them.

We await a consultation among ourselves and perhaps instructions from you before taking a further step in the matter.

The companies mildly protested in order to place themselves right before their customers, but they and their counsel made no serious objection to the proceeding and now appear willing to afford every facility in their power to aid the object of the Government.

I inclose a copy of my letter to the marshal upon which he has acted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. DELAFIELD SMITH,

U. S. District Attorney.

[Inclosure.]

OFFICE U. S. DISTRICT ATTORNEY FOR
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK,
New York, May 20, 1861.

ROBERT MURRAY, Esq., U. S. Marshal.

SIR: In pursuance of instructions received from Washington you are directed on behalf of the United States Government to obtain possession of any telegraphic dispatches that may have been sent or received with purposes hostile to the Government or in relation to supplies of arms and provisions purchased or forwarded to the Southern rebels.

Upon obtaining possession of these dispatches should the record or file in which they are included also embrace other telegraphic dispatches having no connection with this subject you are authorized to assent to the packages which may be taken by you being sealed, to be opened and examined on the part of the United States Government upon notice to the telegraph agent from whom you receive them.

You will take this proceeding at 3 o'clock p. m. to-day, and do so simultaneously at all the offices in this city where such dispatches are to be found.

Your prompt and energetic action in the matter is requested and will be expected.

Very respectfully,

E. DELAFIELD SMITH,
U. S. District Attorney.

OFFICE U. S. DISTRICT ATTORNEY FOR DISTRICT OF NEW JERSEY,
Newark, May 20, 1861.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War.

DEAR SIR: In pursuance of the directions of Col. James Cameron given to me on your behalf I obtained at 3 p. m. to-day all the telegraphic dispatches sent and received within a year past at the offices in Trenton, Princeton, Elizabeth and Newark in this State. They are all now in my possession and I await further instructions as to the disposition of them.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. Q. KEASBEY,
U. S. Attorney for New Jersey.

OFFICE U. S. ATTORNEY
EASTERN DISTRICT PENNSYLVANIA,
Philadelphia, May 21, 1861.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War.

SIR: I have the honor to report that on yesterday at 3 o'clock p. m. Marshal William Millward by my directions took charge of all dispatches sent to the South from any source from this city since the 1st of January last. The gentlemen controlling the various telegraph lines being loyal rendered us every aid and assistance. We hold these papers subject to your order and shall meanwhile proceed to examine them.

Your obedient servant,

GEO. A. COFFEY,
U. S. Attorney.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S OFFICE, May 22, 1861.

HON. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War.

SIR: A short time since by request I sent instructions to several district attorneys toward the North to co-operate with your special agents in making effectual your orders to take possession of the written messages in various telegraph offices. Several of the attorneys have made report to me of the seizure of the papers and other reports are expected daily.

Having no important matter to communicate I only notify you of these facts and of my desire to co-operate with you in full.

Most respectfully,

EDW. BATES.

OFFICE U. S. DISTRICT ATTORNEY FOR
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK,
New York, May 25, 1861.

HON. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War.

SIR: It is estimated that the telegraphic dispatches in our custody covering a period of a year number not less than 200,000 or 300,000.

The formidable amount of criminal to say nothing of civil business pressing upon me, my continued efforts to investigate charges of treason and to put an end to the flow of aid and comfort from this city to the rebel combinations at the South and the prize cases now crowding upon us all render it difficult for me to depute from my office a judicious person to examine all the dispatches and select those that should merit my attention or be of use to the Government.

It has appeared to me that the delicate and important duty of making such examination should be intrusted to a very intelligent, reliable person who could devote to it his uninterrupted efforts until the task should be methodically completed. If Col. James Cameron whose discretion and energy have been evinced in perfecting the plan of seizing the dispatches can come here charged with the duty in question I shall be glad. If not perhaps you will give me authority to employ a discreet and intelligent person at such rate of compensation as our district judge and myself shall determine to be reasonable.

Awaiting your instructions or intimations on the subject, I am, with great respect, honored sir, your obedient servant,

E. DELAFIELD SMITH,
U. S. District Attorney.

SIR: I hereby respectfully request to resign my commission as a lieutenant in the Navy of the United States.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. H. WARD,
Lieutenant, U. S. Navy.

[Indorsement.]

This resignation has been in my possession during the last month. I was too sick to forward it when it was first handed in. Lieutenant Ward is a good officer and I would regret to lose his services.

The Secretary of War directs that you arrest General A. S. Johnston if he returns from California by overland route.

WINFIELD SCOTT.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., June 7, 1861.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON.

DEAR SIR: I am a resident of San José, Santa Clara County, Cal., and I am in this city on business and have spent ten days here, and I have learned that Colonel Johnston who was recently commander of the U. S. forces on this coast will leave this place next week with an armed band of secessionists for Texas with the avowed purpose of joining the traitors of Texas and the Southern Confederacy. They will pass through Arizona, thence to New Mexico, and I am informed that it is their intention to "clean out" as they express it all Union men on the route. I thought it my duty as a good citizen to post you that they may be headed off in New Mexico by the soldiers stationed there or on the border of Texas by Montgomery or Jim Lane, of Kansas. This information I believe to be reliable. They publicly state their intention to "emigrate" as they call it, but you be assured from my knowledge of some of the emigrants they are and will be ready to annihilate every Union man as soon as they leave the borders of this State where Colonel Sumner's prompt and timely arrival saved our State from a bloody war for the Union.

I refer you to Hon. John F. Farnsworth, of Saint Charles, Ill. (Representative), K. S. Bingham, of the Senate, and to ex-Governor Felch, of Michigan, all of whom know me well and of my truthfulness. My name must not be used or my life would not be worth a straw.

Truly,

R. B. HALL.

California safe for the Union. We are forming Union clubs in every city, town and hamlet.

SIR: I have in my possession evidence I think of complicity of two of our foreign ministers, one to Portugal and the other to Switzerland, while in England with the enemies of our country so strong that I think it cannot fail to convict them of treason, and if you think it important I can supply it to you if you so direct me.

Very respectfully, from one of your earliest friends,

HENRY SHEPARD,

P. S.—If you should think it necessary to communicate with me please do so under cover to J. B. Jones, New York.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 14, 1861.

JOHN E. WARD, Esq., Savannah, Ga.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 4th instant.* It has given the Department pleasure to comply with your request by giving you a passport for the purpose indicated by you, and by furnishing Mr. Spooner with the desired permit to transfer your baggage and effects to Savannah.

GENERAL ORDERS, } HDQRS. DEPT. OF NORTHEAST VIRGINIA,
No. 5. } Arlington, June 14, 1861.

Unless under the special orders in each case of a commander of brigade or superior authority it is forbidden to any officer or soldier within this department to arrest or attempt to arrest any citizen or citizens under the plea of their being secessionists, or for any cause whatsoever save that of being at the time in arms against the United States. Nor will any officer or soldier without the like authority forcibly enter, search or attempt to search any house or the premises of any peaceable resident or other persons not in arms against the United States. The military or police force will arrest any one found trespassing even on the premises of any citizen without the department.

By command of Brigadier-General McDowell:

JAMES B. FRY,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF ANNAPOLIS,
Fort McHenry, June 16, 1861.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War.

SIR: The election passed without disorder but the fact is not a just indication of the spirit of the city. Active demonstrations on the part of secessionists can only be suppressed by constant readiness of our forces. We need greatly some assistance here.

First. Authority to establish a home guard. There are many good Union men here who are ready to enter the service, and we have arms for them which have been taken from ill-disposed persons. They can be deposited at the custom-house under guard of our troops so as to make secure their possession. This will give occupation to the Union men and confidence to the loyal portion of the city. I think it will be prudently and safely managed.

Second. We need a corps of cavalry to suppress the contraband trade on the back roads leading southward. We have not now a mounted orderly by whom to send a message even to the city. Some assistance of this kind is indispensable. The infantry can well command the railways. I have written to Mr. Secretary Chase to loan us the service of a revenue cutter for a brief period by which we could control this trade upon the river and bay. To cut off the contraband is to deprive Baltimore of the support now given publicly to the secession spirit and strip the rebel army of its most useful supplies. I beg you to think of this subject and give us prompt aid.

* Not found.

Third. Baltimore would afford most excellent camps of instruction for raw troops. They can be easily and cheaply supported here in healthy and convenient locations, well drilled and disciplined, and their presence would afford support to the Government against the rebel elements in the city. In a short time you could safely withdraw the best troops for service elsewhere leaving the new levies in possession here.

With respect I submit these considerations to you, and remain, your obliged and obedient servant,

N. P. BANKS,
General, Commanding.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Wheeling, Va., June 21, 1861.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

SIR: Reliable information has been received at this department from various parts of this State that large numbers of evil-minded persons have banded together in military organizations with intent to overthrow the government of the State, and for that purpose have called to their aid like-minded persons from other States who in pursuance of such call have invaded this Commonwealth. They are now making war on the loyal people of the State. They are pressing citizens against their consent into their military organizations and seizing and appropriating their property to aid in the rebellion.

I have not at my command sufficient military force to suppress this rebellion and violence. The legislature cannot be convened in time to act in the premises. It therefore becomes my duty as governor of this Commonwealth to call on the Government of the United States for aid to suppress such rebellion and violence. I therefore earnestly request that you will furnish a military force to aid in suppressing the rebellion and to protect the good people of this Commonwealth from domestic violence.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,
FRANCIS H. PEIRPOINT,
Governor.

Capt. J. B. FRY, Assistant Adjutant-General, Arlington.

DEAR SIR: On the 15th instant I left with you at Arlington a letter from Maj. J. F. Lee introducing me to General McDowell, and a letter from me to General McDowell in which I asked him to inform me whether the three Virginia troopers who were prisoners here could be exchanged or released on terms. Not having heard from General McDowell will you be so obliging as to inform me by letter directed to this place whether General McDowell saw Major Lee's and my letter and whether he has come to any conclusion in relation to the prisoners.

Your early reply will oblige, your obedient servant,

J. M. JOHNSON, Alexandria.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 25th instant I have to inform you that your letter was laid before General McDowell but no answer at the time could be given in the case. The prisoners of war to whom you refer have been sent to Washington and your application must now be made there.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Hon. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War.

SIR: Your letter of the 26th instant relative to forwarding letters from Europe to the rebels in the South has been received. The inclosed copies of letters to the honorable Secretary of State and Major-General McClellan set forth the views of this Department as to its power in the premises.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,

Maj. Gen. G. B. McCLELLAN, Cincinnati, Ohio.

GENERAL: I have received yours of the 9th instant,* inclosing a letter from Mr. Gaither upon the subject of the transmission of mail matter South by Adams Express Company.

I have to reply that the regulation of the intercourse between the two sections is under the control of the military authorities of the country and therefore whether the express business shall be continued at all or not it is not my province to decide. If it is continued and letters are transmitted by it and mailed at Louisville or elsewhere within the loyal States, postage paid in accordance with the laws and regulations of the service, I cannot prevent it; but the postmaster at Louisville has been instructed to send all letters coming from States in which the postal service has been discontinued with our stamps upon them to the Dead-Letter Office, for the reason that we do not recognize stamps and stamped envelopes obtained from offices in such States which like other mail property have been fraudulently seized.

I should not object at all to the express company receiving letters in the South and bringing them to Louisville or Cincinnati to be mailed to any part of the United States if the stamps for the prepayment of the postage on such letters are obtained from offices within the loyal States. Nor would I object to the express company taking letters from within the loyal States to any point within the seceded States, such letters being stamped in accordance with the United States postal regulations.

There being no postal arrangements on the part of this Government in existence in those States, as a matter of course such transmission of letters would involve no infraction of law. The only point on which I wish especially to insist in the employment of the express agency for this purpose is that letters mailed to points within the loyal States shall not be prepaid by stamps which have been stolen from us, and from the high character you give Mr. Gaither I should feel assured upon this point; but as we can have no understanding with him he must take care to make it clear to our offices that he is not using the stamps stolen from us.

Respectfully, &c.,

M. BLAIR,
Postmaster-General.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Appointment Office, June 28, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: I am in receipt of yours of the 25th instant inclosing a letter* from Mr. Bowen, commissioner of police at New York, relative to the channel of communication between the disunionists in Europe and Northern States with their party in the Southern States. Mr. Bowen suggests that there will be no difficulty in breaking up the establishment in New York and Boston if authorized by the Secretary of War and the Postmaster-General.

In reply I have to state that there being no postal arrangement in existence on the part of this Department between the Government and the disunion States, or between the disunion States and foreign governments, the regulation of the intercourse between them is at present under the control of the military authorities of the country, and any communication which may be had must depend upon the action of the military department.

Under the provisions of the eighth section of the postal act of August 31, 1852, letters inclosed in postage-stamped envelopes not having been before used may be carried outside the mail over regular postal routes, provided such stamps are equal in value and amount to the rates of postage to which such letters would be liable if sent in the mail. So far as the Post-Office laws are concerned it will thus appear that this Department has no further power than to see that its revenues do not suffer, and that no frauds are perpetrated upon it—in other words, that the laws are observed. I have only to say further that in the opinion of the Postmaster-General his power is limited to secure the observance of the laws and regulations resting thereupon. The further questions must be referred to the War Department.

I inclose a printed copy of the letter of the Postmaster-General addressed to Major-General McClellan, and embodying his views, in reply to that officer.

Agreeably to request the letter of Mr. Bowen is herewith returned.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. KASSON,

First Assistant Postmaster-General.

HDQRS. DEPARTMENT OF THE OHIO, June 28, 1861.

Maj. Gen. WINFIELD SCOTT, Washington.

DEAR SIR: On my arrival at this place I found quite a number of prisoners in custody under General Morris. I have felt it my duty as well as good policy under surrounding circumstances to deal leniently with the prisoners against whom the charges were not of a gross character, and all such have been discharged. For my guidance in disposing of those remaining in custody as well as for my direction in other cases that may arise I beg leave to ask for instructions as to what disposition is to be made of prisoners of the following classes respectively: First. Prisoners taken in battle. Second. Prisoners who have been in the secession army and have deserted or been discharged. Third. Spies. Fourth. Guerrillas. Fifth. Prisoners who without taking up arms themselves have been active and influential in inducing others to take up arms.

COLUMBUS, July 1.

Colonel Norton, of the First Regiment State troops at Gallipolis, telegraphed the governor to-day that on Saturday night a mounted party of fifty men came from Charleston, Va., to Point Pleasant, headed by A. G. Jenkins and took some of the most prominent Union men there prisoners and marched them off. Colonel Norton started with 100 men in pursuit but could not overtake them. He then scoured the country and took 30 prominent secessionists prisoners whom he now holds as hostages for the safety of the Union men in hands of the rebels. Norton says there are 3,500 rebels now at Charleston under command of [Brig. Gen. J. M.] Hawes.

*Extract from the President's message to Congress in special session,
July 4, 1861.*

FELLOW-CITIZENS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

* * * * *

Soon after the first call for militia it was considered a duty to authorize the commanding general in proper cases according to his discretion to suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, or in other words to arrest and detain without resort to the ordinary processes and forms of law such individuals as he might deem dangerous to the public safety. This authority has been purposely exercised but very sparingly. Nevertheless the legality and propriety of what has been done under it are questioned, and the attention of the country has been called to the proposition that one who is sworn to take care that the laws be faithfully executed should not himself violate them.

Of course some consideration was given to the question of power and propriety before this matter was acted upon. The whole of the laws which were required to be faithfully executed were being resisted and failing of execution in nearly one-third of the States. Must they be allowed to finally fail of execution even had it been perfectly clear that by the use of means necessary to their execution some single law made in such extreme tenderness of the citizen's liberty that practically it relieves more of the guilty than of the innocent should to a very limited extent be violated?

To state the question more directly, are all the laws but one to go unexecuted and the Government itself go to pieces lest that one be violated? Even in such a case would not the official oath be broken if the Government should be overthrown when it was believed that disregarding the single law would tend to preserve it? But it was not believed that this question was presented. It was not believed that any law was violated.

The provision of the Constitution that the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it is equivalent to a provision—is a provision—that such privilege may be suspended when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety does require it. It was decided that we have a case of rebellion and that the public safety does require the qualified suspension of the privilege of the writ which was authorized to be made.

Now it is insisted that Congress and not the Executive is vested with that power. But the Constitution itself is silent as to which or who is to exercise the power; and as the provision was plainly made for a dangerous emergency it cannot be believed the framers of the instrument intended that in every case the danger should run its course until Congress could be called together; the very assembling of which might be prevented as was intended in this case by the rebellion.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

PALOZZO BACIOCCHI, Florence, Italy, July 6, 1861.

Hon. PRESTON KING.

MY DEAR SIR: While taking a social cup of tea on the 4th with our consul-general, resident in this city, he informed me that he had recently received one of three letters that had been sent to this city under the cover of the obliging consul of Her Britannic Majesty of England, resident at Richmond, Va., by one of the rebels of that State who is now a soldier in the Army of the Confederate States. The writer of these letters was for several years previous to the breaking out of this atrocious rebellion a resident of this city, but he returned to Virginia in March last and has now as he says in his letters to the consul taken up arms against the Government of the United States.

The letters that this misguided and foolish fellow has sent here under cover of the British consul at Richmond have simply reference to business and friendly relations and in themselves are of no public importance whatever; but inasmuch as he says in them (one of which I took pains yesterday to get a glance at) that his friend the British consul at Richmond will allow replies from his correspondents here in Florence to go to the writer under his cover (the consul's), it shows how communications may pass between the enemies of our Government which in the present crisis in its affairs may be of vital importance. I said therefore to our consul that I thought he ought at once to apprise the Government of the fact that the British consul at Richmond, Va., was obliging his friends by the use of his official position and privileges in aid of their correspondence in a manner that might be found detrimental to the interests of the country. The consul is by birth a North Carolinian and an appointee of Buchanan and said he did not like the idea of being an informer; but I urged the importance of this fact being communicated to the Government at Washington so strongly that he finally indicated a disposition to write to some one there about it.

But lest he should not do so I have taken the liberty to drop you this note in relation to it, and if you regard it in the light that it presents itself to me you can communicate it to those who will be able to guard the country against any mischief that might otherwise be likely to flow from the ability of the enemies of the Government to keep up a free and undisturbed correspondence by means of the privileges granted in good faith to foreign consuls accredited to the Government of the United States and residing in the revolted territory. If the British consul in Richmond is obliging enough to render a facility of this kind to one rebel he can hardly refuse it to others, and for any purpose that may suit the convenience of those who may desire it, and if one British consul resident in the revolted States will lend himself for the use of the enemies of the Government to which he stands accredited is it not likely that others similarly situated do the same thing, and that through this consular postal medium Jeff. Davis and the head rebels of the South are kept daily advised of whatever is being done on the part of the Federal Government to counteract their nefarious intentions?

I remain, my dear sir, with great respect, very truly, your friend,
J. E. COOLEY.

Resolution adopted by the House of Representatives July 8, 1861.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to instruct the officers of the Army of the United States taking prisoners and releasing them upon their oath of allegiance to the United States to report their name and residence to him that they may be recorded in his Department.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, July 8, 1861.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith a copy of a memorandum that has been left with me giving information of a plan said to have been formed by a person named James C. Hurry, of Baltimore, for the capture* of one of the steam-boats plying between Baltimore and the Patuxent River. The memorandum is from a responsible source.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

GIDEON WELLES.

[Inclosure—Memorandum.]

A man of notoriously bad character named James C. Hurry, a resident of Baltimore, has formed a plan for the capture during the present week of one of the steam-boats plying between Baltimore and the Patuxent River, either by putting his men on board the boat at Baltimore or at Millstone Landing, on that river. This Millstone Landing or point is a position from whence more smuggling of men and provisions is carried on than any other place on the Chesapeake waters. Small vessels are constantly plying between that position and the Rappahannock and Cone Rivers, chiefly to the latter, where a Tennessee regiment is posted. These vessels are run outside of Captain Budd's lines.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON.

SIR: To be short: I have a plan for securing the persons of Jefferson Davis, Floyd, Cobb and others prominent in this secession movement and should be glad to submit it to your judgment.

I believe the time is not far distant when these gentlemen (?) rebels will be obliged to flee the country. My stratagem would have to do with them at that particular juncture and could not possibly fail of "bagging" some if not all of them. It could be done without much cost comparatively, and so far as I might be concerned would ask of Government the opportunity of executing it. Should you desire I will lay the whole matter before you at any time you may designate. It may be proper to add that when necessary I can present suitable credentials from some of your warmest friends.

Yours, very respectfully,

THOS. DENNY SARGENT,
Of Massachusetts.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, NEW YORK,
Collector's Office, July 10, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: James D. Bulloch, of Savannah, Ga., is now in England, and has purchased there ten war vessels and is fitting them out at an expense of about $750,000 for the use of the Southern Confederacy as a naval force. These vessels will sail from Liverpool under the flag of the Confederacy and will operate upon our merchantmen and navy ships.

This information was communicated to me to-day by Mr. J. A. Roosevelt, of the well-known and highly respected house of Roosevelt & Son, of this city, a nephew of Judge Roosevelt, a family connection of Mr. Bulloch, and who has seen letters from him directing his property here transferred to other parties so that it may not be confiscated by action of the United States Government. Of course I know not the grounds of this apprehension, but give it as I have given all the statements in this letter on Mr. Roosevelt's authority exclusively. Mr. Roosevelt is an ardent Union man and would feel bound to denounce a brother probably to save the Government, but he does not wish his name used if it can be avoided.

I am, dear sir, truly, yours,

HIRAM BARNEY.

Resolution adopted by the House of Representatives, July 12, 1861.

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be requested to lay before this House at his earliest convenience a copy of the opinion mentioned in the message of the President delivered to this House on the opening of its present session, and also a copy of the General Order suspending the writ of habeas corpus.

requested the Attorney-General to lay before the House a copy of the order suspending the writ of habeas corpus has the honor to report that three several orders upon this subject have been issued—one by the President of the United States to the commanding general of the Army of the 27th April; the second by a proclamation of the President of the 10th May last, and the third by an order of the President to the commanding general of the Army of the 2d instant. A copy of these orders is hereunto annexed.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

The COMMANDING GENERAL ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES:

You are engaged in repressing an insurrection against the laws of the United States. If at any point on or in the vicinity of any military line which is now or which shall be used between the city of Philadelphia and the city of Washington you find resistance which renders it necessary to suspend the writ of habeas corpus for the public safety, you personally or through the officer in command at the point where resistance occurs are authorized to suspend that writ.

Given under my hand and the seal of the United States, at the city of Washington, this 27th day of April, 1861, and of the Independence of the United States the eighty-fifth.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas an insurrection exists in the State of Florida by which the lives, liberty and property of loyal citizens of the United States are endangered; and

Whereas it is deemed proper that all needful measures should be taken for the protection of such citizens and all officers of the United States in the discharge of their public duties in the State aforesaid:

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, do hereby direct the commander of the forces of the United States on the Florida coast to permit no person to exercise any office or authority upon the islands of Key West, the Tortugas and Santa Rosa which may be inconsistent with the laws and Constitution of the United States, authorizing him at the same time if he shall find it necessary to suspend there the writ of habeas corpus and to remove from the vicinity of the United States fortresses all dangerous or suspected persons.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 10th day of May, A. D. 1861, and of the Independence of the United States the eighty-fifth.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S OFFICE, July 13, 1861.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the House passed yesterday and by permission of the President I have the honor to send herewith a copy of my opinion "mentioned in the message of the President delivered to this House at the opening of its present session."

The resolution also requests of me "a copy of the order suspending the writ of habeas corpus." As there is no such order in the records or the files of my office I have ventured to request the Secretary of State to fulfill the pleasure of the honorable House in that particular.

I have the honor to be, most respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,
EDWARD BATES.

[Inclosure.]

ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S OFFICE, July 5, 1861.

The PRESIDENT.

SIR: You have required my opinion in writing upon the following questions:

First. In the present time of a great and dangerous insurrection has the President the discretionary power to cause to be arrested and held in custody persons known to have criminal intercourse with the insurgents or persons against whom there is probable cause for suspicion of such criminal complicity?

Second. In such cases of arrest is the President justified in refusing to obey a writ of habeas corpus issued by a court or judge requiring him or his agent to produce the body of the prisoner and show the cause of his capture and detention to be adjudged and disposed of by such court or judge?

To make my answer to these questions at once consistent and plain I find it convenient to advert to the great principle of government as recognized and acted upon in most if not all the countries in Europe and to mark the difference between that principle and the great principle which lies at the bottom of our National Government.

Most European writers upon government assume expressly or by implication that every national government is and must be the full expression and representation of the nation which it governs, armed with all its powers and able to assert all its rights. In England, the form of whose Government more nearly approximates our own, and where the rights, interests and powers of the people are more respected and cared for than in most of the nations of the European continent, it has grown into an axiom that "The Parliament is omnipotent," that is, that it can do anything that is possible to be done by legislation or by judgment. For all the ends of government the Parliament is the nation. Moreover in Europe generally the sovereignty is vested visibly in some designated man or set of men so that the subject people can see their sovereign as well as feel the workings of his power. But in this country it has been carefully provided otherwise. In the formation of our National Government our fathers were surrounded with peculiar difficulties arising out of their novel, I may say unexampled, condition. In resolving to break the ties which had bound them to the British Empire their complaints were leveled chiefly at the King, not the Parliament nor the people. They seem to have been actuated by a special dread of the unity of power, and hence in framing the Constitution they preferred to take the risk of leaving some good undone for lack of power in the agent rather than arm any Government officer with such great powers for evil as are implied in the dictatorial charge to "see that no damage comes to the commonwealth."

Hence keeping the sovereignty always out of sight they adopted the plan of "checks and balances," forming separate departments of government and giving to each department separate and limited powers. These departments are co-ordinate and coequal—that is, neither being sovereign, each is independent in its sphere and not subordinate to the others, either of them or both of them together. We have three of these co-ordinate departments. Now if we allow one of the three to determine the extent of its own powers and also the extent of the powers of the other two that one can control the whole Government and has in fact achieved the sovereignty.

We ought not to say that our system is perfect for its defects (perhaps inevitable in all human things) are obvious. Our fathers having divided the Government into co-ordinate departments did not even try (and if they had tried would probably have failed) to create an arbiter among them to adjudge their conflicts and keep them within their respective bounds. They were left by design I suppose each independent and free to act out its own granted powers without any ordained legal superior professing the power to revise and reverse its action. And this with the hope that the three departments, mutually coequal and independent, would keep each other within their proper spheres by their mutual antagonism—that is, by the system of checks and balances to which our fathers were driven at the beginning by their fear of the unity of power.

In this view of the subject it is quite possible for the same identical question (not case) to come up legitimately before each one of the three departments and be determined in three different ways and each decision stand irrevocable, binding upon the parties to each case; and that for the simple reason that the departments are co-ordinate and there is no ordained legal superior with power to revise and reverse their decisions.

To say that the departments of our Government are co-ordinate is to say that the judgment of one of them is not binding upon the other two as to the arguments and principles involved in the judgment. It binds only the parties to the case decided. But if admitting that the departments of Government are co-ordinate it be still contended that the principles adopted by one department in deciding a case properly before it are binding upon another department that obligation must of necessity be reciprocal. That is, if the President be bound by the principles laid down by the judiciary so also is the judiciary bound by the principles laid down by the President; and thus we shall have a theory of constitutional government flatly contradicting itself. Departments co-ordinate and coequal and yet reciprocally subordinate to each other? That cannot be. The several departments, though far from sovereign are free and independent in the exercise of the limited powers granted to them respectively by the Constitution. Our Government indeed as a whole is not vested with the sovereignty and does not possess all the powers of the nation. It has no powers but such as are granted by the Constitution; and many powers are expressly withheld. The nation certainly is coequal with all other nations and has equal powers but it has not chosen to delegate all its powers to this Government in any or all of its departments.

The Government as a whole is limited, and limited in all its departments. It is the especial function of the judiciary to hear and determine cases, not to "establish principles" nor "settle questions," so as to conclude any person but the parties and privies to the cases adjudged. Its powers are specially granted and defined by the Constitution, article 3, section 2:

The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States and treaties made and which shall be made under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other ministers and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States; between States and citizens of other States; between citizens of different States; between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States and between a State or the citizens thereof and foreign States, citizens or subjects.

And that is the sum of its powers, ample and efficient for all the purposes of distributive justice among individual parties but powerless to impose rules of action and of judgment upon the other departments. Indeed it is not itself bound by its own decisions for it can and often does overrule and disregard them, as in common honesty it ought to do whenever it finds by its wiser and better lights that its former judgments were wrong.

Of all the departments of the Government the President is the most active and the most constant in action. He is called "the Executive," and so in fact he is, and much more also for the Constitution has imposed upon him many important duties and granted to him great powers which are in their nature not executive—such as the veto power; the power to send and receive ambassadors; the power to make treaties and the power to appoint officers. This last is not more an executive power when used by the President than it is when exercised by either House of Congress, by the courts of justice or by the people at large.

The President is a department of the Government; and although the only department which consists of a single man he is charged with a greater range and variety of powers and duties than any other department. He is a civil magistrate, not a military chief; and in this regard we see a striking proof of the generality of the sentiment prevailing in this country at the time of the formation of our Government to the effect that the military ought to be held in strict subordination to the civil power. For the Constitution while it grants to Congress the unrestricted power to declare war, to raise and support armies and to provide and maintain a navy at the same time guards carefully against the abuse of that power by withholding from Congress and from the Army itself the authority to appoint the chief commander of a force so potent for good or for evil to the State. The Constitution provides that "the President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and of the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States." And why is this? Surely not because the President is supposed to be or commonly is in fact a military man, a man skilled in the art of war and qualified to marshal a host in the field of battle. No it is for quite a different reason; it is that whatever skillful soldier may lead our armies to victory against a foreign foe or may quell a domestic insurrection; however high he may raise his professional renown and whatever martial glory he may win still he is subject to the orders of the civil magistrate, and he and his army are always "subordinate to the civil power."

And hence it follows that whenever the President (the civil magistrate) in the discharge of his constitutional duty to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed" has occasion to use the army to aid him in the performance of that duty he does not thereby lose his civil character and become a soldier subject to military law and liable to be tried by a court-martial any more than does a civil court lose its legal and pacific nature and become military and belligerent by calling out the power of the country to enforce its decrees. The civil magistrates whether judicial or executive must of necessity employ physical power to aid them in enforcing the laws whenever they have to deal with disobedient and refractory subjects; and their legal power and right to do so is unquestionable. The right of the courts to call out the whole power of the country to enforce their judgments is as old as the common law; and the right of the President to use force in the performance of his legal duties is not only inherent in his office but has been frequently recognized and aided by Congress. One striking example of this is the act of Congress of March 3, 1807 (2 Stat., 445), which empowered the President without the intervention of any court to use the marshal, and if he be insufficient to use the Army summarily to expel intruders and squatters upon the public lands. And that power has been frequently exercised without as far as I know a question of its legality. To call as is sometimes done the judiciary the civil power and the President the military power, seems to me at once a mistake of fact and an abuse of language.

While the judiciary and the President as departments of the General Government are co-ordinate, equal in dignity and power and equally trusted by the law in their respective spheres, there is nevertheless a marked diversity in the character of their functions and their modes of action. The judiciary is for the most part passive. It rarely if ever takes the initiative; it seldom or never begins an operation. Its great function is judgment, and in the exercise of that function it is confined almost exclusively to cases not selected by itself but made and submitted by others. The President on the contrary by the very nature of his office is active; he must often take the initiative; he must begin operations. His great function is execution for he is required by the Constitution (and he is the only department that is so required) to "take care that the laws (all the laws) be faithfully executed;" and in the exercise of that function his duties are coextensive with the laws of the land.

Often he comes to the aid of the judiciary in the execution of its judgments; and this is only a part and a small part of his constitutional duty, to take care that the laws be faithfully executed. I say it is a small part of his duty because for every instance in which the President executes the judgment of a court there are a hundred instances in which he executes the law without the intervention of the judiciary and without referring at all to its functions.

I have premised this much in order to show the separate and independent character of the several departments of our Government and to indicate the inevitable differences in their modes of action and the characteristic diversity of the subjects upon which they operate; and all this as a foundation for the answers which I will now proceed to give to the particular questions propounded to me.

As to the first question: I am clearly of opinion that, in a time like the present when the very existence of the nation is assailed by a great and dangerous insurrection, the President has the lawful discretionary power to arrest and hold in custody persons known to have criminal intercourse with the insurgents or persons against whom there is probable cause for suspicion of such criminal complicity. And I think this position can be maintained in view of the principles already laid down by a very plain argument.

The Constitution requires the President before he enters upon the execution of his office to take an oath that he "will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States and will to the best of his ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."

The duties of the office comprehend all the executive power of the nation which is expressly vested in the President by the Constitution (art. 2, sec. 1) and also all the powers which are specially delegated to the President and yet are not in their nature executive powers. For example: the veto power; the treaty making power; the appointing power; the pardoning power. These belong to that class which in England are called prerogative powers, inherent in the crown. And yet the framers of our Constitution thought proper to preserve them and to vest them in the President as necessary to the good government of the country. The executive powers are granted generally and without specification; the powers not executive are granted specially and for purposes obvious in the context of the Constitution. And all these are embraced within the duties of the President and are clearly within that clause of his oath which requires him to "faithfully execute the office of President."

The last clause of the oath is peculiar to the President. All the other officers of Government are required to swear only "to support this Constitution," while the President must swear to "preserve, protect and defend" it, which implies the power to perform what he is required in so solemn a manner to undertake. And then follows the broad and compendious injunction to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed." And this injunction embracing as it does all the laws—Constitution, treaties, statutes—is addressed to the President alone and not to any other department or officer of the Government. And this constitutes him in a peculiar manner and above all other officers the guardian of the Constitution—its preserver, protector and defender.

It is the plain duty of the President (and his peculiar duty above and beyond all other departments of the Government) to preserve the Constitution and execute the laws all over the nation; and it is plainly impossible for him to perform this duty without putting down rebellion, insurrection and all unlawful combinations to resist the General Government. The duty to suppress the insurrection being obvious and imperative the two acts of Congress of 1795 and 1807 come to his aid and furnish the physical force which he needs to suppress the insurrection and execute the laws. These two acts authorize the President to employ for that purpose the militia, the Army and the Navy.

The argument may be briefly stated thus: It is the President's bounden duty to put down the insurrection as (in the language of the act of 1795) the "combinations are too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings or by the powers vested in the marshals." And this duty is imposed upon the President for the very reason that the courts and the marshals are too weak to perform it. The manner in which he shall perform that duty is not prescribed by any law but the means of performing it are given in the plain language of the statutes and they are all means of force—the militia, the Army and the Navy. The end, the suppression of the insurrection, is required of him; the means and instruments to suppress it are lawfully in his hands; but the manner in which he shall use them is not prescribed and could not be prescribed without a foreknowledge of all the future changes and contingencies of the insurrection. He is therefore necessarily thrown upon his discretion as to the manner in which he will use his means to meet the varying exigencies as they arise. If the insurgents assail the nation with an army he may find it best to meet them with an army and suppress the insurrection in the field of battle. If they seek to prolong the rebellion and gather strength by intercourse with foreign nations he may choose to guard the coasts and close the ports with a navy as one of the most efficient means to suppress the insurrection. And if they employ spies and emissaries to gather information, to forward secret supplies and to excite new insurrections in aid of the original rebellion he may find it both prudent and humane to arrest and imprison them. And this may be done either for the purpose of bringing them to trial and condign punishment for their crimes or they may be held in custody for the milder end of rendering them powerless for mischief until the exigency is past.

In such a state of things the President must of necessity be the sole judge both of the exigency which requires him to act and of the manner in which it is most prudent for him to employ the powers intrusted to him to enable him to discharge his constitutional and legal duty—that is, to suppress the insurrection and execute the laws. And this discretionary power of the President is fully admitted by the Supreme Court in the case of Martin v. Mott (12 Wheaton's Reports, 19; 7 Curtis, 10).

This is a great power in the hands of the Chief Magistrate; and because it is great and is capable of being perverted to evil ends its existence has been doubted or denied. It is said to be dangerous in the hands of an ambitious and wicked President because he may use it for the purposes of oppression and tyranny. Yes, certainly it is dangerous—all power is dangerous—and for the all-pervading reason that all power is liable to abuse; all the recipients of human power are men not absolutely virtuous and wise. Still it is a power necessary to the peace and safety of the country and undeniably belongs to the Government and therefore must be exercised by some department or officer thereof.

Why should this power be denied to the President on the ground of its liability to abuse and not denied to the other departments on the same grounds? Are they more exempt than he is from the frailties and vices of humanity? Or are they more trusted by the law than he is trusted in their several spheres of action? If it be said that a President may be ambitious and unscrupulous it may be said with equal truth that a legislature may be factious and unprincipled and a court may be venal and corrupt. But these are crimes never to be presumed even against a private man and much less against any high and highly trusted public functionary. They are crimes, however, recognized as such and made punishable by the Constitution, and whoever is guilty of them, whether a President, a Senator or a judge, is liable to impeachment and condemnation.

As to the second question:

Having assumed in answering the first question that the President has the legal discretionary power to arrest and imprison persons who are guilty of holding criminal intercourse with men engaged in a great and dangerous insurrection, or persons suspected with "probable cause" of such criminal complicity, it might seem unnecessary to go into any prolonged argument to prove that in such a case the President is fully justified in refusing to obey a writ of habeas corpus issued by a court or judge commanding him to produce the body of his prisoner, and state when he took him and by what authority and for what cause he detains him in custody, and then yield himself to judgment "to do, submit to and receive whatsoever the judge or court awarding the writ shall consider in that behalf."

If it be true as I have assumed that the President and the judiciary are co-ordinate departments of government, and the one not subordinate to the other, I do not understand how it can be legally possible for a judge to issue a command to the President to come before him ad subiiciendum—that is to submit implicitly to his judgment and in case of disobedience treat him as a criminal, in contempt of a superior authority and punish him as for a misdemeanor by fine and imprisonment. It is no answer to say as has sometimes been said that although the writ of habeas corpus cannot be issued and enforced against the President himself, yet that it can be against any of his subordinates for that abandons the principle assumed of giving relief in "all cases" of imprisonment by color of authority of the United States, and attempts to make an untenable distinction between the person of the President and his office and legal power. The law makes no such distinction for it is no respecter of persons. The President in the arrest and imprisonment of men must almost always act by subordinate agents, and yet the thing done is no less his act than if done by his own hand. But it is possible for the President to be in the actual custody of a prisoner taken in civil war or arrested on suspicion of being a secret agent and abettor of rebellion, and in that case the writ must be unavailing unless it run against the President himself. Besides, the whole subject-matter is political and not judicial. The insurrection itself is purely political. Its object is to destroy the political government of this nation and to establish another political government upon its ruins. And the President as the chief civil magistrate of the nation and the most active department of the Government is eminently and exclusively political in all his principal functions. As the political chief of the nation the Constitution charges him with its preservation, protection and defense, and requires him to take care that the laws be faithfully executed. And in that character and by the aid of the acts of Congress of 1795 and 1807 he wages open war against armed rebellion, and arrests and holds in custody those whom in the exercise of his political discretion he believes to be friends of and accomplices in the armed insurrection which it is his especial political duty to suppress. He has no judicial powers. And the judiciary department has no political powers and claims none, and therefore (as well as for other reasons already assigned) no court or judge can take cognizance of the political acts of the President or undertake to revise and reverse his political decisions.

The jurisdiction exercised under the writ of habeas corpus is in the nature of an appeal (4 C., 75) for as far as concerns the right of the prisoner the whole object of the process is to re-examine and reverse or affirm the acts of the person who imprisoned him. And I think it will hardly be seriously affirmed that a judge at chambers can entertain an appeal in any form from a decision of the President of the United States, and especially in a case purely political.

There is but one sentence in the Constitution which mentions the writ of habeas corpus (art. 1, sec. 9, clause 2), which is in these words: "The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it."

Very learned persons have differed widely about the meaning of this short sentence, and I am by no means confident that I fully understand it myself. The sententious language of the Constitution in this particular must I suppose be interpreted with reference to the origin of our people, their historical relations to the mother country and their inchoate political condition at the moment when our Constitution was formed. At that time the United States as a nation had no common law of its own, and no statutory provision for the writ of habeas corpus. Still the people, English by descent, even while in open rebellion against the English Crown claimed a sort of historical right to the forms of English law and the guarantees of English freedom. They knew that the English Government had more than once assumed the power to imprison whom it would, and hold them for an indefinite time beyond the reach of judicial examination; and they desired no doubt to interpose a guard against the like abuses in this country. And hence the clause of the Constitution now under consideration. But we must try to construe the words, vague and undeterminate as they are, as we find them. "The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended," &c. Does that mean that the writ itself shall not be issued, or that being issued the party shall derive no benefit from it? Suspended—does that mean delayed, hung up for a time or altogether denied? The writ of habeas corpus—which writ? In England there were many writs called by that name and used by the courts for the more convenient exercise of their various powers; and our own courts now by acts of Congress, the judiciary act of 1780, section 14, and the act of March 2, 1833, section 7, have I believe equivalent powers.

It has been decided by the Supreme Court and I doubt not correctly (see Bollman Swartwout's Case, 4 C., 93) that "for the meaning of the term habeas corpus resort must be had to the common law, but the power to award the writ by any of the courts of the United States must be given by written law." And the same high court (judging no doubt by the history of our people and the circumstances of the times) has also decided that the writ of habeas corpus mentioned in the Constitution is the great writ ad subjiciendum.

That writ, in its nature, action and objects is tersely and accurately described by Sir William Blackstone. I adopt his language as found in his Commentaries (book 3, p. 131):

But the great and efficacious writ in all manner of illegal confinement is that of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum, directed to the person detaining another and commanding him to produce the body of the prisoner, with the day and cause of his caption and detention, ad faciendum, subjiciendum, et recipiendum, to do, submit to and receive whatsoever the judge or court awarding such writ shall consider in that behalf. This is a high prerogative writ, and therefore by the common law, issuing out of the court of king's bench not only in term time but also during the vacation by a fiat from the chief justice or any other of the judges, and running into all parts of the king's dominions; for the King is at all times entitled to have an account why the liberty of any of his subjects is restrained, wherever that restraint may be inflicted.

Such is the writ of habeas corpus of which the Constitution declares that the privilege thereof shall not be suspended except when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it. But the Constitution is silent as to who may suspend it when the contingency happens. I am aware that it has been declared by the Supreme Court that—

If at any time the public safety should require the suspension of the powers vested by this act [meaning the judiciary act of 1789, section 14] in the courts of the United States, it is for the legislature to say so. That question depends upon political considerations, on which the legislature is to decide.

Upon this I remark only that the Constitution is older than the judiciary act, and yet it speaks of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus as a thing in existence; it is in general terms, and does not speak with particular reference to powers which might or might not be granted by a future act of Congress. Besides I take it for certain that in the common course of legislation Congress has power at any time to repeal the judiciary act of 1789 and the act of 1833 (which grants to the courts and to the judges the power to issue writs) without waiting for a rebellion or invasion and a consequent public necessity to justify under the Constitution the suspension of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus. The court does not speak of suspending the privilege of the writ, but of suspending the powers vested in the court by the act. The power to issue a writ can hardly be called a privilege, yet the right of an individual to invoke the protection of his government in that form may well be designated by that name. And I should infer with a good deal of confidence that the court meant to speak only of its own powers and not of the privilege of individuals but for the fact that the court ascribes the powers to suspend to the legislature upon political grounds. It says, "that question depends upon political considerations, on which the legislature is to decide." Now I had supposed that questions did not belong exclusively to the legislature because they depend upon political considerations, inasmuch as the President in his constitutional and official duties is quite as political as is the Congress, and has daily occasion in the common routine of affairs to determine questions upon political considerations alone.

If by the phrase "the suspension of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus" we must understand a repeal of all power to issue the writ, then I freely admit that none but Congress can do it. But if we are at liberty to understand the phrase to mean that in case of a great and dangerous rebellion like the present the public safety requires the arrest and confinement of persons implicated in that rebellion, I as freely declare the opinion that the President has lawful power to suspend the privilege of persons arrested under such circumstances; for he is especially charged by the Constitution with the "public safety," and he is the sole judge of the emergency which requires his prompt action.

This power in the President is no part of his ordinary duty in time of peace; it is temporary and exceptional, and was intended only to meet a pressing emergency when the judiciary is found to be too weak to insure the public safety; when (in the language of the act of Congress) there are "combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings or by the powers vested in the marshals." Then and not till then has he the lawful authority to call to his aid the military power of the nation and with that power perform his great legal and constitutional duty to suppress the insurrection. And shall it be said that when he has fought and captured the insurgent army and has seized their secret spies and emissaries he is bound to bring their bodies before any judge who may send him a writ of habeas corpus, "to do, submit to and receive whatsoever the said judge shall consider in that behalf?"

I deny that he is under any obligation to obey such a writ issued under such circumstances. And in making this denial I do but follow the highest judicial authority of the nation. In case of Luther v. Borden (commonly called the Rhode Island case), reported in 7 Howard, p. 1, the Supreme Court discussed several of the most important topics treated of in this opinion, and among them the power of the President alone to decide whether the exigency exists authorizing him to call out the militia under the act of 1795. The court affirmed the power of the President in that respect and denied the power of the court to examine and adjudge his proceedings. The opinion of the court, delivered by the learned Chief Justice Taney, declares that if the court had that power "then it would become the duty of the court (provided that it came to the conclusion that the President had decided incorrectly) to discharge those who were arrested or detained by the troops in the service of the United States or the Government which the President was endeavoring to maintain. If (says that learned court) the judicial power extends so far the guarantee contained in the Constitution of the United States (meaning of course protection against insurrection) is a guarantee of anarchy and not of order."

Whatever I have said about the suspension of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus has been said in deference to the opinions of others and not because I myself thought it necessary to treat of that subject at all in reference to the present posture of our national affairs. For not doubting the power of the President to capture and hold by force insurgents in open arms against the Government and to arrest and imprison their suspected accomplices I never thought of first suspending the writ of habeas corpus any more than I thought of first suspending the writ of replevin before seizing arms and munitions destined for the enemy.

The power to do these things is in the hand of the President, placed there by the Constitution and the statute law as a sacred trust to be used by him in his best discretion in the performance of his great first duty—to preserve, protect and defend the Constitution. And for any breach of that trust he is responsible before the high court of impeachment and before no other human tribunal.

The powers of the President falling within this general class have been several times considered by the judiciary and have I believe been uniformly sustained without materially varying from the doctrines laid down in this opinion. I content myself with a simple reference to the cases without encumbering this document already too long with copious extracts: The Rhode Island Case (7 Howard, p. 1), Fleming v. Page (9 Howard, p. 615), Cross v. Harrison (16 Howard, p. 189), The Santissima Trinidad (7 Wheaton, p. 305), Martin v. Mott (12 Wheaton, p. 29).

To my mind it is not very important whether we call a particular power exercised by the President a peace power or a war power for undoubtedly he is armed with both. He is the chief civil magistrate of the nation and being such and because he is such he is the constitutional Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and thus within the limits of the Constitution he rules in peace and commands in war and at this moment he is in the full exercise of all the functions belonging to both those characters. The civil administration is still going on in its peaceful course, and yet we are in the midst of war, a war in which the enemy is for the present dominant in many States and has his secret allies and accomplices scattered through many other States which are still loyal and true; a war all the more dangerous and more needing jealous vigilance and prompt action because it is an internecine and not an international war.

This, sir, is my opinion, the result of my best reflections upon the questions propounded by you. Such as it is it is submitted with all possible respect by your obedient servant,

EDWARD BATES,
Attorney-General.

Lieut. Gen. WINFIELD SCOTT, Washington.

GENERAL: I inclose a copy of a note* of the 11th instant addressed to this Department by Chauncey Smith from Morrisania, Westchester County, N. Y., alleging that correspondence between that place and Richmond, Va., is carried on through British consuls. As such an officer has no right to claim a privilege in behalf of couriers in his employment I would suggest that no such courier be allowed to pass the lines of the U. S. forces when coming from the South. The existing regulations will it is presumed be sufficient to check any such abuse from couriers who may be proceeding in the opposite direction.

GENERAL ORDERS, } WAR DEPT., ADJT. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 44. } Washington, July 13, 1861.

I. In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives the Secretary of War directs that officers report to this office the names and residences of all prisoners that may be hereafter taken and released upon their oath of allegiance to the United States. In like manner officers will report the names and residences of all prisoners who have been taken and released upon their oath of allegiance to the United States previous to this date.

By order:

L. THOMAS,
Adjutant-General.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, July 15, 1861.

Major-General BANKS, U. S. Army,
Commanding Department of Annapolis, Baltimore, Md.

SIR: The General-in-Chief directs me to say that Major-General McClellan by several recent victories has taken a large number of prisoners. He has been instructed to release the privates who will take an oath and the officers who will give a parole not to serve against the United States unless regularly released from their obligation. The officers, however, who are known or supposed to have recently resigned from the Army or Navy of the United States with the intention of entering the ranks of the rebels are to be sent prisoners to Fort McHenry.

* Not found.

After the arrival of these prisoners the general desires you to send them together with Marshal Kane and the police commissioners,* who are in arrest, and such political prisoners as may not be under indictment by the civil authority to Fort Lafayette, harbor of New York, in an armed steamer and under a sufficient guard. A permanent guard will be ordered to the fort in time to receive the prisoners.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE OHIO,
Huttonsville, Randolph County, Va., July 15, 1861.

OFFICER COMMANDING THE FORCES COMMANDED BY THE LATE
ROBERT S. GARNETT, Esq.,
Styling himself Brigadier-General, C. S. Army.

SIR: As the commander of this department I have protected the persons of all citizens of Western Virginia except those engaged in active hostilities against the United States, and when under a misapprehension of patriotic duty arrests have been made because of political opinions or sympathies I have promptly ordered releases. I have protected all private property by whomsoever owned. My proclamations and general orders on this subject have doubtless been brought to your knowledge.

I am informed that arrests have been made in Western Virginia of citizens loyal to the Government of the United States but not in arms for the support of it, and that such prisoners or some of them are within your control. I suggest to you the propriety of releasing all such persons, their detention being not only individual hardship but calculated to increase the troubles of this section of the country without contributing to any military result.

Among the prisoners now within your control and belonging to the class above mentioned my attention has been called specially to the following names: W. M. Smith, John Brooks, Quilby Osborn, J. L. Forton, Quillers Herron, and I beg leave to call your attention to those and all similar cases.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

GEO. B. McCLELLAN,
Major-General, U. S. Army, Commanding Department.

HDQRS. C. S. ARMY IN NORTHWESTERN VIRGINIA,
July 16, 1861.

Maj. Gen. GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN,
Commanding U. S. Forces.

SIR: Your letter of the 15th instant with its anomalous address has been received. In response I have simply to say that I am as yet wholly unapprised that a different policy in regard to the arrests of suspected persons or the protection of private property from the line you have so naturally proposed for yourself has been pursued by the chief of this division of the Confederate Army. Hence your suggestion as to the propriety of abandoning any other would seem to be uncalled for. Begging to remind you that any information you may receive as to the absence of sufficient grounds for the arrest and detention of the persons you name (or any others) may to say the least of it be quite as unreliable as the evidence upon which such persons are held I will conclude by saying to you that justice will be duly regarded by me in the treatment of all persons whatsoever.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

Brigadier-General, C. S. Army.

Lieut. Col. MARTIN BURKE, U. S. Army,
Fort Hamilton, N. Y.

SIR: The General-in-Chief directs that you assume command of Forts Hamilton and Lafayette, New York Harbor, taking quarters at the former place.

Orders have been given for the confinement of certain political prisoners and prisoners of war in Fort Lafayette, and a guard has been detailed for their custody, the officers of which will be quartered with the guard in the same fort. The general directs that you give orders to the following purpose:

First. That the prisoners be securely held and that they be allowed every privilege consistent with this end and be treated with all kindness.

Second. That a record be kept of the names, dates of confinement and release of the prisoners.

Third. That the prisoners be permitted to provide themselves with such comforts as they require.

Fourth. That an exact account be kept of the subsistence, &c., furnished the prisoners of war.

LONDON, July 5, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I feel it my duty to communicate a little information which I have obtained from a source entitled to credit touching the movements of a man called Holland now in London. This is the same man who escaped from America a short time since under strong suspicion which was probably well founded. It is stated that on his voyage he had papers which would have convicted him, but that they were saved by a woman who concealed them in her bosom and who carried them safely to their destination. I understand this to have been on the way out to America, from which he not long since returned. He is now engaged here in procuring and forwarding arms to the South. He professes to be able to get them in by the way of Texas. He also gives it out that he is fitting out a steamer for a privateer. This is probably the same vessel of which the consul, Mr. Morse, has had information.

But the material part of the information is that he keeps up his communications through Paris and a French house in the city of New York, a Mr. Amédee Simonée who transmits the letters from Richmond. He admitted that for a time he had been cut off but the thread was tied again. It is said that he affirms that much of what is done at Washington is known to the Confederates by the treachery of subordinates yet retained by Government. I receive this information in a way which makes concealment of the channel highly advisable.

Very truly, yours,

C. F. ADAMS.

SIR:

* * * * *

Immediately after being assigned to the command of the troops around Washington I organized a secret service force under Mr. E. J. Allen, a very experienced and efficient person. This force up to the time I was relieved from command was continually occupied in procuring from all possible sources information regarding the strength, positions and movements of the enemy. (Mr. Allan Pinkerton was the trustworthy and efficient chief of the secret service mentioned under the assumed name of E. J. Allen.)

All spies, "contrabands," deserters, refugees and many prisoners of war coming into our lines from the front were carefully examined, first by the outpost and division commanders, and then by my chief of staff and the provost-marshal-general. Their statements taken in writing, and in many cases under oath, from day to day for a long period previous to the evacuation of Manassas comprised a mass of evidence which by careful digests and collations enabled me to estimate with considerable accuracy the strength of the enemy before us.

In reply I have the honor to acquaint you that Her Majesty's Government does no more than justice to the Government of the United States in supposing that it could never sanction such practices and that if in any case it shall be made to appear that a British subject has been treated with undue harshness all proper reparation shall be made. HDQRS. DEPARTMENT OF NEW MEXICO,
Santa Fé, N. Mex., August 8, 1861.

The writ of habeas corpus has been suspended in order to enable every commander to guard against the treasonable designs of persons disloyal to the Government of the United States, particularly agents and spies, persons engaged in furnishing information to or in other treasonable correspondence with the enemy or in inciting insurrection or rebellion.

Care will be taken to guard against any abuse of this power by unauthorized arrests or by any annoyances to peaceable and well-disposed citizens, and except in the case of overt acts arrests will only be made by the superior commander of every district, post or body of troops in the service of the United States, and only upon probable cause of suspicion of being dangerous to the public safety.

When arrests are made the person arrested will immediately be examined and if there be no ground for suspicion will be released; if otherwise held in confinement until his case is disposed of by the proper authorities. If there be evidence of treason or misprision of treason he will be turned over to the civil courts for trial.

In the execution of these duties the troops will at all times unite with and assist the civil authorities in maintaining order throughout the country.

 G. H. BURNS, Supervisor:

You will receive instructions relating to the conduct of Government telegraphing and the restrictions upon other business from Hon. Thomas A. Scott, Assistant Secretary of War and general manager of military telegraphs.

You will not permit any telegram relating to late, present or contemplated movements of the Army or any part thereof to pass over the lines excepting official messages sent by military commanders. The former rule permitting such army information as appeared in the Washington papers to be telegraphed is rescinded.

You will require of every one in the employ of the company having access to messages to take the oath of allegiance and secrecy as per form furnished by Mr. Scott.

Great caution must be used in forwarding and receiving Government cipher and other messages. In all cases of the slightest doubt have the message repeated until its correctness is clear. If messages be sent in with illegible words return them for explanation.

You will not permit any one not directly and necessarily connected with the office to have access to messages or the operating room or its immediate vicinity unless duly authorized by the Government telegraph manager.

Any information you may obtain which appears of importance to Government is to be communicated directly to Mr. Scott.

NEW YORK, August 13, 1861.

Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR.

DEAR SIR: I beg to apprise you of a plot to get possession of Fort Lafayette in this harbor by a surprise in order to release the Baltimore prisoners confined there. A recent visit to the fort shows me that it can be easily accomplished by a few bold men. The gates of the fort are always open and entrance is easy to any one suddenly landing. Some of the guns on Fort Hamilton point to Lafayette, but there is not a man in the garrison of Hamilton who can work a gun. Nor are there any about there except some twenty-five men in Company G, of the Texas troops, who are encamped near the fort. Fort Hamilton is also open continually to stragglers, and you may hear that some of the guns have been tampered with, especially the brass pieces that stand outside the gate.

You do not know me and therefore may question my statements, but I beg you to send some agent to look at the position of matters at these forts, and I am sure you will conclude that they need attention. Fort Hamilton ought to be fully garrisoned by regulars and shut from idle stragglers, and Fort Lafayette should also be carefully guarded and no one permitted to land there or hold any communication with it. If you do not attend to this you will experience trouble and mortification I am confident.

Very respectfully,

A. G. WHITE.

COLUMBUS, August 14, 1861.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War:

We have several prisoners confined at Camp Chase charged with various crimes. I now send you inclosed a statement† of the accusations made against them by the different persons by whom they were arrested. I desire to be informed what shall be done with them.

Three of the prisoners are confined for the crimes of murder and rape. Shall they be delivered over to the civil authorities of the State in which the crime was committed, or to be tried here by court-martial?

Several of the prisoners are only accused of an expression of opinion in favor of the rebels without overt act of treason against the Government. What course is to be adopted as to prisoners of this class? Shall they be discharged on taking the oath to support the Constitution of United States or detained as prisoners of war?

Others are charged with overt acts of treason. What shall be done with this class of prisoners? Shall they be handed over to the Federal courts for trial for treason or for the present detained as prisoners of war?

I would be very glad if you would inform me of your conclusions as soon as possible as prisoners are accumulating very rapidly on our hands. You will please indicate at the bottom of the statement as to each prisoner what I shall do with him.

Respectfully, yours,

W. DENNISON,
Governor.

HEADQUARTERS DIVISION OF THE POTOMAC,
Washington, August 14, 1861.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War.

SIR: I respectfully invite your attention to the case of A. R. H. Ranson, styling himself a lieutenant of the Army of the Confederate States. This gentleman is one of the prisoners surrendered with the command of Colonel Pegram to the forces under my command just after the battle of Rich Mountain, Va., and subsequently released on parole. He was the adjutant of Colonel Pegram's regiment, and on account of the feeble state of the health of that officer was permitted by me to accompany him to Fort McHenry, to which place he was ordered pursuant to the instructions of the General-in-Chief. Mr. Ranson was directed to report to General Banks on his arrival in Baltimore, but the general having been removed from that station he has come to this city, where he now is.

Mr. Ranson's bearing and conduct since he became a prisoner to our arms have been of the most exemplary character, and if consistent with your views I shall be gratified to receive authority from you to permit him to return to his home in Virginia via Fort Monroe.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
GEO. B. McCLELLAN,
Major-General, Commanding.

[Indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, August 15, 1861.

Major-General McCLELLAN, Commanding:

The action of the rebels in regard to citizens of loyal States has been such as to prevent compliance with your request. Citizens that have passed the lines on missions of mercy have been thrown into prison and unwarrantably detained. Until some change is made by the rebels no privileges can be extended to citizens of Southern States.

Very respectfully,

SIMON CAMERON,
Secretary of War.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, August 16, 1861.

Major-General DIX, Fort McHenry, Baltimore:

Richard K. Meade, of Virginia, late minister to Brazil, is expected to arrive at Baltimore soon. Secure his papers, arrest and send him to Fort Lafayette.

SIR: * * * I have also to inform you, in relation to some letters from Mr. Howard, that the Department of State sees no objection to letters unsealed being received and dispatched by the prisoners, or to their purchasing such newspapers as may be for sale in New York City.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

[CIRCULAR.]

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
Clarksburg, W. Va., August 17, 1861.

Great looseness and irregularity prevails in the arrest and discharge of prisoners. Much care and discretion must be exercised in the arrest of persons merely suspected, and proofs obtained if possible; but when proofs exist, and particularly when taken with arms in hand or with evidence of intention or preparation to pursue other than a perfectly peaceable course no prisoner whatever will be released, but as soon as practicable he will be forwarded with a full statement of his case to these headquarters.

By command of Brigadier-General Rosecrans:

GEO. L. HARTSUFF,
*Assistant Adjutant-General.*MIDDLETOWN, *August 19, 1861.*Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

DEAR SIR: We wish to trouble you by asking one question, viz: Is Adams Express of New York City allowed to transport letters to any Southern State they choose? Such is the case, however, and they advertise boldly and make up a very respectable mail which does quite as well as our former U. S. mail. Considering the facility the enemy has for letter transportation it is not to be wondered at that they know our movements so well. We feel that this kind of work should be stopped. Not wishing to intrude upon your duties we ask that something may be done to suppress such a dangerous conveyance as regarding letters and other comforts which they receive by their hands, of which we think there is ample proof. While we are exerting ourselves to support the Government by every means we can they are allowed to transport the secession sentiments from our midst to any Southern State they see fit, and it is growing daily in and about our county villages. We look upon you as one who by experience can devise a remedy.

Truly, yours,

SAMUEL SMITH.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA,
*Baltimore, Md., August 19, 1861.*Maj. Gen. G. B. McCLELLAN, Commanding Division of the Potomac.

GENERAL: I have the honor to report that on Friday last, the 16th instant, the pickets of the First Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers between Annapolis and the Junction captured 2 wagons loaded with medicines and military goods, 3 horses and 2 men. A third man ran away and could not be overtaken. I directed the captured property to be taken to Annapolis with the two men and there detained. There were numerous letters in the carpet bag of one of the two men. The other is a negro. The letters were sent to me and I have examined them. They are either of a domestic or commercial nature indicating secessionist affinities in most cases but containing no valuable information. Under the President's proclamation of the 16th instant the property seized is forfeited to the United States there being no doubt that it was on its way to Virginia. One of the captured men, Albert Brummel, No. 351 Lexington street, Baltimore, whose written statement I have admits that they were on their way to the Potomac and that the property was to be taken to Pope's Creek (opposite Matthias Point) and thence sent across. He also admits that some of the purchases were made for a Mr. Ruskell who keeps a store in Richmond. I directed the boxes containing the property, seventeen in number, to be secured in the naval school, Annapolis. The vehicles are also forfeited by the President's proclamation and are secured in the same place. Will you advise me what to do with the men? I directed their detention to secure their testimony. I do not see that they have incurred any penalty though I have no copy of the act of February 28, 1795, to which the President's proclamation refers.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
 JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General, Commanding.

Assistant Adjutant-General, Headquarters of the Army.

COLONEL: Your letter of the 19th instant* is just received. We have no doubt the old city police are busy stirring up disaffection. I shall arrest any one of them who is so engaged if I can obtain the proof. We sent a special agent this morning to the lower counties of Maryland to track them if they are there and ascertain the true state of things. In this city they are closely watched. * * * I shall write to Major-General McClellan, now my immediate superior, to morrow in regard to the Eastern Shore of Maryland, which requires attention.

Before many days some place will be designated where prisoners of this description can be sent for safe-keeping until everything is settled. Col. MARTIN BURKE, U. S. Army.

SIR: It has been communicated to me to-day by a gentleman of high character and position (whose name I am not at liberty to give) that preparations are making to attempt the forcible rescue of the prisoners of state now under your charge at Fort Lafayette. This statement coming from the source that it does strongly impresses me with belief in its truth. I have therefore deemed it my duty to immediately communicate with you that you may if you deem it necessary strengthen yourself for any emergency.

U. S. Assistant Treasurer.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, August 31, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. CRANSTON, Mayor of Newport, R. I.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive your letter of the 26th instant relative to supposed disloyal persons in your city. In reply I have to state that your best course would be to communicate with the marshal of the United States for the district of Rhode Island in regard to any person who in your judgment should be arrested for the cause referred to and to request the marshal to address this Department upon the subject by telegraph or letter when proper directions will be issued to him.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Acting Secretary.

OFFICE OF THE SUPT. OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, August 31, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: In order to be able to perform the service you sometimes require of me it will be necessary in future to have the revenue department at this post instructed to allow my officers opportunity and some facilities for boarding the incoming ships, steamers especially, before the parties sought for have time to escape or to transfer papers, &c., intrusted to their charge. In two cases lately I have been refused any such aid. In one case I applied in person at the office of the surveyor (on 20th instant), the collector at the time being at Newport, and the surveyor also absent from town, Mr. Benedict, the deputy surveyor, acting. I made a request to allow two of my detectives to go on board of the revenue steamer in order that they might have the best opportunity to arrest a person expected on the steamer Edinburg due that day who was suspected of being an agent of the rebels. My request was declined. I specially urged it on the ground that the person for whom I was in search was a near relative to the boarding officer who had charge of the steamer, but without avail further than to refer me to this very boarding officer. Being anxious to secure the arrest of the person I then went to the steamer and made the request of Mr. Lowber, the boarding officer, which he declined unless ordered to comply by his superior officer; a very proper position for him to take. It became necessary for me then to have recourse to the quarantine department, at great inconvenience and loss of time, by which I was enabled to get my men on the ship but not until after the brother of the person for whom I was in search had been on board inquiring for his brother. He was not on that ship.

Another case has since occurred presenting points which I think should not be withheld from you. On the 23d instant I received a telegram from you of that date directing the arrest of Edward Daley, of South Carolina, expected to return shortly from Europe. On the 27th instant, by telegram from Sandy Hook, I learned that the steamer City of Washington was on her way up, and immediately dispatched two officers to board her and look for Daley. I did not direct them to apply to the revenue department, but as under the last administration no obstruction to our officers was offered they very naturally went to the Barge Office to obtain passage to the ship on the revenue steamer. The report of Mr. Eustace, a copy of which is inclosed, will show that they were so obstructed in their proceedings that Daley may have very easily evaded them by remaining on board the ship or by landing at Castle Garden with the second-class passengers. I have to request that my men may be furnished with suitable facilities for boarding incoming vessels, especially when they are in the discharge of duty imposed on them under orders from the executive department.

Very respectfully, yours, &c.,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

[Inclosure.]

NEW YORK, August 27, 1861.

JOHN A. KENNEDY, Esq., Superintendent of Police.

SIR: In obedience to your order, in company with Officer Tiemen, I proceeded with telegram from the Hon. W. H. Seward, Secretary of State, to arrest Edward Daley, a captain in the rebel army, who is expected here every day in some of the steamers from Europe. We took also a telegram to John A. Kennedy, superintendent of police, announcing to him the arrival of the steam-ship City of Washington. After making inquiry we learned that the steam-boat Birbeck, then in the service of the Government Barge Office, would be the first to take off passengers from the steamer City of Washington, then lying in the harbor. We went to the officer in charge of the Barge Office, showing our shield of office, and made known our business to him (Hawley) to get permission to go on the steam-boat Birbeck. The Government officer said he had orders to allow no person to go on board the steam-boat. I said in reply that it was a very strange order to prevent officers from going on board the boat with dispatches from Secretary of State and superintendent of police. The Government officer sent a messenger to the surveyor of the port, also the dispatches from the Secretary of State and superintendent of police, to know whether we would be permitted to go on board the Birbeck. The messenger returned with orders from the surveyor saying that we could not have permission to go on board the Birbeck, a boat then leaving to take the passengers off the City of Washington. We then waited until the steam-boat Birbeck returned the passengers, but said Daley was not among them.

Respectfully, yours,

JAS. EUSTACE.

FORT HAMILTON, New York Harbor, September 1, 1861.

Col. E. D. TOWNSEND,

Asst. Adjt. Gen., Hdqrs. of the Army, Washington City, D. C.:

When I received the assistant treasurer's note of which I requested Major Clitz to send you a copy yesterday I sent Lieutenant Lay, my officer of the day, over to Fort Lafayette to see Lieutenant Wood, the officer commanding Fort Lafayette, and to show him the papers and to send a copy to the captain of the cutter near by. (The captain of the cutter is a very clever officer.) Lieutenant Wood sent me back word that I would find the prisoners all there. I presume he meant in Turkish fashion that they would be there dead or alive, I know not. I think the answer will please General Scott. In connection with this matter I would recommend this officer, Lieutenant Wood, to be immediately promoted to the grade of captain. If I had the influence with the President I would make a major of him at once. Lieutenant Wood's conduct has been uniformly kind and consistent to the prisoners. But under no combination of circumstances will it be proper to relieve Lieutenant Wood from the command of Fort Lafayette, as in the large range of my acquaintance I do not know an officer as well fitted to perform the delicate and stern duties of that post as Lieutenant Wood.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

MARTIN BURKE,

Lieutenant-Colonel, U. S. Army, Commanding.

Hon. S. P. CHASE, Secretary of the Treasury.

SIR: Mr. John A. Kennedy, the superintendent of police at New York, who has instructions to arrest persons in the employment of insurgents who may arrive there, especially in the steamers from Europe, represents that the custom-house authorities have recently in several instances refused the necessary facilities for that purpose. As it is obviously impracticable for Mr. Kennedy efficiently to discharge that duty without the cordial co-operation of those authorities I will thank you to give such directions to the collector of the customs at New York as may tend for the future to obviate any similar cause of complaint on the part of Mr. Kennedy.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

SIR: This Department has occasion for the services of a discreet and active man at Detroit to detect and arrest disloyal persons, especially those who may be agents of the insurrectionary States. You are accordingly appointed for that purpose at a compensation of $50 a month. You will be particularly on the watch for such persons who may pass into or from Canada on their way to or from Europe. In case any well-founded suspicion should be entertained against any such person you will arrest him, secure his papers and give immediate notice by telegraph to this Department.

Lieutenant-General SCOTT,

General-in-Chief, U. S. Army, Washington, D. C.

GENERAL: Flag Officer Stringham wishes to deliver to me 678 prisoners of war. There is capacity in Fort Lafayette for about fifty prisoners. There are forty-eight there now. Lieutenant Wood says he can fit up the gun galleries and receive 100 more, but in doing so the fort so far as its armament is concerned will be perfectly defenseless, and I therefore strongly object to receiving any of the Minnesota prisoners. I would respectfully suggest that Fort Independence, Boston Harbor, be assigned to the prisoners.

The commodore is lying off the fort awaiting instructions. Please answer at once.

SIR: I inclose a copy of a letter addressed to me by the superintendent of police at New York and of the affidavits to which it refers relative to the Rev. M. M. Hallinan, represented to be a priest of the Roman Catholic Church. If the representations in these papers are correct, it is presumed that you will agree with me that the reverend gentleman merits at least admonition from his clerical superiors.

I remain, my dear sir, very truly, yours,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD,

[Inclosure.]

NEW YORK, *September 1, 1861.*Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Last night a man who at the time called himself J. Storer, of Dayton, Ohio, but who afterward proved to be Rev. M. M. Hallinan, now of Salem, Mass., but formerly was at the college at Georgetown, D. C., in some capacity, was arrested for endeavoring to induce a soldier in the U. S. service to go over to the enemy, as set forth in the accompanying affidavits.* He is a young man of about thirty years of age, Irish by birth, and has some reputation as a lecturer. At the time of his arrest he was very much under the influence of drink, and this morning presents the appearance of a man accustomed to such indulgence. On his person was found $1,119. A very large sum to be in the possession of a priest. But on taking possession of his baggage nothing was found to implicate him in any way whatever with the rebels, his papers consisting of skeleton sermons, lectures, poetic effusions and amatory letters. Of the latter there are quite a large number. On his person besides the money and a few unimportant papers was the inclosed letter* addressed W. L. Beaumont, Boston, Mass. Notwithstanding the strength of the affidavits I send I am inclined to regard him as inoffensive. He is undoubtedly very much debauched by intercourse with women and indulgence in drink. And his visit to Philadelphia seems to have been made in consequence of having received the Beaumont letter, which I have no doubt is another assumed name for himself. In his trunk I found a large number of newspaper clips; some are signed M. M. H., others Beaumont, others B. These are no doubt effusions of his own that he has collected. And I think in the crased signature I can trace the word Donna, one of his most devoted correspondents, whose letters and scraps he has saved to the number of over fifty. If I am right, this is a love threat, nothing more; but if not, it may in some way be connected with his conduct with Fabre yesterday. He arrived in this city on Tuesday, 27th instant, and took a room at the hotel in Fourth avenue; left that evening for Philadelphia, where he remained until 2 p. m. of Friday, when he returned on the same train with Fabre, and then went back to the same hotel. The postmark on the Beaumont letter is August 24, and he would seem to have obeyed the summons immediately. The Doctor Fitzgerald whom he involves with himself has command of a company in Col. F. Webster's regiment, and is now in the field. I think it well that Colonel Webster should be apprised of the suspicion resting on him by the act of this drunken priest. If the doctor is sound it will do no harm; if not he had better be on guard. Fabre tells me that the doctor was to join the enemy before he could be expected to get around to them, and this note was for use when he met him on the other side. I have to request that proper notice be taken of the conduct of the private, Fabre. He has managed the matter in a very adroit manner, and seems to have been influenced alone by a desire to detect and expose the business of seducing our men from their allegiance.

Respectfully, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

PROCLAMATION.

PADUCAH, September 6, 1861.

TO THE CITIZENS OF PADUCAH:

I have come among you not as an enemy, but as your friend and fellow-citizen; not to injure or annoy you, but to respect the rights and to defend and enforce the rights of all loyal citizens. An enemy in rebellion against our common Government has taken possession of and planted its guns upon the soil of Kentucky and fired upon our flag. Hickman and Columbus are in his hands. He is moving upon your city. I am here to defend you against this enemy and to assert and maintain the authority and sovereignty of your Government and mine. I have nothing to do with opinions. I shall deal only with armed rebellion and its aiders and abettors. You can pursue your usual avocations without fear or hindrance. The strong arm of the Government is here to protect its friends and to punish only its enemies. Whenever it is manifest that you are able to defend yourselves, to maintain the authority of your Government, and protect the rights of all its loyal citizens, I shall withdraw the forces under my command from your city.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed you will please find clipping from Circleville Watchman, an incendiary sheet published at Circleville, Pickaway County, Ohio. Such should not be tolerated in our midst, and know of no other lawful means to stop such sheets from circulating among us than by the War Department at Washington, D. C.

I remain, your obedient servant,

SAMUEL HILL,
Postmaster, Deer Creek, Pickaway County, Ohio.

[Inclosure—Editorial extract* from Circleville Watchman.]

The nameless boobies who write editorials for the Cincinnati Commercial are very profuse in the use of the word "tory." All who do not shout hosannas to Abe Lincoln and indorse his unconstitutional and unholy war upon the people of the South are denounced as tories. These contemptible jobbernowls who blather about tories do not know the definition of the word. Mr. Webster says it is an Irish word "the name given to an adherent to the ancient constitution of England and to the ecclesiastical hierarchy." In England the Tories formed a party in favor of a strong government of more arbitrary principles than were advocated by the party called Whig. In America during the revolution those who favored the claims of Great Britain and justified the Government in all its usurpations under the pretense of enforcing the laws, just as the abolitionists are doing now, were called tories. Those who refused to sustain a government which was administered by tyrants for the oppression of the people were called rebels. The word "tory" cannot be found in the Constitution or any of the statutes of the United States, and when applied to the men who oppose this damnable abolition war and the unconstitutional and outrageous acts of a would-be military despotism which have destroyed this Union it has just as much meaning and sense as we generally find in the fanatical cant of such blockheads and filthy blackguards as preside over the columns of the Cincinnati Commercial and other treasonable abolition sheets.

* There were other extracts inclosed, only one of which is printed as a fair sample of the tone of the whole.—COMPILER.

NEW YORK, September 9, 1861.

[Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.]

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: I received in due course your letter of the 3d instant together with a copy of the document from the superintendent of police in regard to Rev. Mr. Hallinan.

This is an unfortunate, fallen and degraded priest; an outcast in fact unrecognized by any authority of the Catholic Church. He fell into bad company, and bad as he is I think the man Fabre is still worse. Mr. Kennedy and his next adviser, Inspector Leonard, had been with me not more than half an hour before your communication was received.

The antecedents of Hallinan were proved to have been disreputable, but not at all in any connection with the complaint of Fabre. I told Mr. Kennedy that I thought he should be sent to the penitentiary for ninety-seven years and four months, but he said that you had signified to him that Hallinan might be discharged.

You suggest at the end of your letter that this man merits admonition from his clerical superiors. Alas, he has no clerical superiors in the Catholic Church. He is an outcast, and when he offends against the laws of the country, especially in this city, Mr. Kennedy is or ought to be his superior.

I remain, as ever, your obedient servant,

JOHN,
Archbishop of New York.

P. S.—Doctor Fitzgerald, captain of Company F, of Salem, should in my opinion be inquired into as the friend of Hallinan.

Archbishop.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War.

DEAR SIR: I have learned that a man was in this place yesterday, a member of a large mercantile firm in Louisville. His object here was to try and arrange with the merchants here to receive goods from their firm and forward them on to Tennessee by teams, they to receive a portion of the profits, the firm in Louisville to ship the goods to the merchants here as having been sold them for their trade here. This man said he had already sent on to the Southern Confederacy, smuggled, as he termed it, by shipping the goods down the river in the way here proposed, over $200,000 worth, and when it was suggested that the pay in Southern scrip was not good, he replied that they were so anxious to get the goods that they would pay in specie (gold and silver), and that he had had no other pay offered him. He also said the steamer John Gault that passed here the day before had on $30,000 worth of goods to be landed at Owensborough, and to be sent from there to merchants in Russellville, goods that their firm had shipped to merchants there ostensibly for their trade. I did not learn the name of the said Louisville firm, as it was communicated to me in such a way that I did not like to be inquisitive, but I can find out the name of the firm if desired. There is no question but that there is a large quantity of goods, provisions, &c., finding their way to the Confederate Army by being shipped down the Ohio from Louisville and Cincinnati. The company that has been enlisting here and in this vicinity for the Confederate Army (about 100) expect to leave here next Tuesday. Let my communication be confidential so far as exposing my name.

I hope you will forewarn all who may be guilty of such infamous practices for the severest punishment awaits such conduct.

September 11, 1861.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith for your inspection a copy of a letter received at the Dead-Letter Office which was written by Arnold Harris† at Richmond, Va., August 20, 1861, and addressed to Dr. Thomas Miller, of this city.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. N. ZEVELY,

Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

[Inclosure.]

RICHMOND, August 20, 1861.

Dr. THOMAS MILLER.

DEAR DOCTOR: I wrote you last week hoping it might reach you, but perhaps did not, and I having another chance will write another short one. We are still in jail and our case still undecided though looking a little better, but as long as the North continue to act as they do and talk as Thurlow Weed talks there is very little chance for prisoners here being released or put on parole. My health is not good. Doctor Garnett attends to me and perhaps may get me removed to more comfortable quarters.

I wrote you to see Mrs. Lewis and have my trunk packed and try to send it to me here by Adams Express. If it has not gone yet and the company cannot send it to me here let them send it to Captain Buford, Versailles, Ky., where my family are and where they will probably remain until times are more settled. At all events we do not expect to be in Washington until the war is over, which strange as you may think it will not be long. The Federals will be cleaned out of Missouri and Virginia in less than two weeks and the turn of Maryland comes next and will not be far behind. The South is in earnest and will conquer or die. They will conquer to a certainty. I wish when you see Mrs. Lewis you would say to her that if she sees that young sailor boy, my nephew, to tell him to resign his present place and if he can to come to me. I am going into business if my health will allow and can provide him a good place. Moreover I don't like the place or business he is in. I inclose you a check for $100, payable to your order. Please pay my bill at Kirkwood's and Mrs. Lewis' and also some to Kidwell and credit me with the balance. You may have had to pay in advance for my trunk.

If possible let me hear from you. Direct care of Bev. Tucker. Kind regards to all friends, particularly to the Kirkwoods, Mrs. Lewis and her two children. Tell them if they could only come and talk to me I would not be so lonesome; however, Mr. Magraw talks pretty well and we are quite comfortable.

Adams & Co. can forward letters. I heard yesterday from my family, the first since I have been here. They were all well or tolerably so. I wish Old Abe could hear some of his poor prisoners talk. I think the reason he don't ask for an exchange is that he is afraid to let them come back after the treatment they have received from the United States Government. Poor fellows! duped into a war they did not understand and left to pine away in prison. The day of retribution must come before long. If the Robespierre policy of Thurlow Weed is to prevail there are about 2,000 in this city, poor, innocent victims will stretch hemp instantly.

Yours, very truly,

ARNOLD HARRIS.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War.

SIR: In obedience to your order* I have stopped the sale, keeping for sale or circulation of that damnable secession sheet the New York Daily News in the State of Connecticut.

The order has been well obeyed with one exception. There is on the Naugatuck Railroad a newspaper traveling agent by the name of George A. Hubbell,† a noisy secessionist, in a spot where he is doing great mischief by his treasonable talk, and also by his disobedience of this wholesome order of our Government which has given so much satisfaction to our truly loyal men all over the State. He has violated the order and I have written evidence from respectable citizens that he has made his brags of it, and says he will repeat it in spite of me. I have no power or authority to arrest him by any law known to me, and still I have sent him word that I will do so if he persisted in his course. Now all I want is an order from yourself or Mr. Seward to arrest and take him to some of the forts in New York. Such an order would be put in force instantaneously, and would in my opinion do more good than any order that has yet been issued from the Government to be executed in this State, unless it was for the arrest of Ellis B. Schnabel‡ of your State, which I am most happy to add pleased everybody.

Will you please favor me with a telegraphic reply as soon as possible and grant this most proper request, and oblige many loyal citizens of Connecticut as well as your obedient servant,

DAVID H. CARR,
U. S. Marshal.

FORT CLARK, Hatteras Inlet, N. C., September 11, 1861.
Maj. Gen. JOHN E. WOOL,
Commanding Department of Virginia, Fort Monroe, Va.

SIR: I have the honor to report the reception of your favor of the 10th, the contents of which have been carefully noted; also the orders forwarded by Captain Taylor. For my answer, in part, I would refer you to my inclosed report of the 7th which should have been transmitted by the steamer George Peabody.

* Not found.

† See memoranda of Hubbell's arrest, p. 302.

I take great pleasure in announcing to you the continued strengthening of my belief in the loyalty of the citizens of this State who inhabit the counties bordering on the Pamlico Sound. The sincerity of the people who live upon the strip of land running from Hatteras Inlet to Oregon Inlet is not to be doubted; they have all taken the oath of allegiance, which you will perceive is a strong one, and have shown every disposition to assist me in every manner possible, such as furnishing me with supplies, giving information of the movements of the enemy, &c. I have sent three of the most intelligent of their number to the other side of the sound for the purpose of informing the inhabitants of the real intentions of the Federal Army and ascertaining what the real feeling is among the people.

My belief is that troops could be raised here for the purpose of suppressing rebellion in North Carolina upon the assurance that they would not be called on to go out of the State. I have been unable to secure any considerable amount of property plundered from the inhabitants. That which I have been able to get hold of has been returned. I presume that $5,000 will pay for all the property taken, and I would suggest that the Government make provision for paying it as soon as possible.

The people upon this strip of land have been peculiarly situated. Since the secession of this State their means of subsistence have been completely taken away from them, and now they are mostly without food or clothing, and in the winter, unless something can be done before, there will be great suffering among them. Cannot the Government send them flour, meat, cloth for clothing and some shoes? Each dollar spent in such acts of charity would bring scores of friends over the whole South.

I am, most faithfully, your obedient servant,

RUSH C. HAWKINS,

Colonel Ninth Regiment N. Y. Volunteers, Commanding Post.

[Inclosure.]

FORT CLARK, Hatteras Inlet, N. C., September 7, 1861.

Maj. Gen. JOHN E. WOOL,

Commanding Department of Virginia, Fort Monroe, Va.

SIR: * * * During the afternoon of the 30th a delegation on behalf of the citizens of this island waited upon me and placed in my hands a paper, a copy of which is herewith inclosed and marked A. In answer to this communication I requested that as many of the citizens as could should meet me the next day for the purpose of arranging terms by which they might be permitted to remain here. Agreeably to my request about thirty came to see me, and the terms contained in an oath, a copy of which is herewith inclosed and marked B, were agreed upon. On my part I have agreed verbally to give them all the necessary protection against the vigilance committees which infest all parts of the State and are organized for the purpose of suppressing Union sentiments and pressing men into the service of the Confederate Army and to afford them such other protection as may appear necessary. Two hundred and fifty have taken the oath and they are still coming in.

I am informed by some of these people that secret Union meetings have been held in several of the counties bordering on the Pamlico Sound, and that they would openly avow themselves true to the United States Government if they were sure that they would be protected against the violence of the secessionists. It is also thought that a Union convention would be called at once, and that these counties would vote themselves back into the Union and take up arms to defend themselves if necessary.

In view of the foregoing facts I would suggest that a force of at least 1,000 men be scattered through one or two of the counties which are supposed to be Union in their sentiment; that the people call their convention and vote and that the U. S. forces at hand afford them such protection as may be necessary. Could this be done now I have no doubt that one-third of the State of North Carolina would be back in the Union within two weeks.

I am over-anxious that these suggestions should be acted upon at once and that I may be allowed to continue in the work which I have commenced. These people who look to me for protection I have already taken a very deep interest in; I sympathize with them in their misfortunes and would do anything for them in my power. I fear that if I am superseded the promises I have made will not be carried out and that the measures I have commenced will fall to the ground.

I regret to be compelled to state to you that the conduct of the men and some of the officers of the Twentieth Regiment New York Volunteers has been that of vandals. They have plundered and destroyed. The first night they were on shore they visited one of the encampments which had been abandoned by the enemy. I am informed that this party was under the charge of three or four commissioned officers; that they first commenced breaking open trunks left behind by the officers and men who had abandoned the camp. After they had broken all the trunks and boxes open and partly destroyed what they did not want or could not carry away, they then set fire to the buildings and everything except a few tents was consumed. After this they went to Fort Clark where they had a repetition of the above. By these two transactions the United States has lost a large amount of valuable property, consisting of arms, cooking utensils, medical stores, &c.

The next day they commenced breaking open private houses and stores, and I saw party after party come in, some of them headed by commissioned officers, loaded down with the results of their plundering. This conduct continued until I was compelled to adopt the most severe and stringent measures.

Most faithfully, your obedient servant,

RUSH C. HAWKINS,

Colonel Ninth Regiment N. Y. Volunteers, Comdg. Fort Clark.

[Sub-inclosure A.]

COMMANDER OF FEDERAL FORCES AT HATTERAS INLET.

DEAR SIR: We, the citizens of Cape Hatteras, do ask of your honor that you will allow us to return to our homes and property and protect us in the same as natural citizens, as we have never taken up arms against your Government nor has it been our wish to do so. We did not help by our votes to get North Carolina out of the Union. Believing that your clemency will not allow you to treat us as rebels, who have always been loyal citizens, we do earnestly request for the sake of our women and children that you will comply with our wishes, as we seek protection from your honor.

Yours, very respectfully,

CITIZENS OF HATTERAS.

P. S.—Please let us know by the bearer what we can depend upon.

[Sub-inclosure B.]

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA, Hyde County:

We, the undersigned, do solemnly swear that we will true allegiance bear to the United States of North America; that we will not take up arms against said Government or hold any communication with its enemies or aid or comfort its enemies in any way whatever, and that we will give to the commandant of Fort Clark any information we may obtain or receive of the approach of the enemy; and in case we are called upon we will assist the commandant of said fort in his defense thereof against any and all the enemies of the said United States of North America, and we will always under any and all circumstances support the Constitution of the said United States.

[Sub-inclosure C.]

FORT CLARK, N. C., September 2, 1861.

Col. MAX WEBER.

DEAR COLONEL: I learn with great regret that your men and others under your command still continue to commit depredations against the property of the inhabitants of this island. It seems that they pass from the fort over which you have command to the land above by boats. This must and shall stop. These people are worthy, loyal citizens and have taken the oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and they ought to and shall be protected in their rights of property and person, and I shall in future use all the power under my control to see that they are protected. This passage by boats must cease from this date, and if it cannot be prevented by any other means I shall use my artillery against all the boats I may see pass. I have promised these people protection and intend to keep my promise good.

Yours, very truly,

RUSH C. HAWKINS,
Colonel, Commanding.

You will safely keep them on the route and will deliver the first four named to the commanding officer at Fort Lafayette, New York Harbor, and the remainder (twenty-six) to the commanding officer at Fort Columbus, New York Harbor. By order of Major-General Dix:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 12, 1861.

E. L. O. ADAMS, Esq., Portland, Me.

SIR: You are appointed a confidential agent of this Department at Portland. The chief object of the appointment is to prevent persons in the service of the insurgents or other disloyal persons from proceeding abroad or returning thence by the way of Portland. If any such should within your own knowledge be found there or should this Department by letter or by telegram apprise you of their being there you will cause them to be arrested and forthwith sent to Fort Lafayette, N. Y. Passports are herewith sent to you, which all persons are required to be provided with who embark in the steamers for Europe. As loyal persons may reach Portland for that purpose without a knowledge of the requirement you are herewith furnished with passports in blank with which you may provide them pursuant to the following regulations. In addition to the instructions contained in the two circulars herewith* your attention is called to following points:

Passports can only be issued to citizens of the United States, the proper evidence necessary to obtain which will be found described in Circular No. 1. The mere declaration of intention to become a citizen is not evidence of citizenship, and therefore the preliminary papers issued by the courts which are frequently produced as such evidence will not entitle persons to passports. In the case of persons applying for passports who are natives of or have lived any time in either of the States at present in insurrection against the Government you will be very particular in your inquiries as to their loyalty and insist upon their taking the oath of allegiance which is required in all cases. You will be required to keep an index of the passports issued by you containing the number, date and name of the party to whom issued, and you will also keep the letters and other documents accompanying all applications, numbering and dating them to correspond with the index, and in cases where the applicant may be a naturalized citizen it will be necessary to note on the application the place where and the court in which his certificate of naturalization may have been obtained together with the date of the same. These documents are to be preserved for future reference. You will be pleased to transmit to the Department monthly returns of the passports issued, embracing number, name and date. Circular No. 2 will furnish you with full information in regard to the recent regulations on the subject of passports and a careful observance of both circulars will be expected. Your compensation will be at the rate of $60 per month. Ten blank passports are sent herewith and you will be supplied hereafter as you desire.

I am, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

* Omitted.

WASHINGTON, D. C., *September 12, 1861.*Hon. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War.

SIR: Immediately after the arrest of my brother, on consultation with some of his friends I employed a man named Benjamin Egglestone, of this city, to carry a letter to Richmond. I selected this man because I had known him for many years, and because he was acquainted with many persons in Richmond who had gone from Baltimore, and because of his sympathy with the South, and was active and shrewd. I took care as far as possible that my commission should be the sole purpose of his trip. I furnished him with money to pay expenses and gave him a letter to my brother from his wife. He left here in the stage, crossed the Potomac and made his way to Richmond partly on foot. The Star of the same date published his departure with the remark that he was a noted secessionist. After visiting Richmond and delivering the letter with verbal messages from myself he returned to Baltimore, making forty miles of the journey on foot. His friends here and in Baltimore, knowing of the publication in the Star and fearful of his arrest if he returned here, advised him to remain in Baltimore. While I was about to apply to you for a pass to enable him to return to his family here he was arrested and has been confined in Fort McHenry for the last ten days. That he has been guilty of any disloyal act or any indiscretion in Baltimore since his return there I am not aware, but believe that his arrest was solely on account of his visit to Richmond. Under these circumstances I would most respectfully ask you to inclose to me an order to the commander at Fort McHenry to release the said Benjamin Egglestone, with a pass to return to his family in this city.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

SAML. M. MAGRAW.

[From to-day's paper.]

The following are the names of the most prominent secession members of Congress, some of whom are now roaming about the country "giving aid and comfort to the enemy" in various ways:

Hon. Benjamin Wood, of New York, editor of a secession newspaper.

Hon. H. C. Burnett, of Kentucky, making secession stump speeches.

Hon. John B. Clark, of Missouri, expelled from the House of Representatives, now in the rebel army.

Hon. C. L. Vallandigham, of Ohio, delivering secession stump speeches and writing secession letters.

Hon. John W. Reid, of Missouri, raising a regiment to join the rebel forces.

Hon. John C. Breckinridge, of Kentucky, getting up disunion barbecues, and trying to strengthen the backbone of secessionists.

Hon. Henry May, of Maryland, doing his best to keep out of Fort Lafayette, where a number of his "fellow-citizens" are now taking an airing.

Hon. Jesse D. Bright, of Indiana, missing since the discovery and publication of a letter to Jeff. Davis.

Hon. James A. Bayard, of Delaware, Hon. Trusten Polk, of Missouri, and a half dozen members of the House of Representatives, are now remaining comparatively quiet in view of the necessity which the Government has recently adopted of encouraging emigration to a certain fort in New York Harbor.

HONORED SIR: Let me beg of you to have these men arrested; it will do everything for us in stopping secession at the North.

OFFICE OF THE SUPT. OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, September 15, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Charles W. Adams, of the firm of Adams, Jordan & Co., Galveston, Tex., and also of a firm in Boston, arrived per Africa on Thursday night last from Liverpool (where he had been to dispose of a cargo of cotton carried over on the ship Aaron L. Reid, of New York, from his house in Galveston) under British colors. I understand the value of the cargo is at least $200,000, and the presumption is that he has brought the avails with him in some shape. With the knowledge of these facts I sent one of my men to Boston last night, Adams having gone thither immediately after arrival here, to notify the U. S. marshal.

Since his departure I have learned further that there is no doubt of his complicity in the treason of Texas. He was at Galveston attending to the loading the above ship when the three steamers, Gen. Rusk, Matagorda and Orizaba, were seized by the rebels there. The two latter steamers were released under an engagement with the owner of the three (Charles Morgan) that they should run between Galveston and New Orleans. The Orizaba left with freight and passengers; among them was this Charles W. Adams. After getting to sea the captain found his private instructions from Mr. Morgan were to run the steamer to New York instead of New Orleans. He consulted his mate and one or two passengers, who approved of a plan to land the passengers at Key West and proceed to New York with such as preferred to stay by the ship. But his plan was thwarted through the connivance of the mate and the overpowering force of the passengers headed by Mr. Adams. The steamer was therefore through his effort run into Berwick Bay; she was afterward taken possession of by the rebels and is still held by them. These facts are furnished me by a refugee from Texas who was on board the Orizaba at the time and who favored running to New York.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

FORT LAFAYETTE, September 15, 1861.

Lieut. Col. M. BURKE,

Commanding Forts Hamilton and Lafayette.

COLONEL: In obedience to the instructions received from you I beg leave to submit the following report in regard to the capacity of this post for the confinement of prisoners: I have at this time in my custody 80, who are arranged as follows: Room No. 1, 25, confined as privateers; room No. 2, 8 prisoners of war and state; room No. 3, 8 prisoners of war and state; room No. 4, 9 prisoners of war and state (1 more by desire of prisoners); room No. 5, 28 prisoners of war and state (this room is 25 by 60 and in the lower battery); guard house, 2 privateers; total, 80. In a day or two I will have another large room ready which will accommodate 50 prisoners. It will be 25 by 95 feet. In room No.

1 the privateersmen, 25 in number, are confined, which is a much larger number than is compatible with comfort, but they being a class so different from the other prisoners I cannot associate them. I therefore respectfully beg leave to ask you to make application for their removal to some place more suitable for their confinement. I would also respectfully beg leave to ask you to make application for the removal of Capt. J. A. de Lagnel to Governor's Island or some other place where space is not so limited, as he has not entirely recovered his strength and requires more exercise than he can possibly get here. There are four guns neutralized in the room where I have twenty-eight prisoners. They are in the lower battery and on the south side. I inclose a rough sketch* of the interior of the room which will give you an idea of its arrangement. When the other large room spoken of heretofore is used there will be six more guns neutralized in the west side lower battery.

I am, colonel, with respect, your obedient servant,

CHAS. O. WOOD,

Second Lieutenant, Ninth Infantry, Commanding Post.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 24th instant has been received. In reply I have to inform you that no disloyal clergyman can be allowed to hold communication with any of the prisoners at Fort Lafayette. If, however, a clergyman of well-known loyalty should apply for leave to visit any particular prisoners for spiritual purposes only leave for that purpose will be granted.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

FORT LAFAYETTE, September 13, 1861.

EDWARD M. ARCHIBALD, Esq.,

Her Britannic Majesty's Consul, New York.

DEAR SIR: It is my misfortune to be a prisoner* here under circumstances most trying, which makes me feel keenly for others in a worse condition which induces me now to address you. There are in this garrison (in irons) some wrecked British sailors. One of them, an old man from Manchester, England, was picked up at sea on the coast of Florida after being seven days on a raft. He is one of the crew of the British bark Sir Walter Raleigh, Rae, master, wrecked there, and I believe reported upon. The other three are part of the crew of the British bark Prima Donna. It appears those seamen came together at one W. A. Johnston's, at Miami, Fla., and remained there until the 30th ultimo when a small vessel reached that place, and said Johnston shipped them off in her as a means of getting clear of them as they had no funds. It turns out the small fishing vessel they took passage in from Miami proved to be bound to Charleston, S. C. Before the small craft reached there she was taken by the U. S. fleet on the coast and all on board have found their way here and are confined as pirates. I think if an investigation into their case was made you would find them not subject to the treatment they are now undergoing. I therefore on their behalf bring the matter before you to take such action in the premises as you may see proper. I do this merely as an act of humanity. I did myself the honor of addressing you on the 16th ultimo, which I presume did not reach you. I would gladly have said a word to you when you visited this post, but it was not my privilege.

I remain, dear sir, yours, very respectfully,

ROBT. MURE,
Of Charleston, S. C.

P. S.—I used the word shipped. They were not shipped but only got a free passage. The crew of the craft are also here.

SIR: Your letter of the 14th instant requesting a passport for the Reverend Mr. Mercer and others to proceed to New Orleans has been received. You cannot doubt my disposition to comply with any reasonable request of yours, but a rule has for some time past been in force pursuant to which such requests are invariably refused. It must be allowed, however, that if any exceptions were allowable the case of the Reverend Mr. Mercer would afford strong grounds therefor.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, COLLECTOR'S OFFICE,
New York, September 18, 1861.

Hon. S. P. CHASE.

SIR: Mansfield Lovell, a native of Washington, D. C., aged about forty, formerly a captain U. S. artillery, resigned and joined General Quitman in his filibustering expedition against Cuba, was acting street commissioner of this city until Friday last (13th instant); recently left this city and has gone probably by way of Canada to the rebels. He is an accomplished military man and would be of great service to the rebels. Mr. Gustavus W. Smith, the street commissioner, who was of the U. S. Engineer Corps, left the Army at the same time and for the same purpose as Lovell; is a first cousin of John C. Breckinridge and a warm friend and co-operator of his; left the city some months ago on account of his health and is still absent. Both Smith and Lovell are strong sympathizers with the rebels, and it is presumed are aiding them in all practicable ways.

I get the above from Colonel Craven, the chief engineer and president of the Croton Aqueduct Board, who thinks that Breckinridge ought to be arrested at once. He, Colonel C., was last fall a Breckinridge man, but was then, is now and always was and always will be an unpromising Union man and friend to the Government. He is a Southern man by birth, and has relatives in the rebel army. He has also two brothers in the U. S. Navy, one in command of the flotilla in the Potomac, and the other commands the Crusader. Colonel C.'s opinions are entitled to great respect on account of his character and his knowledge of certain men.

By the way he informs me that Mark Mount, the keeper of Conover Beacon in Raritan Bay has received intimation of a removal. If there are no objections to his official conduct there are political and prudential reasons for his retention.

I am, truly, yours,

HIRAM BARNEY.

WASHINGTON, September 19, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

HONORED SIR: I was in Alexandria last Saturday, and while there I learned that there was a secret organization of secessionists in that town—for what purpose we have only to imagine. I could not ascertain anything more about it but that it had its meetings under name of Red Rose Club. The above information I obtained from a friend who stands as I do; his property as well as mine (according to act of Virginia) stands confiscated, and could it be possible for our enemy to succeed we are ruined.

I also found out something about the manner that information is constantly going out from us to the Confederates and some of the persons concerned in it, besides several other things I thought important, and upon my return home to Washington I went in search of a person I knew to be a detective, related the above and told him I desired to manage this thing myself, believing I could bring it all to light better than a stranger could possibly, as I had lived among those people for many years; but as I was deprived of my property now I was not able to bear the expenses and pay a quarter dollar each way in the boats (small as it may appear). I have a large family of eight children. This gentleman carried me to a Mr. Allen, who said he could not authorize me to go into it as he had no money, but referred me and advised me to go to Mr. Scott, Assistant Secretary. I accordingly did go, but Mr. Scott told me the whole matter was in your hands. I have been at your office two days in succession, and not being able to see you I concluded to lay it before you in this way and if you consider it worth your attention I will obey a message from you at any moment. I reside on Fourth street east between F and G south.

There is yet another matter which ought in my opinion to come to the knowledge of your honor, that is concerning the vessel detained at Georgetown some week or so ago, destined for Alexandria. I felt every desire to come forward at the time I saw the publication of the seizure, but really on two occasions before when I gave information I thought it was so unwelcomely received that I became discouraged for a time.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. D. COLLINGSWORTH.

P. S.—Should any reference be required for myself see letter from Mr. Wallach, now at provost marshal's office (which I had to obtain before I could get a pass), and also letter from Senator Carlile with my other papers, now in the office of Commissioner of Public Buildings.

HARLEM, N. Y., September 21, 1861.

Hon. ABRAHAM LINCOLN,

President of the United States of America.

DEAR SIR: Yesterday, September 20, at 10 a. m., my brother, by occupation a news agent on the Naugatuck Railroad cars, was arrested by U. S. Marshal [David H.] Carr, of New Haven, at the Bridgeport Railway station, and is now incarcerated in Fort Lafayette. The ostensible cause of this arrest was the charge of having sold copies of the New York Daily News, and if I am rightly informed using disrespectful language toward the Government.

The prisoner is a brother of mine, but this shall not prevent me from stating the facts of the case, though a thousand brothers were at stake. Briefly then he is a young man twenty-five years of age; has been a cripple from his youth with a spinal deformity, and is the sole help of his poor mother who is in the deepest sorrow. At intervals he has sold copies of the News aforesaid mainly at the instigation of William D. Bishop, esq., a Congressman, who is president of the railway over which he runs, not wishing to incur his displeasure, fearing the road might be let out to another party. Furthermore when arrested the publication of the Daily News had been stopped for six days. As to the language imputed to him it was said in the heat of passion to people who advised him to stop selling the News, because he regarded it as none of their business. He is a strong Union man, and has said he would spend his last cent to put this wicked rebellion down. About four months ago he said to me: "I did not vote for this administration, but if Lincoln runs in 1864 he will get my vote." He used imprudent language—language that in calmer moments he would not indorse, but yet used under the provocation already named, where people as he thought impertinently interfered with his business.

I am myself a member of the Twelfth Ward Republican Association; also a local preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Did time admit I would make my affidavit to the above before a magistrate. I supported you among other reasons for the soubriquet you bore of "Honest Old Abe," and cannot doubt that in the present instance you will interpose for the protection of a somewhat imprudent but yet warm-hearted boy. Would it be asking too much to request you to apprise me of your decision at your earliest convenience? My brother's name is George A. Hubbell.

I remain, faithfully, yours,

NATHAN HUBBELL.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 21, 1861.

Many intelligent and patriotic citizens have applied to me by memorial asking the attention of the Government to what they represent as treasonable matter contained in a letter bearing the date of Washington, August 10, published in the London Times, and they express their conviction that the statements made in that communication are untrue, and that it is the design of the writer to bring the credit and fame of this Government into disrepute in foreign countries. It has been the habit of the Government of the United States to take no notice of representations however obnoxious made by the press of foreign nations, or even of injurious utterances made by ministers or other agents of foreign powers in the ordinary transaction of their own affairs. The Government on the contrary has hitherto recognized as worthy of its observation only the language and the action of the executive organs of foreign states.

For myself I confess I have not read the publication complained of, and I am quite sure it has not arrested the attention of any other member of the administration, engrossed as we all necessarily are with urgent public duties and cares. However erroneous the facts or the inferences of the writer may be they nevertheless stand on his own individual authority, while the whole patriotic press of our country is free and is interested to refute them. The Government of the United States depends not upon the favor or good will of foreign writers or papers or even of foreign nations, but upon the just support of the American people. Its credit and its fame seem to me now more than ever heretofore safe in their keeping.

If it be assumed that the obnoxious paper may do harm here is it not a sufficient reply that probably not fifty copies of the London Times ever find their way to our shores? If it be said again that the obnoxious communication has been widely published in the United States it seems to me a sufficient rejoinder that the censure of a magnanimous Government in that case ought to fall on those of its own citizens who have reproduced the libel rather than on the foreigner who wrote it exclusively for remote publication.

Finally, interference with the press even in the case of an existing insurrection can be justified only on the ground of public danger. I do not see any such danger in the present case. Even if one foreigner does pervert our hospitality to shelter himself in writing injurious publications against us for a foreign press a hundred other foreigners, as intelligent, as virtuous, as respectable as he is, are daily enrolling themselves in the Army of the United States to defend and maintain the Union as the chief hope of humanity in all countries and for all ages. Could there be a better illustration of that great fundamental truth of our system, that error of opinion may safely be tolerated when reason is left free to combat it?

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

PROCLAMATION.

LOUISVILLE, KY., Saturday, September 21, 1861.

KENTUCKIANS:

Called by the legislature of this my native State I hereby assume command of this department. I come to enforce not to make laws, and God willing to protect your property and your lives. The enemies of the country have dared to invade our soil. Kentucky is in danger. She has vainly striven to keep peace with her neighbors. Our State is now invaded by those who professed to be her friends, but who now seek to conquer her. No true son of Kentucky can longer hesitate as to his duty to his State and country. The invaders must and God willing will be expelled.

The leader of the hostile forces who now approaches is, I regret to say, a Kentuckian, making war on Kentucky and Kentuckians. Let all past differences of opinion be overlooked. Every one who now rallies to the support of our Union and our State is a friend. Rally then, my countrymen, around the flag our fathers loved and which has shielded us so long. I call you to arms for self-defense and for the protection of all that is dear to freemen. Let us trust in God and do our duty as did our fathers.

ROBERT ANDERSON,
Brigadier-General, U. S. Army.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I have received information from my son, J. C. Palmer, jr., who was a passenger on the Africa on her last trip to Liverpool, that General Sinclair, Ex-Minister Williams (to Turkey) and four other secessionists, all of whom ran the blockade at Charleston and reached Halifax via Nassau, New Providence, were among the passengers on board the Africa. He states that their representations seemed to secure the sympathy and engage the attention of most of the passengers, who were foreigners, and that emboldened by the omen of listening ears and convinced hearers they openly avowed the object of their mission to be the purchase of ordnance and materials of war for the Confederate Army. I feel it a pleasure as well as a duty to give you the facts. If anything further of this nature comes to hand I will inform you.

Your obedient servant,

JOHN C. PALMER,
President.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

OFFICE SUPERINTENDENT OF METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, September 23, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I am confidentially informed that there is a lack of oversight kept on the prisoners confined at Fort Lafayette. Information has been received by the inmates there in advance of that received by the public here by several days of the intended transfer of the U. S. prisoners from Richmond to Castle Pinckney. It is not certain as to the medium of such correspondence, but a change of custodian might work a remedy. I do not intend to be understood as alluding to Colonel Burke. I believe him to be as strict as it is possible for a man to be and exercise any of the kindness that a humane man is prompted to do. But the lieutenant in charge of the fort has his family with him, and women are famous for sympathizing with those they regard oppressed in any way, and it may be that the ladies of his family (not the officer himself) furnish such aid as to make communication free between the inmates and their friends. Without making any direct charge against any person I would suggest that an officer without family be substituted for Lieutenant Wood as custodian of the prisoners.

There has been a want of care manifested at the time of discharging prisoners. They are allowed to go out unsearched; and although their signature to their oath has not had time to dry they do not in any case hesitate to violate the spirit of it by bearing out communications from the inmates of any character that may be delivered to them. A copy of the inclosed letter* of Ellis B. Schnabel was thus taken out by young Harold whom I suggested should be discharged. The copy I send you was delivered to me by one who was requested to have it published in the New York Day Book and a Hartford paper of the same stripe. I received it with the understanding that I could use as it might appear best to me. Not knowing whether you had received from Schnabel the original I send the copy to you instead of to the press.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

NEW YORK, September 23, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, &c.

DEAR SIR: There is confined at Fort Lafayette Capt. Robert Tansill, now or late of the U. S. Marine Corps and a native of Virginia. He married a daughter of Major Bender, formerly of the Army and now residing at Washington, and another daughter is the wife of Mr. Charles B. Fisk, an engineer, who is the uncle of Mrs. Stoughton. It was owing to this connection that I became acquainted with Captain Tansill when he was in New York several years since on duty. I was this morning informed by a person recently discharged from imprisonment at the fort that he had been requested by the captain to see me and ask me to call upon him there saying that I was the only one known to him in this city to whom he felt at liberty so to apply. I have not otherwise heard from him and do not know in what way I can be of the least service to him. He has I believe been absent from his family for more than two years past upon a cruise and may have reason to suppose an interview with me may be useful to him and I therefore feel bound to make an effort to see him, and with that view take this liberty of requesting from you permission to go to the fort for that purpose. I ought perhaps to write to the Secretary of War on the subject, but as I am no doubt quite unknown to him and as your knowledge of me is at least sufficient to impress you with the certainty that I am incapable of abusing the privilege I seek I address you.

* See case of Schnabel, post.

With the assurance that I am exceedingly sorry to trouble you at this time and that my excuse for so doing is that I write from motives of humanity and in the discharge of a duty I owe to a person held in imprisonment, I remain with great respect, very truly, &c.,

E. W. STOUGHTON.

MY LORD: In reply to the inquiries in your reminder of the 23d instant* I have to inform your lordship that General Dix's reply to my inquiries concerning Patrick Crohan and Dennis Kelly has not yet been received. I shall again call General Dix's attention to the matter to-day. Meantime Consul Archibald will be permitted to visit Dennis Kelly.

As to the case of the person named Walsh also mentioned in your lordship's memorandum I can only say that the fact that he was a British subject could not have been known to the military police who were engaged in suppressing the insurrectionary proceedings in which he was engaged, and that even if it had been I cannot regard his complaint as entitled to consideration when his associations with insurgents and their badges found on his person provoked the severities with which he was visited—severities no greater in his case than those with which the disloyal Americans with whom he had combined were treated and which neither in his nor in theirs were carried beyond the necessities of the occasion.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to your lordship the assurance of my high consideration.

DEAR SIR: I think it would be well for you to give notice to Mr. Joseph Scoville (not as coming from this Department but on your own

Very truly, yours,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

BOSTON, September 24, 1861.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington.

DEAR SIR: My information respecting Mr. Charles W. Adams is that he left Boston several months ago for Liverpool, England, where he had large business. He returned about ten days since by steamer arriving at New York. Two days after his arrival at his home in Roxbury he was informed that orders were out for his arrest for political reasons, in consequence of which he left for Canada where he now is.

As a resident of Texas for many years (some fifteen or twenty I am told) he has naturally acquired prejudices in favor of that State and her institutions, and I am informed has at the present time considerable property there. His home has been in the neighborhood of Boston for several years past. He married a lady from Bangor, Me., a few years ago. Previous to his departure from Europe he purchased a large and valuable tract of land in the town of West Roxbury with the intention of building a house to be his future home, and to my knowledge the work has been in progress for months past during his absence in England and continued up to last Saturday, the 21st instant. In consequence of being obliged to leave his home his business has been thrown into confusion; his notes are under protest, and the laborers upon his new place at West Roxbury are unpaid.

My impression is that if Mr. Adams has exposed himself to suspicion it has been caused by hasty and indiscreet remarks. I do not believe him disloyal. On the contrary I believe he will at all times support the laws which protect him, his family and his property. I do not, however, believe that he can take the oath of allegiance without jeopardizing his property in Texas. All his movements show his intention of becoming a citizen of West Roxbury, and I have no doubt that should the order for his arrest be withdrawn he will return to his home and confine himself strictly to his private affairs which as I before stated are suffering by his absence. The fact of his absenting himself should not be brought against him, as he doubtless is apprehensive that he may be subjected to long imprisonment before he could have a hearing. I learn from Mrs. Adams that Mr. Adams is now at Montreal.

I have some reason to think that bonds might be obtained from responsible parties here for his good conduct if on parole.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

JONATHAN AMORY,
Dispatch and Passport Agent.

SIR: Your letter of the 23d instant asking permission to visit Robert Tansill, a prisoner of war now confined at Fort Lafayette, has been received and as it has been found necessary to restrict such permissions I regret to say your request cannot with propriety be granted. There is no objection, however, to Mr. Tansill communicating directly with the Government if he desires to do so.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA,

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive your letter of the 24th instant* in relation to Patrick Crohan and Dennis Kelly claimed as British subjects. On the 19th instant you wrote to me suggesting the propriety of discharging Dennis Kimball, a prisoner at Fort Columbus, presumed to be a British subject. As there was no prisoner of that name there I knew that Dennis Kelly was the person alluded to, and desired Colonel Loomis, the commanding officer at that post, to discharge him. I have no doubt it has been done. Patrick Crohan is a person of no consequence and it would be well to discharge him. He was arrested with some twenty others, some of whom were known to be on their way to Virginia to join the Confederate Army. Some of the party may have been going to the southern counties of this State in quest of employment, but it was difficult to separate the two classes from each other. There are a few others whom I may recommend hereafter for a discharge on taking the oath of allegiance.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS DISTRICT OF SOUTHEAST MISSOURI,

Capt. C. MCKEEVER,
Asst. Adj. Gen., U. S. A., Western Dept., Saint Louis, Mo.

SIR: For the information of the general commanding the Western Department I have to report that reconnaissances which I have directed for the last two days show the enemy to have abandoned their position near Hunter's farm. * * * Yesterday a party of cavalry from Columbus came up to the neighborhood of Elliott's Mills and arrested a farmer there for the crime of loyalty to his country. To-day I directed in retaliation the arrest of two noted secessionists who were informed that they would be released on the safe return of the Union man sent to Columbus. The party making the arrest went into Blandville and brought from there also a Mr. Blake, who is charged with recruiting a company for the Southern Army. He will be sent to Saint Louis for trial.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,
U. S. GRANT,
Brigadier-General, Commanding.

GEORGETOWN, D. C., September 27, 1861.

His Excellency ABRAHAM LINCOLN,
President of the United States of America.

SIR: I beg to trespass upon your attention in behalf of my friend James A. Donnelly, a young man of irreproachable character who was arrested on the 22d of August last and who is yet in confinement at the corner of Thirteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue in Washington by order of the provost-marshal of the District of Columbia. At the suggestion of Col. T. M. Key (aide, &c., of General McClellan) who states that Mr. Donnelly's release* is dependent upon the decision of a higher authority than his own, I address you in this connection.

I had the honor to file with General Porter (provost-marshal) numerous letters from the leading men of this town in relation to the uniform high character of Mr. Donnelly, and which although hurriedly gathered I beg Your Excellency will possess yourself of and allow them due weight in the examination of this case. Mr. Donnelly's offense (if any) is one that can only be by inference and implication gathered from his own words, there having been no witness against him who could or did implicate him. He freely disclosed to Colonel Key (to whom it seems belongs this class of cases) the following state of facts which I submit to Your Excellency presents no offense meriting the severe punishment he is now undergoing, to wit: That on the 5th of July last he went to Richmond, Va., upon purely private business to receive the semi-annual interest payable the 1st July upon Virginia bonds owned by his sister now in Europe. This money could be obtained in no other manner or in any other place. That when he had completed this business he endeavored to return but was prevented from so doing by force, a pass in military parlance being demanded. He could obtain no pass in Richmond and was forced to repair to Manassas Junction to enlist the influence of Doctor Boyle (a former resident of Washington and acquaintance) in procuring the pass required. That he found Doctor Boyle, a major of the forces and provost-marshal at Manassas, and he after hearing Mr. Donnelly's statement and desire to return to his home in Georgetown furnished him with a pass which enabled him to leave the Confederate lines and return here where he arrived on the 15th of August, exactly one week before his arrest. To procure this pass which was obtained only after great difficulty and delay Mr. Donnelly was obliged to pledge his honor to disclose naught concerning the situation, numbers, &c., of the forces in Virginia, which promise he considers himself bound religiously to adhere to. Saving this rigid adherence to secrecy, which no honorable man could object to, he has done nothing directly or indirectly against the United States. I should be slow to believe that the Government contemplated by continuing his confinement the coercion of an individual into a breach of faith and honor, although if no more is alleged against Mr. Donnelly such a conclusion would follow logically and almost irresistibly.

Mr. Donnelly upon his examination by Colonel Key voluntarily proposed to make oath that he had not assisted what is called the Confederate forces in any manner either directly or indirectly, and further that he would not do so at any time but in all respects would demean himself as a law-abiding citizen of the United States. He expected and intended to remain here and pursue his honest and usual calling. He gave his immediate attention to his business and not five minutes previous to his arrest had purchased a cargo of wood from a vessel then at his wharf. He is in the wood and coal business. With all deference it appears to me that the proposed oath and the above facts are sufficient to entitle Mr. Donnelly to his release. Mr. Donnelly has a widowed mother and two sisters (one of them unmarried) and he is the only male member of the family to whom this mother and unmarried sister may or can look for protection and a sheltering arm.

These are all the facts in the case which I desired to bring to your attention and they are submitted to Your Excellency as presenting no case demanding the further continuance of Mr. Donnelly's imprisonment. On the contrary it is believed to afford a suitable and desirable opportunity for the exercise of that Executive clemency for his release the improvement of which by Your Excellency I earnestly invoke in his behalf if after an examination of the case you should arrive at the same conclusion. May I request an answer to this communication.

I have the honor to be Your Excellency's most obedient servant,
F. W. JONES.

SIR: From a private letter received yesterday by a near relative of mine in New York I suspect some new intrigues of the friends of the State prisoners are going on. The old game of the county[?] will be tried to be started but I shall be circumspect and wary. I think it would have a bad effect to change the commanding officer or to make any alteration at Fort Lafayette. Mr. Seward's and the General-in-Chief's orders to the letter and spirit can be carried out without any change. I consider Mr. Wood as regards Lafayette an institution, and I desire that the high authorities at Washington would let him have his wife there.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA,
Baltimore, Md., September 30, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Several weeks ago a party of twenty-four persons were captured near North Point, at the mouth of the lower harbor, on their way to a sloop which was to take them to the lower part of Maryland. It was ascertained to our satisfaction that some of them intended to join the Confederate Army, and we supposed that was the destination of all, but we were satisfied afterward that many of them were going to the lower counties in this State to get work. About the time they were captured orders were received from Lieutenant-General Scott to send our prisoners to New York, and twenty-two were accordingly sent there. Two have been released by your order, one of them (Dennis Kelly) having been claimed as a British subject. The whole transaction has been thoroughly investigated by the police, and it has resulted in the conviction that twelve of them ought to be discharged on taking the oath of allegiance. They are all laborers or mechanics and of no social importance. It is believed that their first purpose was to find employment in the lower part of this State; and even if there was a contingent design in case of failure of going to Virginia it is believed that they have been sufficiently punished.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. DIX,

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: I have received your official letter of the 28th instant in which you say that you have directed Colonel Loomis, the officer in command at Fort Columbus, to permit me to make a single visit in the presence of an officer to the prisoner George Armistead Appleton, and that fearing the precedent will lead to much annoyance if not abuse you have reluctantly granted the permission. I certainly will do nothing to annoy you, and I therefore hasten to remove your fears by saying that I shall not avail myself of the permission which you have so kindly granted. At the same time I ought to say that I should not have asked the permission from Mr. Cameron if I had not been told by Mr. Weed that he had been allowed to visit the prisoners in Fort Lafayette. I supposed that that precedent warranted my application.

Thanking you for your kindness and apologizing for the trouble I have given you, I am, as ever, very faithfully, yours,

U. S. MILITARY PRISON, THIRTEENTH STREET,
Washington, D. C., October 5, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: About five weeks ago Ward H. Lamson, marshal for the District of Columbia, accompanied by a squad of cavalry in the service of the United States, arrested me at my residence in Hagerstown, Md., and brought me immediately to this place where I have ever since been kept in close confinement. I have no official information of the cause of my arrest and detention here, but from what Marshal Lamson has said to friends of mine who have conversed with him on the subject I am led to believe it is owing to the course of a newspaper published under the title of the Hagerstown Mail. If I have permitted anything to appear in that paper inconsistent with my rights and duties as an American citizen I have done it under a mistaken conception of those rights and duties and not from a deliberate purpose to do wrong. If the tone of the paper has been disloyal I am willing to change it, as I have no wish to do anything inconsistent with my obligations to the Government of my country. I acknowledge that I owe allegiance to the Government of the United States as established by the Constitution and laws thereof, and this allegiance I am now satisfied is paramount to any allegiance I may owe to any State government. I recognize in His Excellency Abraham Lincoln the lawfully elected President of the United States, and I will not knowingly do any act calculated to deprive him of his just powers and authority as such. I ardently desire the perpetuation of the union of these States, and deeply regret that the disaffected portion of my countrymen did not seek redress for their alleged grievances in the manner prescribed by the Constitution. Born and reared in Pennsylvania, married in Virginia, and domiciled in Maryland where all my children have been born, all the tender feelings that cluster around my heart constrain me to hope that neither Mason and Dixon's line nor the Potomac River shall ever mark the boundary of my country.

I beg leave further to represent that I have pecuniary obligations which can only be met by the proceeds of my labor; that my pecuniary affairs are suffering from my absence from home, and that should my detention here be of long duration I shall be ruined in a pecuniary sense, and my creditors will be injured and my wife and two little children deprived of the comforts they have been accustomed to. I would also beg leave to state that my father, now about 82 years of age, and who served his country in the war of 1812, is affected with asthma and heart disease, and I am informed that his bodily infirmities have been greatly aggravated by mental anxiety on my account. I am informed on the authority of his physician that any one of his frequent attacks may prove fatal. I beg leave to add that I myself am suffering in health. Accustomed to an active life and to much exercise in the open air my close confinement operates injuriously upon me. I have been afflicted with boils for several weeks past, and at this time have a dreadfully sore hand and arm from that cause.

In conclusion I beg leave to express the hope that you will direct my immediate release. I have seen a copy of the oath administered to Mr. Gordon, of Maryland, who was formerly confined in the same room with me, and I am perfectly willing to take and subscribe the same and faithfully abide by it.

Respectfully, yours, &c.,

DANIEL DECKART.

SIR: * * * I have also transferred the privateers taken from on board the Dixie and York to the city prison. But the sailors confined at Fort Lafayette for running the blockade have refused to enlist in the U. S. service, and therefore are still confined. Yours, respectfully,

ROBERT MURRAY,
U. S. Marshal.

HEADQUARTERS SEVENTH BRIGADE,
Alexandria, Va., October 5, 1861.

General W. B. FRANKLIN,
Commanding Troops in Front of Alexandria.

GENERAL: Several Union men have recently been arrested by the enemy in the vicinity of Accotink. On Saturday last three worthy and inoffensive men were taken from their houses solely on account of their sympathy with the Government. I have to-day caused the arrest of two open and avowed secessionists residing in the same neighborhood.

I am confident that the retention of these men as prisoners for a few days will have a wholesome effect, and will tend to restore quiet in the vicinity of Accotink by convincing the enemy that the practice of capturing unarmed men is one which can be followed by both sides.

Mr. Nevitt (one of the men arrested) frankly admits that he is a secessionist; that he has sufficient influence with the enemy to secure the discharge of parties arrested by them; that he has been to Fairfax and secured the release of some of his Union friends. All this he freely admits. There is no doubt about his position. Mr. Lee occupies the same position. He admits that he is opposed to the Government; that his house is often visited by the enemy, and that some of his family are in the army. I think the position of both is sufficiently defined by themselves to justify the Government in retaining them as hostages for the good treatment of their neighbors and our friends who are now in the hands of the enemy. I have therefore placed them in the charge of the provost-marshal at Alexandria to be held until further orders.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. W. SLOCUM,
Brigadier-General of Volunteers.

[Indorsement.]

Respectfully forwarded to the commanding general for his information.

I recommend that these two men be sent to Washington for imprisonment until further orders. I have no doubt that through information given by them arrests of Union men in the vicinity of Acotink have been made.

W. B. FRANKLIN,
Brigadier-General, Commanding Division.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit to you a copy of a dispatch* from Her Majesty's consul at Boston, as well as a copy of a letter and an attested copy of an affidavit which accompanied it.

I beg to recommend to favorable consideration the request to which they refer that the master of the British schooner Revere, who is supposed to be detained at Fortress Monroe, may appear at Boston as a witness for the defense of the vessel before the prize court at that city.

I desire also to direct your attention to the unusual manner in which the master and crew of the Revere appears to have been treated, and especially to the fact of two of the crew having been kept (as it would seem very unnecessarily) in irons.

I request you to be so good as to return the attested copy of the affidavit to me.

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

SECRETARY OF STATE.

SIR: I was informed by the President of the United States some days since that he had referred to you the application of Mr. Isaac Miller, an employé of the Government at the arsenal in this city, against whom charges of disloyalty had been preferred and evidence taken before the committee, for restoration of his former place from which he had been removed on the report to the evidence in his case to the Secretary of War, with a request that he should be reinstated if on hearing his statement you should be satisfied that he was loyal.

The evidence before the committee disclose the facts that Mr. Miller had for more than forty years been the recipient of the bounty of the Government; that his only son is now in the rebel army in open arms against the Government; that his wife and daughter now living in this city are open and bold in their declarations of hostility to the Government, and that Miller himself expressed his gratification at the attack made upon the Massachusetts troops in Baltimore. I desire to be informed if any part of this testimony was transmitted to you by the President, or was before you when you examined the matter; and also if Mr. Miller has been restored to his former position by virtue of the instructions sent you by the President?

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JNO. F. POTTER,
Chairman of Committee of Investigation.

NEW YORK, October 7, 1861.

Hon. S. CAMERON:

One hundred and thirty-four prisoners in Fort Lafayette. All full.

MARTIN BURKE,
Lieutenant-Colonel, U. S. Army.

GENERAL ORDERS, } HDQRS. DEPT. OF THE CUMBERLAND,
 No. 5. } Louisville, Ky., October 7, 1861.

The commanding general learns with deep regret that arrests are being made in some parts of the State upon the slightest and most trivial grounds. He desires the civil authorities and orders the military not to make any arrests except where the parties are attempting to join the rebels or are engaged in giving aid or information to them, and in all cases the evidence must be such as will convict them before a court of justice. In some cases it is understood that the home guards have gone into adjoining counties and arrested and carried off parties who have been quietly remaining at home under the expectation that they would not be interfered with, provided that they did nothing in violation of the spirit of the proclamation bearing date of September 24, issued from these headquarters. Some instances are mentioned of persons having been arrested and taken out of the State.

This is all contrary to what the commanding general has declared to be his wish, and he trusts it will not be repeated.

It is believed that many of those who at one time sympathized with rebellion are desirous of returning to their allegiance and wish to remain quietly at home attending to their business. A conciliatory, fair course pursued toward such persons will join them to our cause; the reverse may force them into the ranks of our enemies.

The commanding general entreats and urges his fellow-citizens to discountenance and endeavor to put a stop to these ill-timed and unlawful arrests, and to aid him in keeping peace among ourselves.

By command of Brigadier-General Anderson:

OLIVER D. GREENE,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

SIR: As the prison seems to be crowded you will release the sailors (not privateers) on taking the oath of allegiance, if they desire it. If not exercise your discretion whether to do so without.

OFFICE OF THE U. S. ATTORNEY FOR THE DISTRICT OF NEW JERSEY,
Newark, October 8, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have to-day seized 107 patented machines for sharpening cotton gins, Burden's patent, said to be almost indispensable at the South. They were made by James T. Cochrane, of this city, and were just packed and ready to be sent away. I learn that he has been sending them West during the summer to be smuggled to Tennessee. A man named Wormell came here from the South in May to superintend the work and has been here ever since. Knowing that Cochrane had made these machines I cautioned him in May against sending any South. He promised not to do so but the proof is clear that he has. Is it best to take any proceedings against them?

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. Q. KEASBEY,
U. S. Attorney.

STAMFORD, CONN., October 8, 1861.

F. W. SEWARD, Esq.,
Assistant Secretary of State, Washington.

MY DEAR SIR: I think it my duty to inform you that in an accidental interview with a gentleman of my acquaintance, a resident of Cuba, I was informed that Mr. C. J. Helm, our former consul-general to Havana, was making preparations to return to Havana as an agent for the Confederate Government. His intimate connection with Mr. Breckinridge, and close friendship with G. W. Smith, now a major-general in the rebel army, added to his own well-known proclivities render such a thing highly probable, and as he might do us some hurt in Cuba from his former position there I respectfully suggest the propriety of preventing his departure from the country in any of the Havana steamers.

Very respectfully,

R. W. SHUFELDT.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of a letter this day sent to Flag Officer L. M. Goldsborough, commanding North Atlantic Blockading Squadron, with regard to flags of truce between Fort Monroe and Norfolk, Va.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 9, 1861.

Flag Officer L. M. GOLDSBOROUGH,
Commanding North Atlantic Blockading Squadron.

SIR: In consequence of the detriment to the public interests arising from the frequency of flags of truce passing between Fort Monroe and Norfolk it is hereby directed that hereafter all correspondence is to be confined to the prisoners at New York and other places, no one of whom is to be allowed to write oftener than once a month, and then the letter must not exceed six lines. All letters are to be open and to undergo the usual inspection. No flag of truce is hereafter to convey any person from Fort Monroe except by the special authority of the proper department at Washington.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

SIR: Pursuant to your dispatch of the 8th to Marshal Murray the following prisoners have been discharged and I herewith inclose their oaths of allegiance: Thomas Kelly, Charles Williams, Stephen Bennett, James B. Hoggard, William F. Capehart, Carthwright Thompson, John Murphy, Perry White and Isaac Swindle.

In consultation with Marshal Murray I have discharged the following foreigners: Edward Heinrichs, Erick Brundeen, John Johnson, George Parker, William Brown.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA,

Baltimore, Md., October 9, 1861.

Brig. Gen. HENRY H. LOCKWOOD,
Commanding at Cambridge, Md.

GENERAL: All the disunion companies in Queen Anne's County should be disarmed. I much prefer that you should do the work with your Delaware troops. Arms and prisoners should be sent here. I am trying to get a steamer to put at your disposal. If I do not succeed I must send you our tug at Annapolis. We can spare her two or three days in a week.

If you can get any legitimate authority, executive or military, in Delaware to direct the disbandment or disarming of companies in that State it should be done. In that case I think the arms had better be deposited at Fort Delaware. I have been urging the Government for two months to send a force into Accomac and Northampton Counties, Va., and break up the rebel camps there. General McClellan encouraged me to believe that it would be done and I trust it will not be delayed much longer.

I am, general, very respectfully, yours,

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General, Commanding.

CLEVELAND, COLUMBUS AND CINCINNATI R. R. COMPANY,
Cleveland, Ohio, October 9, 1861.

A. G. LAWRENCE, Esq.

DEAR SIR: Yours of September 15 came to hand just as I was leaving home. I placed it under a pile of letters lying on my desk for future examination that it might be out of sight, and having been absent much of the time since it entirely slipped my mind until yesterday; in overhauling my unanswered letters I discovered it. This is my excuse for not replying at an earlier date. In regard to the conversation of Mr. Henry Garrett, of Baltimore, to which I was an unwilling and exasperated listener, it was not as relating to what he had done or intended to do but was of a bombastic and boasting character; of the high tone and ability of the rebel officers and men; of the great deeds they had done and were to do; of the large number, wealth and character of the men Baltimore had furnished the Southern army; that they would soon have President Lincoln and his Cabinet, and much more of the same sort that I cannot now recollect. I looked upon it as the gossiping of a weak-headed man. That he would be an active traitor to the Government had he the ability I have but little doubt, but unless I much misjudge him he has not capacity to benefit the enemies or injure the friends of the Government. I hardly think if bagged he would be worth the ammunition used to bring him down.

Hoping that all the enemies of the country may be speedily subjugated, I am, truly, yours,

L. M. HUBBY.

Edward Heinrichs, a Prussian; Erick Brundeen, John Johnson, William Brown, Swedes, and George Parker, an Englishman, being foreigners and the first four entirely ignorant of our language I discharged without administering the oath of allegiance, and was obliged from their utter state of destitution to furnish them with sufficient funds to reach the city. * * *

Almond Rice, Angelica, N. Y., was a steam-boat man on the Mississippi; could not get away from New Orleans; was obliged to enlist in the rebel army, go to prison or starve; belonged to the so-called rebel Marine Corps; was sent to the Warrington Navy-Yard about the 1st of May; was part of the time in the navy-yard and part of the time on board the privateer Judith. When he first went to Pensacola Harbor thinks there were about 10,000 troops there. That number was after[ward] reduced to about 6,000, and they had about that many when he left. Thinks there were about four or seven guns left in Fort Macon; the rest were sent to Pensacola. There were four guns (42s and 32s) between the navy-yard and the bayou bridge toward Pensacola. Most of the machinery had been removed from the navy-yard, but the rebels were still casting shot and shell at the foundry. Had been a sailor on board of the sloop of war Albany; paid off in 1849 or 1850. There were three companies of marines (250), nearly all Northern men, and a Louisiana infantry regiment about 900 strong in the navy-yard; will go home when released if he can get there.

John Matthews, Madison, Ind., says he was a steam-boat man; joined the rebel forces at New Orleans; was out of money and could not get away; was put in the parish prison and kept there twenty days; was afterward impressed in rebel service; was sent to the Warrington navy-yard on the 21st of April; was attached to the marines and quartered in the navy-yard. The greater part of the marines are Northern men, and would take the first opportunity to get away; were very much dissatisfied. Thinks there were about 7,000 men under arms on the rebel side; will go home when released; does not know much about the strength or location of the batteries on the rebel side; was pretty constantly in the guard-boat.

Samuel Benham, Buffalo, N. Y., says he had been a man-of-war's man on board of the Savannah; was paid off about a year ago; was impressed in the rebel service at New Orleans; was attached to the Marine Corps and sent to Pensacola Harbor about the 1st of May, 1861. Was put on board schooner Judith and went out at night in the coast-guard boat. Thinks when he first went to Pensacola the rebels had about 15,000 men, but when he left thinks they had only 6,000 or 7,000; knows but little about the strength or location of the rebel batteries; will go home when released.

Daniel R. Smith, Allegheny, Pa., says he was a boatman on the Mississippi; was impressed in the rebel service, and was sent to the Warrington Navy-Yard with the marines about the 1st of May; was closely questioned by Colonel Brown at Fort Pickens, and his answers taken down in writing; gave Colonel Brown all the information he possessed.

B. F. Lidy, Lancaster, Pa., says he was a steam-boat man; was impressed into the rebel service at New Orleans; was sent with the rebel marines to Warrington Navy-Yard about the 26th of April last. Says the marines are mostly either Northern men or foreign born, and thinks all but about fifty would leave if they could get a good chance. Gives same information as the others; says the Lovell battery, near the light-house, has 10, 8, and 6 inch guns (three guns), all covered in with earth on timbers about six feet thick; will go home when released.

Ovid P. Reno, Beaver County, Pa., says he is a boatman; joined the rebel service at New Orleans; was impressed; was attached to the marines and sent to Warrington Navy-Yard. Gives same information as others.

John Harmon, Allegheny County, Pa., says he was in New Orleans; could not get work; enlisted to keep from starving, intending to desert so soon as he had a chance to get home; belonged to the marines; was sent with them to Pensacola; says the batteries between the navy-yard and Pensacola were washed away; knows nothing about the other batteries. There are a good many Northern men in the rebel marines, all of whom will take the first opportunity to get home.

Kelly and Booth absent.

The above men were all examined by me, and the above seems to be all the information they possess.

CAMBRIDGE, October 12, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD.

DEAR SIR: I have thought since I had the honor to see you on Tuesday last the hurried interview did not allow me to make myself understood. The memoranda handed you was taken from a letter written by a lady at Richmond to a friend in Maryland advising as to the best mode of getting a letter to their friends South, as also those here who sympathize with the rebellion to receive communications from the South. The parties connected with the letter alluded to are highly respectable, and as I told you I got the information in such way as to forbid the use of names. My design was to put you in the way of trapping the French consul at Richmond and the chancellor at Washington by getting some one to write as a secessionist, send the letter as instructed and keep a lookout for the reply.

There is foul play somewhere and a great deal of it. The loyal States and our Army and Navy are full of traitors; many of our office-holders are faithless to the Government, and unless things are closely looked after and the war carried forward with greater vigor we shall be whipped I fear. I have not been scared until recently; have never doubted the ability of the Government to sustain itself or the certainty of our success at last until recent events coming to my knowledge has forced a doubt. We still suffer in Maryland from the inefficiency of Major-General Wool.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, obediently,

THO. H. HICKS.

ITHACA, [N. Y.,] October 11, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State of the United States.

DEAR SIR: When the list of prisoners taken at Fort Hatteras was published in the New York papers I noticed the names of two of the three sons of a cousin of mine who settled many years ago at Washington, N. C. They are John W. and Ezra E. Cornell. My correspondence with them up to the 22d of April, 1861, shows them to be good Union men who were forced against their will to take up arms against the Union. (I had received no letter from them since the above date.)

I at once repaired to New York and laid a statement of the case before Colonel Loomis, with extracts from their correspondence, proving their loyalty of sentiment to the Union, &c. The colonel took my statement and promised to lay it before the general. He also permitted me to see the prisoners and supply them with such articles of clothing as their situation demanded. This was on the 6th of September, since which I have heard nothing from Colonel Loomis or the general. It is my desire to secure their liberation from prison if not inconsistent with the public interest, and not knowing who is the proper officer to apply to for that object I take the liberty to address you on the subject, and trust you will do me the favor to place this in the hands of the proper officer if I have misjudged in troubling you with it. If the Government should require bond or any kind of a guarantee that if released they will not be found in arms against the Union I will furnish that to the satisfaction of the Government. The following extracts from the letters referred to will show you their views of the contest the rebels are now waging against the Government. In letter dated Washington, N. C., April 7, 1861 [they say]:

Politics is something I have not made my study. Until very recently I have thought very little of it. I now see the object of the Southern politicians headed by William L. Yancey. We have some few in our State; for instance, our governor. He is a strong disunionist. He with some others are trying to keelhaul this State out of the Union after the people going over 30,000 against secession. This State has been giving 12,000 majority for the Democratic ticket until the convention question came up, then we elected two to one Union candidates by a majority of over 30,000, and voted down the convention. The secessionists have called a meeting to try and get the State out of the Union, but they will not get her out that way, for we are going to call one to counterbalance theirs to meet at the same time they do, and when they present their resolutions for the governor's signature ours will be offered at the same time so he dare not sign either. If he should sign the secession ordinance I think civil war will be inevitable, for the Union portion of our State will not submit to them. I still think all our troubles will be settled. Whether they are or not I am for the Union under any and all circumstances, for I cannot feel willing to give up my share of the Constitution and the Star Spangled Banner.

Again, in the last letter which I received from them (though they wrote others that did not reach me) they say:

WASHINGTON, N. C., April 22, 1861.

Your predictions concerning our State I am ashamed to confess have come to be realized, for the disunionists have or are about to plunge our good old State into this unholy war against our wishes and better judgment. It is hard for us to fight against the Star Spangled Banner, that which our fathers suffered, bled, died and won for our enjoyment. I say it is hard for me to fight for breaking down the best Government that ever existed and against our Federal rights, but it seems it must be so. We cannot be neutral and remain here, and I have not the means to get away with my mother and family.

Again, in the same letter he closes by saying:

I have not the heart to write more, for our whole community is all excitement. I have done all that I could to evade the fatal blow, but all to no purpose. I have got to put on the secession harness; it will chafe hard but I will kick it off when I can.

I answered this letter immediately tendering them the means to bring the family on to New York, but they did not receive my letter. All letters between us were intercepted after the passage of theirs of the 22d of April. These men are mechanics, ship carpenters by trade, and if liberated contemplate seeking employment in this State and get their other brother, mother and sister (the balance of the family) away from Washington, N. C., to New York the first opportunity that offers.

If not inconsistent with the interest of the Government you will do me a great favor by procuring an order for the release of the said John W. and Ezra E. Cornell, now prisoners of war at Castle William, on Governor's Island, N. Y.

Very respectfully,

E. CORNELL.

SIR: Your letter of yesterday has been received. In reply I have to inform you that General Dix is charged with the decision of questions relative to the expediency of allowing former residents of his military district to return thither from places within the lines of the insurgents. In regard to the domestics to whom you refer I have to state that since the permit to which you refer as having been granted by General Scott it has been determined to grant no others of a similar character. This decision I am sorry to say cannot be deviated from.

MARTIN BURKE,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA,
Baltimore, Md., October 14, 1861.

Brig. Gen. HENRY H. LOCKWOOD, Cambridge, Md.

GENERAL: I send you the steamer Balloon, Captain Kirwan, which is placed at your disposal for the purpose of aiding you in breaking up the commercial intercourse with the Confederate States, of which the Eastern Shore of Maryland furnishes the material. You have as I suppose ere this taken measures to seize all merchandise brought from Delaware to Salisbury by rail and destined to Virginia. With the aid of the Balloon you may intercept much of that which finds its way down the Chesapeake by water, and I trust be able to confine this illicit traffic to very narrow limits. It is believed that the Balloon will also be of essential use in sending to different points the force necessary to disarm such companies of militia or such unauthorized military bodies as are training with intentions notoriously hostile to the Government. The duty is one of the greatest delicacy, and requires the utmost prudence and discretion. It is not doubted that numbers of individuals on the Eastern Shore of Maryland have been led into the support of disloyal measures by gross misrepresentations of the views and intentions of the Government. While the purpose you have in view should be steadily maintained and carried out with inflexible firmness, those who have been deceived and misled instead of being confirmed in their prejudices and driven hopelessly off by harshness on our part should if possible be reclaimed by kind treatment and convinced of their error by correcting the misapprehensions under which they labor. If in spite of all efforts to induce them to discontinue their acts of hostility to the Government they persist in carrying on correspondence with the enemy and in giving him aid and comfort they should be arrested and sent to Fort McHenry; but unless a case of extraordinary urgency should occur I trust it may not be necessary to make an arrest without first consulting me. I have full authority from General McClellan to act in all cases.

You will bear in mind that we are on the eve of an election in Maryland of vital importance. The preservation of this State is indispensable to the safety of the capital. It is not doubted that all your measures will be so tempered with discretion as to give strength to the cause of the Union; but while all the just rights even of those who are disloyal should be respected they should be made to feel that no act of open hostility to the Government will be tolerated for a moment.

I inclose copies of letters which have passed between Major-General McClellan, Governor Hicks and myself in regard to the disarming of military companies.* The one at Westminster has been already disarmed by a force sent from this city. All those on the Eastern Shore of Maryland are left to you, and I consider any company drilling in avowed hostility to the Government as coming within the authority given to me by Major-General McClellan and sanctioned by Governor Hicks, though not specifically named in the letter of the latter. The authority conferred on me is hereby delegated to you, not doubting that it will be firmly and discreetly exercised. It will be advisable to consult with our leading friends in the counties in which you adopt these stringent and delicate measures.

You will please report to me the result of every such movement with all convenient dispatch. Should you deem the co-operation of a police force advisable in any case, please notify me and it shall be provided.

I am, general, very respectfully, yours,

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General, Commanding.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 15, 1861.

ROBERT MURRAY, Esq.,

U. S. Marshal for the Southern District of New York.

SIR: This Department understands that George Parker and George A. Shackelford, two seamen, British subjects, found on board prizes taken into New York, are confined at Fort Lafayette. If their testimony should not be deemed indispensable by the district attorney and he should not be aware of any other objection it seems to me that they ought to be discharged. Please consult Mr. Smith on the subject and proceed in pursuance of his advice. * * *

GENERAL: I communicate four intercepted letters* which have been received here from the Post-Office Department, and would suggest that Isaac G. Mask at least, the writer of those numbered 1 and 2, be arrested and sent to Fort Lafayette.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I was glad to get the intercepted letters just received, one of which is signed Isaac G. Mask. I have had this man's letters for a month but they were all signed I. G. M., and with all our efforts we have been unable to identify him. I have ordered his arrest and will send him to Fort Lafayette to-morrow. He ought to be hanged. His is a clear case of treason as defined by the Constitution.

By command of Lieutenant-General Scott:

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

PROCLAMATION.

OCTOBER 17, 1861.

TO THE PEOPLE OF NORTHEASTERN KENTUCKY NOW IN ARMS AGAINST THEIR NATIONAL AND STATE GOVERNMENTS.

FELLOW-CITIZENS: You have assembled together in arms against your Government, against your State, your neighbors and in some instances your nearest relatives without any cause or any object that is worthy of brave and good men. What has your country done that you should rise against it, or what good will it do you to murder the people, burn and pillage the towns and overthrow the constitution and laws of Kentucky? If you could accomplish this you would be the most wretched as you would become the most wicked of men. The mass of you cannot wish to do this. But be assured the ruin you propose by your acts to bring upon the people of Kentucky will fall upon your own heads if you persevere.

Doubtless many of you have been misled by wicked and desperate men, bankrupt in fame and fortune, who hope to profit by the ruin of the Commonwealth. I sincerely believe that many of you have been deceived and led into rebellion who this moment regret the step they have taken, and would return to their families and homes if they could do so in safety.

To all the people therefore who have without due reflection taken up arms against their country and rebelled against both their nation and their State I say return home, lay down your arms, live in peace and friendship with your neighbors, and remember that at least you are Kentuckians. I promise that you shall not be molested either in person or property for what you have already done; on the contrary I will protect you equally with all other citizens so long as you render obedience to those laws which you yourselves have made. I offer you a complete amnesty for what is past; you will be held accountable only for the future. But to secure this result you must return home within ——— days. After that time you will be treated as enemies and must never more hope to see in safety your families or enjoy your property until you have carried out the purpose of your wicked misleaders and conquered the people of your State and overthrown the Government of your fathers.

As your fellow-citizen and a native of your State I urge this offer upon you. Should you reject it, the enlightened world as well as the laws of your country will hold you alone responsible for the shedding of fraternal blood.

WILLIAM NELSON,
Brigadier-General.

Hon. S. P. CHASE, Secretary of the Treasury.

SIR: From intercepted letters of a recent date received at this Department and which were written by influential persons among the insurrectionists it seems that their chief mode of communication at the present time is by means of vessels plying between Havana and New Orleans, running the blockade at the last-named port. I call your attention to the matter in order that you may take such action as you may deem proper.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

GENERAL: I have had the honor to receive your letter† of the 16th instant and its accompaniments. Proper measures will at once be adopted to dispose of the Swedish consuls at both Norfolk and Baltimore. This Department has unquestionable information that foreign consuls in insurgent States and elsewhere are habitually made media of treasonable correspondence in violation of their privileges and even municipal law. Your continued vigilance to such matters would materially subserve the public interests.

List of prisoners sent to Fort McHenry, October 16, 1861.

Robert Renwick, a cabinetmaker of Scotch birth; very boisterous and obnoxious in his opposition to the Government. He was detected in enlisting men for the rebel army. A box of minie rifle balls was found on his premises.

R. H. Bigger, a lawyer; believed to have been commissioned by the rebels as a recruiting officer here. He was detected enlisting men for the rebel army in connection with the two first named in this list (McKewen and Renwick).

George Julius was sent here by General Banks. He has been engaged for some time past in conveying recruits across the Potomac at Marsh Run.

Charles D. French, implicated with Bigger in recruiting for the rebel army.

COLONEL: The prisoners of war J. W. and E. E. Cornell state that their views and feelings have been correctly represented by Mr. E. HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, October 19, 1861.

The undersigned, General-in-Chief of the Army, has received from the President of the United States the following communication:

WASHINGTON, October 14, 1861.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

By the President:

WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State.

In accordance with the foregoing warrant the undersigned devolves on Bvt. Col. Justin Dimick, U. S. Army, commanding Fort Warren, Boston Harbor, a like authority within the limits of the city and harbor of Boston to execute in all proper cases the instructions of the President.

GENERAL: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 18th instant and its inclosure relative to prisoners received at Fort McHenry within the last three days. In reply I have to inform you that arrangements are to be made to provide suitable places of confinement near Boston and at some point in the West which will probably be completed in a few days. When this is done the prisoners at Fort McHenry can be transferred as you suggest.

SIR: Herewith I have the honor to inclose by direction of the Secretary of State for your information copies of two letters addressed to the President by B. P. Loyall and W. H. Ward, late lieutenants in the Navy of the United States.

FORT LAFAYETTE, New York Harbor, October 15, 1861.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

SIR: A week ago I received from the honorable Secretary of the Navy a communication informing me that by your order my name had been stricken from the rolls of the U. S. Navy. This in consequence of my "having refused to take the oath of allegiance to the United States." By this exercise of the power vested in you I have been punished for an alleged offense. It is not for me to comment upon the justice of my dismissal, but in the most respectful manner I do complain of my imprisonment, which must in your judgment result from some act of mine deserving of it and from your right to inflict it. By no act nor intention nor in any manner whatsoever have I offended against the military or civil law of the United States, except having refused to obey an order which you deem merited my dismissal from the naval service.

Being thus released from my duty as an officer of the Government by you it is impossible for me to see by what right I am detained in confinement. I hope, sir, that you will see the truth and reason in my case as I state it. The position of an enemy to the United States is being forced upon me by my continuance in prison. I am confident that nothing upon the records of the Navy Department will warrant such treatment, and with all respect I ask you to release me and to restore to me that liberty of person to which every innocent man is entitled. In the name of law and justice I respectfully protest against my detention in prison.

I am, sir, most respectfully, your obedient servant,

B. P. LOYALL,
Late Lieutenant in the U. S. Navy.

[Inclosure No. 2.]

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 15, 1861.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

SIR: Whilst on board the U. S. ship Macedonian in the Gulf of Mexico in May last I tendered my resignation as a lieutenant in the U. S. Navy. From the date of my resignation (May 26) up to the 12th day of August—when I received a communication from the Navy Department informing me that my name had been stricken from the rolls of the Navy—I continued performing my duty faithfully to the Government. On the receipt of my dismissal from the Navy I in good faith, never dreaming of injustice at the hands of the United States Government, accepted a passage home in the U. S. store-ship Release, kindly granted by Lieutenant-Commander Frailey. On my arrival in New York on board the aforesaid U. S. vessel I was arrested without any charge being made against me on the 31st day of August last, and have been confined in the fort up to the present date without being charged with any offense whatsoever. Conscious as I am of having committed none I respectfully call your attention to this act of injustice in that I confided in the United States Government for my assurance and right to personal liberty, and protest against my past, present and future confinement.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. H. WARD.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,

Washington, October 19, 1861.

Bvt. Col. J. DIMICK, U. S. Army, Boston, Mass.

SIR: You have been assigned to the command of Fort Warren, Boston Harbor, that you may take charge of the political prisoners and prisoners of war who may be sent there for safe-keeping. His excellency the governor of Massachusetts will detail a battalion of volunteers as a garrison for the fort on your application to him, which application the General-in-Chief desires you to make as early as practicable as the order for transferring the prisoners from New York Harbor cannot be given until you are established at Fort Warren. The general desires you to be governed by the following general instructions:

First. That the prisoners be securely held and that they be allowed every privilege consistent with this end, including opportunity to take air and exercise and be treated with all kindness.

Second. That a record be kept of the name, dates of confinement and release of the prisoners.

Third. That they may be permitted to provide themselves with such comforts as they require, if they have the pecuniary means; that they be allowed to receive under proper inspection articles of food, clothing and small sums of money not exceeding $20 at a time, &c., which may be sent them by friends.

Fourth. That they be allowed to transmit and to receive unsealed letters through your hands which on inspection shall be found to contain nothing inflammatory or injurious to the United States, and to receive or purchase the newspapers of the day. You will use your own discretion whether to forward or return to the writers as improper such communications as you receive from or for the prisoners, and in case of doubt you will forward them to this office for consideration.

Fifth. That personal intercourse with visitors be not allowed them except by express permission from proper authority in Washington, and then only in the presence of an officer.

Sixth. That when released by proper authority prisoners shall be examined to see that they bear upon their persons no unauthorized communication from those left in the fort.

Seventh. That an exact account be kept of the subsistence and clothing issued by the Government to each person. You will receive without other special instructions in each case all prisoners who may be delivered to you by order of the Secretary of War or State or by the U. S. marshal for the district. Should writs of habeas corpus be served on you for the production of any prisoners of war you will respond thereto that they are held as prisoners of war, and in these cases and also in any case of a political prisoner you will reply you deeply regret that pending existing political troubles you cannot comply with the requisition of the honorable judge. If then a writ of attachment is attempted to be served on you you will resist being taken yourself or having your prisoners liberated with all the force at your command. The President's authority to suspend the writ of habeas corpus at Fort Warren is herewith inclosed.

You will keep well on your guard against any possible attempt to liberate your prisoners by a coup de main from the sea.

The Quartermaster's and Subsistence Departments have given orders for putting the quarters at Fort Warren in comfortable condition, and for supplying the post with provisions. Report by telegraph to this office when you are ready to have the prisoners transferred from New York Harbor.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

WILLIAM COXE DUSENBURY, Esq.,
No. 142 Broadway, New York.

SIR: Your letter of the 15th of October in relation to visiting the prisoners of war on Governor's Island, N. Y., has been submitted to the Department of State and the following is the reply thereto:

No objection is entertained to the sending of contributions of any kind toward the comfort of prisoners, but visits to them by any persons for supposed philanthropic objects cannot be approved.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

FORT LAFAYETTE, N. Y., October 19, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Washington, D. C.:

I beg leave respectfully to bring my case to your notice, my long confinement proving very disastrous to my family. Late in June my vessel was chartered by McConkey & Co. to go down to the Patuxent River to get off a vessel wrecked or ashore there. The charter party was a written one and with parties with whom I had no previous acquaintance, and it is still in my possession and Mr. McConkey has a counterpart. The vessel ashore was the schooner Robert L. Seth, on the Patuxent at the mouth of Town Creek.

A few hours before my starting a Mr. Tyte, who was a partner with me in the job, told me that about eight persons going to within a mile or two of my destination would like to avail themselves of the opportunity to go down if I would give them passage, they finding themselves with provisions. I understood they were laboring men and mechanics looking for employment. I had never seen them nor heard of them until then. I landed them within three miles of the vessel ashore.

A squall came up and blew my vessel (the Alverda) ashore, and the water continued so low with constant blows that although part of the time I had lighters I was unable to get her off. My men left and Mr. Tyte went to Baltimore to get assistance. Previous to this the steamer Chester arrived with Massachusetts volunteers on board inquiring for the schooner Georgiana; and sent U. S. deputy marshals on board to examine my vessel and left me. I was alone on board. Subsequently the steam tug Vigilant and sloop William Byrne came down and sent a canoe with deputy marshals demanding my papers. I showed my papers, which they proposed to retain, and said I must go with them to General Banks, and was carried on board the sloop William Byrne and delivered up to Lieutenant Pickett. Some of the men went on board my vessel, opened my cabin and lockers, took papers, clothing, &c.

The Vigilant went out cruising in the bay while the sloop remained at anchor, and meeting with the gun-boat Yankee, Commander Craven, came back followed by the Yankee, who suspected these vessels and demanded their papers, and finding they were out upon an unauthorized expedition threatened to take them prisoners to Annapolis or Baltimore. I was ordered on board the Yankee. Commander Craven made inquiry of me as to the party I had carried down, all of which I told him. When learning that my vessel was nearly afloat he said he could tow her off in a few minutes and would do so. This was on Saturday evening. On Sunday morning he determined to go down the Potomac and ordered me as I understood to my own vessel, instead of which I was taken back to the sloop and sent off to Baltimore, they leaving my vessel in charge of a man, and at Fort McHenry I was landed and delivered up to General Banks and in charge of Major Morris.

General Dix arrived about that time, and at my instance on telling him the condition of my vessel, my only means of support, he promised to look into the matter. Meantime orders for transfer of the prisoners there to Fort Lafayette being sent on, I was transferred to this place and have had no opportunity of having my case presented to Government, while my family are suffering. The truth of all I say can readily be verified. I have never at any time had complicity or in any way knowingly done anything which I could not openly do with knowledge of the Federal authorities, and all who know me can testify that I have not interested myself in the present trouble so far even as to discuss them. I have at no time either said or done anything knowingly to which the authorities could take exceptions, and when I took these persons as passengers I had no suspicion that the parties were other than what they were represented, and upon the errand stated. Upon this statement of facts, which can be established, I sincerely hope that I will be released from a confinement so burdensome to my family, dependent upon my labor.

I am, sir, most respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHARLES M. HAGELIN.

SIR: Your communication of September 7, ultimo, in reference to the treasonable conduct of the Circleville Watchman addressed to the Hon. HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA,
Baltimore, Md., October 21, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a letter from Mayor Brown. I know Capt. Charles M. Hagelin, and had several conversations with him before he left Fort McHenry. He is a person of very simple character and without influence. I am inclined as I was while he was here to believe his statement. But whether true or not I think he has been sufficiently punished and recommend his immediate release. The closing paragraph of Mayor Brown's letter will attract your attention without any suggestion from me.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General.

[Inclosure.]

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 8, 1861.

His Excellency ABRAHAM LINCOLN,
President of the United States.

SIR: I respectfully ask your attention to the case of a citizen of Baltimore who is confined in this fort. He is Capt. Charles M. Hagelin, aged forty-nine years, and for twenty-seven years a resident of Baltimore. In March he invested nearly all his hard earnings in the purchase of a schooner called the Alverda in which he made but two trips. The first was to the Patuxent for a load of wood; the second was to the same river for the purpose of getting off a vessel which had run aground. On this trip he was requested to take ten men as passengers who were represented to be mechanics in search of employment. He consented, and it was not until after the voyage had begun and when it was nearly over that he ascertained from the conversation of these men that most of them designed to go to Virginia.

On the 19th of July, some time after his arrival in the Patuxent River, Captain Hagelin and his vessel were seized. He was brought here, and his vessel, as he is informed after having been stripped, is left aground on the shores of the Patuxent. Thus Captain Hagelin is likely to be deprived of nearly everything he is worth, has been subjected to a long imprisonment, and is taken away from his wife and children who look to him for support, for no act except having taken on board his vessel a few passengers whose business and purposes he did not scrutinize before receiving them.

These are the statements of Captain Hagelin, and have gained the entire confidence of his fellow-prisoners including myself in consequence of the simplicity of his character and the gentleness and propriety of his whole demeanor. He is a Swede by birth, a perfectly harmless person, and with neither power nor disposition to do injury to the Government. There are doubtless other cases here equally worthy of examination and relief, but as Captain Hagelin is one of my constituents and has personally interested me I confine my application to him. I hope that it will meet with a favorable consideration.

I cannot close, however, without calling your attention to the condition of the prison. My official duty has made me somewhat familiar with the management of similar institutions, and I do not hesitate to say that the arrangements here are inhuman and disgraceful to the Government of the United States, and I apprehend that serious illness among the inmates will be the consequence.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. WM. BROWN,
Mayor of Baltimore.

FORT LAFAYETTE, New York Harbor, October 21, 1861.

Lieut. Col. M. BURKE,

Commanding Forts Hamilton and Lafayette.

COLONEL: I find on inquiry of the prisoners that they do not care about having a chaplain. Some of them on being asked replied, "No; especially an abolitionist." In making this report I give the expression of the majority.

CHAS. O. WOOD,
Second Lieutenant, Ninth Infantry, Commanding Post.

Maj. Gen. JOHN A. DIX, Baltimore, Md.

GENERAL: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 21st instant with its inclosure from Mayor Brown. In reply I have to inform you that I have directed Colonel Burke to discharge Capt. Charles M. Hagelin on his taking the oath coupled with certain obligations.

I have the honor to be, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Acting Secretary.

Lieut. Col. MARTIN BURKE, Fort Lafayette, N. Y.

SIR: Let Charles M. Hagelin, a prisoner confined in Fort Lafayette, be released on taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States stipulating that he will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State; and also that he will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. You will please make the stipulations a part of the oath. I transmit this order to Robert Murray, esq., U. S. marshal, who has been instructed by this Department to cause a police examination to be made in some cases of the persons and baggage of prisoners discharged from custody to the end that no correspondence or other improper papers be conveyed by them to persons outside the fort.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Acting Secretary.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State:

I telegraphed* the Secretary of War on the 16th instant informing him that there were in this city from 50 to 100 dangerous secessionists, and that circumstances might make their arrest necessary. Also that we had no suitable place of detention for such a large number of prisoners, and suggesting their removal in a certain contingency to the fort at Mackinac. My telegraph has not been answered. Some of the persons referred to have been arrested. They ought by all means to be detained. Please answer and state the disposition which you think ought to be made of them.

JOHN McNEIL,
Colonel Nineteenth Missouri Vols. and Asst. Provost-Marshal.

FORT MCHENRY, October 23, 1861.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON and
Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD:

Fort McHenry is very small and is filled up by the garrison. We have not room for the accommodation of prisoners or the means of providing for their comfort. Seven prisoners of war from General Banks' column and four state prisoners engaged in secreting a balloon in Delaware came in last night. We have now over twenty confined in one room and cell.

SIR: Complaints still come that the comforts which might be allowed the prisoners at Fort Lafayette are not enjoyed by them. Although these complaints have their origin in reports which arose before you went there to look after the comfort of the prisoners you will proceed again to the fort and remedy what admits of remedy. * * *

DAVID H. CARR, Esq., U. S. Marshal, New Haven, Conn.

SIR: Your communication* of the 17th instant addressed to the Hon. Simon Cameron, Secretary of War, and by him referred to this Department has been received. In reply you are authorized to arrest and send to Fort Lafayette any persons engaged in inducing soldiers to desert or otherwise obstructing the recruiting officers in the discharge of their duties. It is to be hoped that the exercise of this authority in a few cases will serve as an example which will deter the class of persons referred to from their disloyal practices.

Assistant Secretary.

WASHINGTON, October 25, 1861.

Honorable SECRETARY OF STATE.

DEAR SIR: I returned from Canada this morning. I found at the Clifton House, Niagara Falls, a large number of prominent secessionists who have just returned from Europe. I would like an order for the arrest and conveyance to Fort Lafayette of S. W. Ashly and O. B. Caruthers, the first named being a member of the so-called Confederate Congress at this time. These traitors are awaiting an opportunity to go South. They have very important correspondence in their possession some of which I have seen. I am confident I shall succeed in inducing them to visit our side of the river, which of course will be the only opportunity of arresting them.

Yours, very respectfully,

L. C. BAKER.

DENVER, COLO. TER., October 26, 1861.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

Resting under the impression that most of our letters to Washington miscarry unless they go by private hand and that the governor does [not] attach the same importance to frequent reports to the Government that I do, I venture to overstep my line of official duty by writing you again.

We have news to-day that Captain Otis, at Fort Wise, captured a portion of the rebels raised in this Territory by the notorious Captain McKee to whom I recently denied the writ of habeas corpus. They had attacked a party of loyal people on the Arkansas, who found a way to send word to Fort Wise, when Captain Otis sallied out with his cavalry and made them prisoners. That will help us some if it does not bring upon us the Cherokees who have joined the rebels and are quick to avenge what they conceive to be an insult to Georgians. To make this point apparent to you it is needful to say that the gold of this region was first discovered by Georgians and Cherokee half-breeds, who have served as mountaineers here for twenty years. The road which sweeps from the Indian reservations south of Kansas through here to what is called on the maps the South Pass bears the name of the Cherokee trail; and although the Cheyennes have traveled it most lately they still claim it as theirs. In consequence of their relationship to and old associations with Georgians the thousands of Georgians residing here from whom the rebellion arose appeared to calculate from the start that they could make a conquest of Colorado by the aid of the Cherokees. The notorious A. B. Miller, who headed the first party of rebels here, went at first to Fort Smith and leaving his party there went to Richmond for orders, and then returned to the Cherokees. That would seem to mean that he is to lead them here unless the movements of General Frémont shall scatter them in some other direction.

The governor having gotten some ammunition from Laramie we begin to feel some confidence in our own strength. Heretofore with the single exception of one or two arrests I have been obliged to face this rebellion alone, except with the aid I received from the marshal. But I think we shall keep the rebels under. Will the President cause us to be informed how we shall subsist these political prisoners?

I have the honor to be, sir, Your Excellency's obedient servant,
 BENJ. F. HALL,
Chief Justice of Colorado.

SIR: I duly received your telegram in answer to my letter of the 8th instant directing me to arrest James T. Cocbrane and Wormell and to libel the property. These parties fled at the first seizure of the goods, and although I have had the officers on the watch ever since I have not succeeded in effecting their arrest. I have libeled the 107 machines found in Cochrane's factory, and also 300 files found in a file manufactory, part of 1,500 that have been made this summer for these cotton-gin sharpeners; the others have been sent South.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,

Col. G. LOOMIS, U. S. Army,
Commanding Fort Columbus, N. Y.

SIR: The General-in-Chief directs that the political prisoners and prisoners of war confined at the several posts in New York Harbor be sent by sea under charge of a vigilant officer and strong guard to Fort Warren, Boston Harbor. Colonel Dimick, U. S. Army, has arrived in Boston under instructions to take command at Fort Warren, and the prisoners will be delivered to him. Colonel Burke has been instructed to turn over the prisoners under his charge on your application. You will call on the quartermaster in New York to furnish steam transportation.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
 E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Copy for Lieutenant-Colonel Burke, who will turn over the prisoners under his charge on the application of Colonel Loomis.

By command of Lieutenant-General Scott:

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE, SOUTHERN DIST. OF NEW YORK,
New York, October 28, 1861.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In obedience to your instructions I yesterday proceeded to Lafayette to examine the situation of the prisoners there, and in order to have the concurrent testimony of others I selected Mr. Simeon Draper, who is connected with the charitable institutions of the State, and Mr. Senator Ferry to accompany me. After a thorough examination of the situation of the prisoners there we came to the conclusion that sufficient food of a good quality was supplied to them, and that their wants in other particulars were well attended to with the exception of the cooking arrangements. Soldiers are employed to do this business who have no knowledge of it, and it would be desirable to have two cooks appointed who could attend to this branch of the department.

Amongst the prisoners we found a number of men who occupy no social position and who have no standing in the community and whose room would be more beneficial to the Government than the space they occupy. The main difficulty with regard to the comfort of the prisoners in the fort is the want of sufficient room, and by discharging those whom it is of no interest to the Government to retain this difficulty would be obviated. These men it would appear to me could not do the Government any mischief, and it is only a matter of surprise how they came to be arrested. I would therefore advise that some competent person or persons should be named by you to examine into the charges against these men and report to you for your final action in the premises. Lieutenant Wood, in command of the fort, complains that his duties are very onerous, having in charge from $5 to $15,000 belonging to the prisoners which he disburses on their order. Of course under these circumstances his time is almost entirely occupied and he is unable to render those services which he ought to be able to render to the prisoners.

I have therefore no hesitation in saying that it would only be right and proper that he should have a secretary appointed to assist him, to be selected according to your instructions. I would suggest that as soon as the room could be spared that a hospital should be set apart for those who are suffering from sickness in order to separate them from those who are in good health.

Very respectfully, yours,

ROBERT MURRAY,
U. S. Marshal.

P. S.—Mr. Draper and Senator Ferry concur in the above recommendation.

R. MURRAY.

[Indorsement.]

Respectfully referred to Lieutenant-General Scott with a request that he will make an order for the military matters within mentioned.

Brig. Gen. W. T. SHERMAN,
Commanding Department of the Cumberland.

GENERAL: I send herewith a statement made by a prisoner who was arrested by my orders for going South contrary to an order issued from this department on the 30th of August. My object in sending it is to bring to your notice the route—although I presume you have taken measures to close it—pursued by the prisoner. I understand from other sources that the aforesaid route has been largely traveled by persons desiring to evade the order in reference to non-intercourse with the South.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours,

JOHN McNEIL,
Colonel Nineteenth Missouri Volunteers, Provost-Marshal.

[Inclosure.]

SAINT LOUIS, October 23, 1861.

Col. JOHN McNEIL.

SIR: I was informed this morning by Mr. Caffrey that you did not consider my letter of yesterday's date as satisfactory, it not giving the route by which I went to New Orleans. I now state that I went by railroad to Evansville, Ind.; by river to Henderson, Ky.; from there by stage to the Tennessee State line, where I took the railroad to Brookhaven, Miss.; from there by buggy to Natchez, Miss., and thence by river to New Orleans. Returning I came by railroad to Memphis, where I stopped one day and a half to collect some debts; went from there to Natchez, where I arrived on Saturday noon; collected some debts and returned from there on Sunday to State line by railroad, by stage to Henderson, Ky.; from there by Government steamer Storm to Evansville and by railroad home.

I do not consider that I have committed any offense by making the trip to the South as I went solely on our commercial business to collect moneys we required in our business and which there was danger of being confiscated. I will further state that I remained at the several places which I visited only time enough to transact my business, and left by first conveyance I could get. The following-named gentlemen will I feel confident bear me out in my assurance of loyalty to the Government under which we live: Albert Pearce, esq., George Pegram, esq., William J. Hazard, esq., Messrs. S. M. Edgell & Co., Messrs. William Matthews & Co., and Messrs. John J. Roe & Co.

Very respectfully,

M. YOLAN.

[Indorsement.]

Respectfully referred to Major Corwine, judge-advocate.

This man left after the proclamation of martial law, passing our lines each way without permission and in defiance of orders, and now pleads ignorance.

Assistant Provost-Marshal.

GENTLEMEN: I have requested Seth C. SIR: I inclose herewith an extract* from a communication received at this Department from Robert Murray, esq., U. S. marshal for the southern district of New York. EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, Albany, October 29, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: The Rev. H. Dunn called on me on Saturday last and made certain statements in regard to the fitting out of vessels at Montreal destined for Southern ports. I requested him to put the information in the form of a letter, and I take the liberty of inclosing a copy of his statement herewith for such consideration as you may deem it entitled to.

I am, with high regard, your most obedient servant,

E. D. MORGAN,
Governor of New York.

[Inclosure.]

[ALBANY], October 26, 1861.

Governor MORGAN.

DEAR SIR: The substance of the statement which you wish me to commit to paper is this:

There is a vessel now being loaded in Montreal destined to a Southern port. Consul Mure and his two brothers who are there are supposed to be interested (John Mure especially so) in the enterprise. The captain of this vessel boasts that he has twice run the blockade. I also give it as my opinion that there was not sufficient efficiency in the consulate to meet the present emergency. Not that I call in question the integrity or ability of the consul-general, but first he is a very old man for such a place; and second his home is in Ohio and he is necessarily much of his time with his family. The deputy who is the acting consul is manager of nearly all the express companies of both provinces. He has no time or disposition to make himself active in defeating rebel designs. At Quebec where beyond measure we need a consul there is but an agent. Montreal and Quebec are full of secessionists. Probbly nearly or quite 100 refugees from the South are at those two places. If I were permitted to suggest it would be the appointment at once of a consul at Quebec, and employing an efficient detective agent at Montreal who would telegraph to the agent at Rouse's Point or other places when secessionists were going South and keep the Government informed of their measures generally.

* See Murray to Seward, October 28, ante.

It is true that through Mr. Weed I have asked for the consulate at Quebec if one be created there and would be much obliged for your own influence in that direction if you feel free to give it; yet it is above all personal consideration that influences my opinion in this case.

Most respectfully,

H. DUNN.

P. S.—Another fact is worthy of notice. Funds are being constantly sent from the South to these insurgents of ours in Montreal and Quebec. Should such funds be permitted to pass?

H. D.

NEW YORK, October 29, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD:

Will you continue countermand* of order for removal of Fort Lafayette prisoners until I see you? I leave for Washington to-morrow morning.

FORT HAMILTON, New York Harbor, October 30, 1861.

Col. E. D. TOWNSEND,

Ast. Adj. Gen., Hdqrs. of the Army, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Inclosed you will receive Lieutenant Wood's report disposing of the prisoners in Fort Lafayette up to this date. If you do not consider the suggestion an improper one I would most respectfully ask the General-in-Chief to signify direct or through me his approbation of Lieutenant Wood's conduct while in charge of the prisoners at Fort Lafayette. I am aware that in ordinary cases these duties would be considered merely as a part of the ordinary routine of the service, but so highly do I estimate Lieutenant Wood's exertions in the discharge of these most onerous duties that I cannot refrain from submitting a suggestion of this nature to the General-in-Chief, Lieutenant Wood having in my opinion while stationed at Fort Lafayette rendered services equivalent to those of three good officers.

I have the honor to remain, sir, your most obedient servant,

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF VIRGINIA, &C.,

Fort Monroe, Va., November 1, 1861.

Maj. Gen. B. HUGER, Commanding at Norfolk, Va.

GENERAL: I received your several communications of the 23d and the 29th ultimo, with an indorsement on that of the 23d. In reply to the latter I have only to remark that I gave no other instructions than that I could not for the present receive passengers by flags of truce coming from Norfolk. I was not aware until you informed me that any other instructions had been given on the subject. I certainly have no intention or desire to be discourteous to General Huger.

Herewith I send by a flag of truce and commend to your care and courtesy the following-named persons: Mrs. Susan Carnes, her sister, Miss Shelton, and Miss Barker; Mrs. Reeves, her four children and female servant; Mrs. Sophia Allen and son (seven years old), and Mrs. Charles Parker, Mrs. Margaret Cormick, Mrs. Annie M. Upsher, Miss Williamson, Miss E. B. Nichols, Mrs. Julia Stillman, Mrs. Eliza Stillman, Mrs. Rachael E. Myers and her daughter, and I believe one other lady who is desirous of visiting her children and who says her husband is in the U. S. Navy. Mr. C. Drew and his daughter also go with this flag.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN E. WOOL,

Major-General.

P. S.—I also send under cover to you a small package of letters.

JOHN E. WOOL,

Major-General.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE CUMBERLAND,

Louisville, Ky., November 2, 1861.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of 31st is received. When prisoners are received have the papers all handed to Judge Bullitt, a good Union man and a member of the court of appeals, to whose decision I leave the case. We cannot imprison and keep in custody all suspected persons, and the only safe course is to follow the law of the State of Kentucky which makes arrests only proper when overt acts of treason are established. The cases you mention are certainly such as the safety of the community would justify in having imprisoned and I will caution Judge Bullitt on the point.

By my request Judge Catron has appointed a number of commissioners to reside along the line, one of whom was designed for Campbellsville. His examination and commitment will be final and will obviate our hitherto trouble of judging cases from mere letters and the explanations of the accused. So many improper arrests were made by self-constituted authorities that there was a physical impossibility of keeping them. To inflict any cruelty on them would not be tolerated by the laws of war or peace, and the consequence is many dangerous men are set free. Judge Catron says the commissioners can put them under bond and the bond will be good against their property or the property of their sureties.

As you can well understand we would soon fill all the places of confinement in Louisville were we to arrest and imprison all who may be dangerous. Leaders and conspicuous men never should be arrested unless in strong cases, and then an examination should be had before a commissioner of the United States.

I expect you up this week.

Yours, truly,

W. T. SHERMAN,
Brigadier-General, Commanding.

He desires me to approve his action which under the circumstances I have done. You will therefore please permit the persons holding passes from him to go over our lines as directed.

SETH C. HAWLEY, Esq., New York.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 31st ultimo informing me of your inability to execute the orders of this Department of the 29th ultimo in consequence of the removal of the prisoners from the forts in New York Harbor to Fort Warren, in Boston, Mass., and suggesting if it is the wish of the Department that you should proceed to that point and make the investigation required that instructions to the commanding officer of Fort Warren similar to those to the commandants of the forts in New York be forwarded to you.

In reply I inclose herewith such instructions to Colonel Dimick together with a note to Robert Murray, esq., the U. S. marshal for the southern district of New York, requesting him to accompany you and to give you all the aid in his power in prosecuting your investigations.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SECRETARY OF STATE:

Messrs. Beckett and Tytus are best known to me of the gentlemen referred to and are highly respected citizens. The other gentlemen so far as I know enjoy the confidence of their fellow-citizens. Perhaps I ought to add, however, that I am obliged to differ from them as to the expediency of arresting Mr. Vallandigham. I return the papers.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,

Secretary of State of the United States:

We, the undersigned citizens of Butler County, Third Congressional district, Ohio, having heard the speech of Hon. C. L. Vallandigham made in this city on the 12th of October, 1861, and believing it will calculate to render aid and comfort to the traitors now in hostility against the Government of the United States by exciting sympathy for them in this community, and particularly by preventing enlistments in the volunteer service of the country and by discouraging subscriptions to the Government loan, beg leave respectfully to request that you adopt such means as will prevent this gentleman from working similar detriment to the public service in future. We herewith send the Cincinnati Commercial containing a brief abstract of the speech in question, which we pronounce generally correct as far as it goes. Of the effect of this speech in our community we can only give our opinion, which is that it has in some measure put a stop to enlistments in this community. Were we to undertake to point out wherein the Commercial's report fails to give a full impression of Vallandigham's language it would be in that part where he denounces the loan and tax measures, which he denounced as particularly unequal, unwise and disastrous in their results. We have only further to say that the speech in its general tone and bearing was just such a speech as might very well have been addressed to and been applauded by an audience of rebels. It was vilely denunciatory of the Administration and very kindly in its tone toward the rebels. On the subject of taxation he said that the amount to each man, woman and child would be about $30; that the people would be utterly unable to pay it, and the result would be that under the law the farms would be sold and bid in by the Government officers, and shortly afterward Government land offices would be established all over the State for the sale of forfeited farms. As to the bonds issued by the Government they would soon depreciate to 80 or 70 per cent., and thus the widows and orphans would be fleeced. And if the war went on a few years the very men who authorized the issuance of the bonds would turn round and repudiate them. We do most sincerely believe the good of the country requires that the said Vallandigham should be forthwith arrested and taken care of until the war is ended, and we hope that Marshal A. C. Sands will be instructed to make said arrest.

F. J. TYTUS.
JACOB MORRIS.

The parts of Mr. Vallandigham's speech which we heard are correctly set forth above.

M. P. ALSTON.
PHILIP BERRY.
J. F. SUTHERLAND.

We, the undersigned citizens of the said Congressional district, believing the above to be a correct statement of the speech of Mr. Vallandigham and of its tendency, and considering that he has at other times and places made speeches to the same effect, and believing that he is using all his influence to defeat the efforts of the Government in crushing out the rebellion which now so seriously threatens its existence, would earnestly urge upon you the necessity of the immediate arrest of C. L. Vallandigham and of his safe-keeping until the public danger is removed.

WM. BECKETT.
E. G. DYER.
ISRAEL WILLIAMS.
EZRA POTTER.

As to the character and responsibility of Beckett, Dyer, Williams, Tytus, Morris, Potter and Alston, and Berry and Sutherland, see Secretary Chase.

THORNTON K. LOTHROP, Esq.,

Assistant U. S. District Attorney, Boston, Mass.

SIR: Your letter of the 4th instant* has been received. I am directed by the President of the United States to say that there being an insurrection in the United States the President has suspended the writ of habeas corpus in the State of Massachusetts and in the waters thereof so far as it may concern the action of any military or naval officer or other persons engaged in the military service or the naval service of the Union and any civil officer of the United States. No officer therefore of the United States will obey any such writ without the assent of this Department previously obtained.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WASHINGTON, November 7, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: In a note which I had the honor to address to you on the 10th [6th] of last month I directed your attention to the unusual manner in which the master and crew of the British schooner Revere appeared to have been treated after the capture of their vessel by the U. S. ship Cambridge, and especially to the fact that two of the crew had been kept in irons.

It is now my duty to beg the Government of the United States to take into their serious consideration statements concerning another case of the same kind which have been brought to my notice by Rear-Admiral Sir Alexander Milne, commander-in-chief of Her Majesty's naval forces on the North American and West Indian stations. It would appear from them that on the seizure by the Cambridge of another British schooner, the Louisa Agnes, for an alleged breach of blockade, two of the crew of that vessel also were put in irons and that the master did not meet with that considerate treatment which might have been reasonably expected.

I have the honor to inclose a copy of the admiral's dispatch on the subject and an extract† from an affidavit of the master of the Louisa Agnes which accompanied it.

I have the honor to be, with high consideration, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

LYONS.

† Omitted.

[Inclosure.]

NILE, AT HALIFAX, October 28, 1861.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, K. C. B., &c.

MY LORD: I deem it right to forward to your excellency the accompanying original papers relative to the capture of the British schooner Louisa Agnes, of Lunenburg, which have been forwarded to me by the owner of her cargo, Mr. Moran, a merchant of this city. I do so, however, not with any view to your excellency's entering into the question of her capture which I presume is now before the U. S. prize courts, but of pointing out how contrary it is to the usages of war to resort to coercion upon the unresisting crews of neutral vessels detained for breach of blockade, &c., and further that I cannot but think as a naval officer that if these statements are true not only had the seamen who were put in irons strong grounds of complaint but the master had a right to look for more considerate treatment to himself personally than he appears to have received on board the U. S. ships Cambridge and Susquehanna.

It will be for your excellency to decide as to what steps if any should be taken thereon or whether any immediate representation should be made to the United States Government to prevent a recurrence of such harsh treatment to masters and crews of English vessels detained by U. S. ships of war, but whatever course may be deemed most in accordance with your excellency's views I may be permitted to refer to the very emphatic language used in regard to an analogous case by Sir W. Scott, in his judgment on the case of the San Juan Baptista (Robert, Adm. Reports, p. 33), wherein referring to putting the crew of a prize in irons that eminent jurist says if proved to have existed and to the extent alleged and without necessity must be pronounced disgraceful to the character of the country (Great Britain), since no one who hears me will deny that to apply even to enemies modes of restraint that are unnecessary and at the same time convey personal indignity and personal suffering is highly dishonorable.

I have, &c.,

ALEXANDER MILNE.

CHICAGO, *November 7, 1861.*Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: * * * A man by the name of Jewett, a son-in-law of Commodore Garrison, came to this city in the month of May last. He is Southern by birth and a strong secessionist in feeling, but says very little. He stated to a friend of his, a reliable Union man, that he was introduced to President and Mrs. Lincoln by Breckinridge last winter; that he has been in correspondence with both the President and his wife; that Mrs. Lincoln has written him several replies. Several of his recent letters to Mrs. Lincoln, copies of which he read to my informant, were substantially intended to induce her to caution the President against the Secretary of State. Whether the object of this man Jewett is to make trouble by his correspondence with the wife of the President or to obtain information by means of such replies as may be written or whether he is a mere adventurer I am at a loss to determine. I will endeavor to procure copies of his letters and forward them. I inform you of these facts, thinking that perhaps some light may be thrown upon the matter at Washington.

Very respectfully,

JOHN C. MILLER.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: The desire to furnish information that may possibly be of service to my Government will serve as an apology for my addressing you directly. I would refer to the acquaintance which I had the honor of having with you when residing in Albany simply to secure a favorable consideration of the subject of this letter. I have just been informed by a gentleman of high respectability that the traitor Beauregard has a nephew in Montreal with whom he maintains a constant semi-weekly correspondence through the mail under cover to the president of the Bank of Montreal. The Government may be in possession of the information already, but if not it seems to me to deserve their attention. There can be no doubt that the rebels gain very accurate information of the intentions of our Government, and this may be one of the methods by which it is obtained. It also seems to me probable that British officials in Virginia are used as the channels through which the correspondence is forwarded northward. There are a large number of secessionists at one of the principal hotels in Montreal who are doubtless engaged in some way in furnishing important information to their friends at the South.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

JOHN NEWLAND.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, November 12, 1861.

Respectfully referred to the U. S. consul-general at Montreal with the request that he will return when he no longer has use for it.

The fact that Beauregard had a nephew here was known to me at the time and reported to the Department. But he stayed here less than a week and had no letters through the president of the Montreal bank except one of an ordinary business transaction.

OFFICE OF U. S. ATTORNEY,
Philadelphia, November 9, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: The case of one Samuel Eakins, recently discharged from Fort Lafayette, was presented to me to-day in a form somewhat embarrassing. On the 24th of August last Eakins was arrested upon a warrant issued by the U. S. commissioner (Heazlitt) and a hearing had in his case before the commissioner. Pending the examination he was committed by the executive to Fort Lafayette, where he has remained till a day or two ago. This morning he presented himself to the marshal for this district and requested that officer to deliver to him certain property, including a watch and some gold coin, that was found in his possession at the time of his arrest. He stated that he intended to leave immediately for Washington for the purpose of learning whether the Government desired to employ him in any of its workshops. The commissioner informed him that he was in the custody of the marshal inasmuch as the original complaint had not been disposed of, to which Mr. Eakins replied that he was unconditionally discharged by the Government. I instructed the commissioner to allow Eakins to enter his own recognizance to appear upon the 24th of the present month to answer the charge upon which he had been originally arrested—the charge of treason—and said to him that the marshal would retain the property (in value about $1,500) as security.

I am unable to consult with the district attorney in the matter, but I learn that Mr. Coffey had concluded before his illness that the case was not one for prosecution. I desire, however, to know whether the Department have any instructions to give the district attorney in relation to the case or have any wish in reference to it. If the Government does not desire the prosecution now pending to proceed further I presume that the money belonging to Mr. Eakins may be delivered to him.

I have the honor to be, very truly and respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. HUBLEY ASHTON,
Assistant U. S. Attorney.

[Indorsement.]

If it is not a case in which the evidence will warrant a strong expectation of success discharge him.

W. H. SEWARD.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Some time since I sent by the United States Express a package containing a pamphlet and paper written and published by Merritt Munson, of this State, to the State Department for instructions. I have heard nothing from it, and therefore call the attention of the Department to it.

On the 29th instant I learned that one Doctor Hopper, of Knoxville, Tenn., left this city in company with two ladies and a Doctor Letcher. His destination was Canada. He went there for the purpose of purchasing quinine and morphine, and is expected to return at once. I telegraphed to Mr. Barse, at Detroit, and arranged with a gentleman at Michigan City, the junction of the Michigan Central and New Albany and Salem roads, and another at the Lake Station, the junction of the Central and "Cut Off" Railroads, to watch for them. Doctor Hopper is described thus: Tall, aristocratic appearance; light hair, smooth face, large blue eyes, about forty; wears dark business coat, drab vest and pants and slouch hat. His wife has dark complexion, black eyes and hair; full medium height. The other lady small, light hair, blue eyes, round face and plump. Their errand was communicated in Tennessee to a person who was in their confidence. The ladies both had leather traveling bags; no other baggage; will probably return with trunks. Doctor Letcher has gone to Washington. A description of him can be obtained from W. T. Dennis, a special agent of the Treasury Department. He should be arrested, and the arrest kept from the public until the others have been apprehended.

Mr. Barse informs me of the arrest of Shaver,* an agent of the Grand Trunk Railway. I had known of his movements and expected to arrest him in Indiana. I am afraid the arrest was premature. If the Department wishes any more evidence in his case I can furnish it.

* See p. 982 for case of Shaver.

Yesterday I received from Governor Morton, of Indiana, a letter* a copy of which I inclose. I will go to Bloomington to-night and make some temporary arrangement until the Department instructs me what course to take in the matter. The suggestions in the letter seem to be judicious.

Some weeks since I learned that a consignment of saltpeter had been landed from a Goderich (Canadian) propeller with no other mark than a diamond B and without a bill of lading. The seizure of contraband was not included in my duties, but I took the liberty of locking it up. No one has claimed it and it is now in the hands of the surveyor of the port. There are twenty-two packages.

A few days afterward I received a dispatch from a special agent of the Treasury Department asking me to look out for a consignment of tobacco, three-fourths of which was the property of rebels. The tobacco (2,400 cases) was found in the hands of the Michigan Central Railroad and taken charge of until the arrival of the agent of the Treasury Department, when it was delivered to the surveyor of the port. I drew upon the Department for my salary for two months and a small bill of expenses paid by me.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN C. MILLER.

His Excellency WILLIAM DENNISON,

Governor of Ohio, Columbus.

SIR: I have examined the papers relative to the case of the Messrs. Crumbaugh and am of the impression that although these persons might not if released pursuant to your recommendation engage in the military service of the insurgents there is nothing to show that they would not seek civil employment under them. If therefore you will sound them as to their disposition to enter into an engagement not to accept employment of any kind in that quarter or to do any hostile act against the United States, and should find such disposition to exist, the expediency of their discharge will again be taken into consideration.

GENERAL: You will proceed with the forces under your command into the counties of Accomac and Northampton, Va., and carry out the assurances given in the proclamation to be issued by me on the 13th instant. One of the objects in view, though not stated in the proclamation, is to bring these counties back to their allegiance to the United States and reunite them to the Union on the footing of West Virginia. The first step in the accomplishment of this object is to disarm and disperse the military corps encamped within them. If these corps are in the service of the Confederates they should be made prisoners and sent to this city. A conciliatory course should be pursued in regard to those who are not under arms and have not been in the pay of the Confederate Government. It will require great discretion and prudence in bringing about the desired result; but if the people of these counties can be induced to declare their independence of the Confederates the strongest assurance may be given to them of an efficient protection by the Government.

It will be advisable to have a free and frank conference with the leading Union men as soon as you think the time has come for disclosing the wishes of the Government. In advancing into the interior great care will be necessary to guard against surprises. It is understood that the intention is to carry on a guerrilla warfare against you and that the character of the country favors it. Against this you will take the requisite precaution by carefully feeling your way. You will if possible send me a brief note of your progress every day.

* * * * *

No distinction should be made between the citizens of those counties in regard to the past. All who submit peaceably to the authority of the Government are to be regarded as loyal. If any persist in acts of hostility it is for you as commander of the expedition to decide what measures shall be taken in regard to their persons or their property, and with this prerogative no subordinates can be permitted to interfere. The notion has been far too prevalent that the persons and property of secessionists may be uncereemoniously dealt with by commanders of regiments or corps and the sooner it is corrected the better.

GENERAL: * * * As far as military necessity will permit religiously respect the constitutional rights of all. Preserve the strictest discipline among the troops, and while employing the utmost energy in military movements be careful so to treat the unarmed inhabitants as to contract not widen the breach existing between us and the rebels.

I mean by this that it is the desire of the Government to avoid unnecessary irritation by causeless arrests and persecution of individuals. Where there is good reason to believe that persons are actually giving aid, comfort or information to the enemy it is of course necessary to arrest them, but I have always found that it is the tendency of subordinates to make vexatious arrests on mere suspicion. You will find it well to direct that no arrest shall be made except by your order or that of your generals unless in extraordinary cases, always holding the party making the arrest responsible for the propriety of his course. It should be our constant aim to make it apparent to all that their property, their comfort and their personal safety will be best preserved by adhering to the cause of the Union.

SIR: Your letter* of the 11th instant has been received. In reply I have to inform you that it will be your duty to require of all persons who may embark at Portland for foreign countries excepting the poorer classes of emigrants to provide themselves with passports signed or countersigned by the Secretary of State. If not so provided you will not allow them to embark, and may employ such of the police as may be necessary to carry out this regulation. In cases where there is good reason to believe that persons may embark at Portland for Halifax or Saint John for the purpose of thence proceeding to Europe or elsewhere in aid of the insurgents of this country you will require them also to provide themselves with passports. As the object of the regulation, however, is precautionary merely and intended to thwart the designs of enemies of this Government who may be proceeding abroad it is desirable that it should be carried into effect with as little annoyance as possible to honest persons — upon their own affairs.

His Excellency A. LINCOLN.

MY DEAR SIR: I inclose a proclamation which I have issued to the people of Accomac and Northampton Counties, Va. Its purpose, as will be apparent to you from its tone, is to bring about a peaceable submission on their part. If they resist they are advised that they may expect severe chastisement. The case of these counties is peculiar. They have not engaged in any active hostility to the United States. Their people have never crossed the Maryland line. Their greatest offenses are sympathizing with the Richmond leaders and carrying on an illicit trade with the eastern shore of Virginia. One of their captains fired on a barge belonging to one of our revenue steamers, but the act was disapproved by their leading men. If they can be reclaimed and induced to throw off their connection with the Confederates it will be a great point gained, especially as the residence of Governor Wise, their former representative, is in Accomac; and I thought it worth while to make the effort by quieting their fears in the first place, for they have got it into their heads that we want to steal and emancipate their negroes; and by giving them the strongest assurances of kind treatment and protection if they do not resist the authority of the Government I trust—I ought to say I hope rather than trust—that they may be gained over without bloodshed. As their case is peculiar I have endeavored to meet it with a remedial treatment adapted to the special phase of the malady of secessionism with which they are afflicted.

I have sent an additional force since my return from Washington. The whole number will be 4,500—among them about 3,500 as well disciplined troops as any in the service. In my instructions to General Lockwood, who commands the expedition, I have directed him to disarm and make prisoners of all persons found with arms in their hands. I have also inclosed him a copy of the act of Congress of the 6th August last, entitled “An act to confiscate property used for insurrectionary purposes,” the last section of which concerns persons held to labor and service, and I have instructed him to enforce its provisions as far as practicable.

In all I have done in this matter I have had the best interest of the Government in view, and I shall be much gratified if it meets your approbation.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General.

PROCLAMATION.

HEADQUARTERS, Baltimore, November 13, 1861.

TO THE PEOPLE OF ACCOMAC AND NORTHAMPTON COUNTIES, VA.:

The military forces of the United States are about to enter your counties as a part of the Union. They will go among you as friends and with the earnest hope that they may not by your own acts be forced to become your enemies. They will invade no rights of person or property. On the contrary your laws, your institutions, your usages will be scrupulously respected. There need be no fear that the quietude of any fireside will be disturbed unless the disturbance is caused by yourselves. Special directions have been given not to interfere with the condition of any persons held to domestic service; and in order that there may be no ground for mistake or pretext or misrepresentation commanders of regiments and corps have been instructed not to permit any such persons to come within their lines. The command of the expedition is intrusted to Brig. Gen. Henry H. Lockwood,* of Delaware, a State identical in some of the distinctive features of its social organization with your own. Portions of his force come from counties in Maryland bordering on one of yours. From him and from them you may be assured of the sympathy of near neighbors as well as friends if you do not repel it by hostile resistance or attack. Their mission is to assert the authority of the United States; to reopen your intercourse with the loyal States and especially with Maryland which has just proclaimed her devotion to the Union by the most triumphant vote in her political annals; to restore to commerce its accustomed guides by re-establishing the lights on your coast; to afford you a free export for the products of your labor and a free ingress for the necessities and comforts of life which you require in exchange; and in a word to put an end to the embarrassments and restrictions brought upon you by a causeless and unjustifiable rebellion.

If the calamities of intestine war which are desolating other districts of Virginia and have already crimsoned her fields with fraternal blood fall also upon you it will not be the fault of the Government. It asks only that its authority may be recognized. It sends among you a force too strong to be successfully opposed; a force which cannot be resisted in any other spirit than that of wantonness and malignity. If there are any among you who rejecting all overtures of friendship thus provoke retaliation and draw down upon themselves consequences which the Government is most anxious to avert, to their account must be laid the blood which may be shed and the desolation which may be brought upon peaceful homes. On all who are thus reckless of the obligations of humanity and duty, and on all who are found in arms the severest punishment warranted by the laws of war will be visited.

To those who remain in the quiet pursuit of their domestic occupations the public authorities assure all they can give peace, freedom from annoyance, protection from foreign and internal enemies, a guarantee of all constitutional and legal rights and the blessings of a just and parental Government.

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General, Commanding.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 18. 1861.
JOHN A. KENNEDY, Esq.,
Superintendent of Police, New York.

SIR: From extracts [from letters] which were found in possession of the Maurys recently arrested for conveying information to the insurrectionary States it appears that the following persons in New York have been engaged in receiving and forwarding correspondence between parties in the insurrectionary States and their sympathizers in Europe as well as in the loyal States: John Monroe & Co., Charles Le Cesne, C. A. Robert, Maury Brothers, Mr. Converse. Will you please cause a quiet but thorough watch to be kept over the movements of these parties, and after the arrival of the next foreign mail place them under surveillance and seize all correspondence and other papers and send them with your report to this Department?

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 18, 1861.

JOHN A. KENNEDY, Esq.,
Superintendent of Police, New York.

SIR: Herewith I transmit an extract from an intercepted letter written by William L. Yancey,* an agent in England of the persons in insurrection against the authority of the Government of the United States, addressed to his son who appears to be a captain in the forces of the insurgents at Mobile, Ala. From this extract you will learn the names of the parties in New York through whom the son is requested to send a reply. I deem it important that a watch should be kept over John Monroe & Co., and have to request that you will cause it to be done and report to me by telegraph whether in your judgment it is advisable to arrest them or any of them.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

JOHN A. KENNEDY, Esq.,
Superintendent of Police, New York.

SIR: Herewith I inclose an abstract from an intercepted letter† written by Charles Le Cesne, doing business at 24 William street, New York, and who appears to be engaged in affording aid and comfort to the insurgents by receiving and forwarding correspondence and by outfitting vessels and shipping merchandise to them. The Mr. Shafter referred to in this extract is probably James S., doing business at 73 Franklin street. Will you please keep a quiet but close watch upon the movements of those persons, and at the proper time after the arrival of the next foreign mail arrest and convey them to Fort Lafayette, secure all letters and other papers found in their possession and send them to me. I have notified the Navy Department of the probable sailing of the vessel referred to, but you had better keep a lookout for her and inform this Department of her name and the date of her departure.

Assistant Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have the honor to report that * * * Lieutenant-Colonel McPherson is about to leave for the West where he is ordered to report to General Halleck, and his absence will leave the post [Independence] without an officer. * * * I have communicated to Colonel Dimick, commanding at Fort Warren, your letter of the 13th instant relating to the transfer of the political prisoners to Fort Independence and am engaged with him in making the necessary arrangements. The absence of Colonel McPherson from this post will require the detail by the proper department of some officer to take command there and perhaps of an addition to the garrison. If Colonel Dimick remains at Fort Warren I take the liberty to suggest that his lieutenant (Buell) who has had the immediate charge of the prisoners and knows them all by sight would I should judge be a very suitable officer for the post if the trust can be confided to a lieutenant.

There are now about 115 political prisoners in Fort Warren, and this number can I think be conveniently accommodated in Fort Independence. To-morrow I am to visit and examine it with Colonel Dimick and after that will make the transfer as soon as it can be made ready for the purpose and Colonel Dimick receives his orders. In the meantime and until it is done when I will report at once to you I think all political prisoners might as well be sent to Fort Warren as before, and I have the honor to be,

Your obedient servant,

JOHN S. KEYES,
U. S. Marshal.

In regard to correspondence I see no objection to the free circulation of letters to all portions of the two counties in which the authority of the Government is re-established.

You are right in your opinion that no act of a rebel convention or legislature can be recognized. In all these respects the two counties must when they come back be in the statu quo before the rebellion. Until some principles of reorganization can be agreed upon either as a part of Maryland or of Western Virginia their corporate powers as counties will be sufficient to meet all their exigencies. I speak without having examined the statutes of Virginia, but on all these points I will write you hereafter. * * *

OFFICE U. S. ATTORNEY, Baltimore, November 21, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: In view of the recent arrest of Messrs. Mason and Slidell and of the discussions to which it may lead it may be of service to your Department to be informed of a case which justifies a very grave suspicion that a British official has lent his aid to an American vessel to violate the blockade off the coast of South Carolina. The schooner Adelaide, of Charleston, S. C., late in the month of August sailed from her home port and reached Nassau, New Providence, early in September. From thence she cleared for Saint John, New Brunswick, as an English vessel under an English register with English, Confederate and Palmetto flags on board. On September 6 she was captured off Stono Inlet by boats from the U. S. war steamer Flag, Capt. L. C. Sartori, and sent to Baltimore for condemnation, where she and her cargo have recently been forfeited for breaking the blockade.

It was alleged at the port of the claimants that the Adelaide had been sold in Nassau because she was unseaworthy, and that one Joseph Roberts was the purchaser; and that he changed her name and took out a British register. The sale, change of name and register were all the part of a contrivance, and it is difficult to resist the conviction that the registrar, Mr. F. Whitley, was cognizant of the schooner's destination and prostituted his official position in aid of the enterprise.

If it be desirable to establish the complicity of the officers of the English Government with measures in aid of the violation of the blockade it is not unlikely that the district attorneys of Philadelphia and New York may be in possession of information similar to this, and our consul at Nassau in this very case might discover facts corroborating my views of the conduct of the registrar.

I am, sir, yours, very respectfully,

WM. MEADE ADDISON,
U. S. Attorney.

Brig. Gen. H. H. LOCKWOOD,

Commanding Expedition to Eastern Shore.

GENERAL: Ascertain if possible the parties who committed the depredations referred to in your letter and order and send them back as directed in irons. If you have any thieves with you get rid of them as soon as possible. I wish the troops to be sent back here as soon as they can be spared. * * * Captain Knight thought two companies would be sufficient to hold the two counties. I would be glad to have your views on the subject. My impression was that it would be advisable to have 500 men in each county. The force in Accomac might winter in Drummondtown and the force in Northampton at Eastville, with a detachment of a few men from each to take care of the light at Cape Charles and Pungoteague. Early arrangements should be made to cover these troops for the winter, and as soon as you see what may be needed please advise me.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. DIX,

HEADQUARTERS DISTRICT OF SOUTHEAST MISSOURI,

Cairo, November 21, 1861.

COMMANDING OFFICER U. S. FORCES, Cape Girardeau, Mo.

SIR: I am directed by the commanding general to inform you that General Jeff. Thompson took from the Platte Valley on Tuesday and has now confined in New Madrid two men named William McMillan and James Merkle. These men are citizens of Illinois and were employed in Memphis before the commencement of this war, and had been there ever since. They are mechanics and were employed there as such. Not being able to procure passes they escaped to Paducah, Ky., took a boat for this place and immediately on their arrival here took passage on the Platte Valley for Saint Louis en route for Quincy, Ill., their home.

They never were employed as spies and never acted as such. They had no interview with the commanding general here and did not volunteer any information, and did not come here for that purpose. They can in no just sense be considered spies; they were simply Northern men who had availed themselves of an opportunity to escape to their homes and families.

If Thompson will release them and give them safe escort to our lines you will release such number of his men as he may think just and give them safe escort beyond our lines.

In communicating with Thompson you will send him a copy of this letter.

WM. S. HILLYER,
Captain and Aide-de-Camp.

HDQRS. FIRST MIL. DIST., MISSOURI STATE GUARD,
Camp Near New Madrid, November —, 1861.

Brig. Gen. U. S. GRANT, Cairo, Ill.:

Yours of the 21st, through Col. J. B. Plummer, commandant of Cape Girardeau, is at hand. The prisoners William McMillan and James Merkle were immediately forwarded to General Polk at Columbus, and I will send your letter in reference to them directly to him.

I will state in reference to these men that when I examined the steam-boat Platte Valley I found drawings purporting to be plans of the fortifications of Columbus and upon inquiry found McMillan and Merkle had either made the drawings or furnished the information, and from some parties on the boat I learned they had been very boastful of their success and the value of the information they had acquired.

I understand they have been sent to Memphis, but I will immediately lay your statement before General Polk, and although he may object to their leaving the Confederacy at this time (as they also worked at Columbus), yet I believe your statement will be sufficient to have them released from confinement.

Yours, most respectfully,

M. JEFF. THOMPSON,

413 BROOME STREET, NEW YORK, November 24, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

MY DEAR SIR: I wish to turn attention to a matter not included within the scope of your instructions to me: The number of prisoners in Fort Warren is large, the force is small and composed of inexperienced troops who are frequently changed. There is work going on which calls for a force of laborers and a constant passing in and out of civilians of the lowest class. On Saturdays the whole laboring force goes home; there can be and is no examination of their persons as they pass in and out. Out of this can come correspondence or the escape of an individual prisoner which would not be of much account, but a bold and desperate dash might take the fort much more cheaply than the Government took Port Royal.

The political prisoners have money and intoxicating liquors enough to subdue the virtue of a sentinel or two, and I see no impossibility in their taking Colonel Dimick prisoner. The suggestion of a possible resort to the lex talionis will put them all to thinking. The political and military prisoners are allowed to mix and confer at pleasure, which should not be, and altogether the business is conducted too loosely. It would be an improvement to transfer all the state prisoners to Fort Independence, and keep them under the charge of a corps of sappers and miners or other well-trained force, and with an officer in command who will feel that this is a business of life and death. I would not like to have it known to the military gentlemen that I have made these suggestions as I know nothing of war, &c. If the attention of the proper department is turned to the subject so as to secure investigation and attention it will suffice.

Yours, respectfully,

S. C. HAWLEY.

The consul accordingly addressed on the 22d of last month a letter to Lieutenant-Colonel Dennis of which I have the honor to inclose a copy.* No answer having been returned to it I am under the necessity of requesting your assistance in investigating the case.

But for this I could properly pass them as I shall all of the prisoners deemed to be disloyal now unless there is something special in their cases. * * *

The fourth client of Mr. Ludlow is Mr. William E. Kearney, of Clark County, Ky. He is thirty-eight years old; has a wife and seven children; a farmer and trader; has property. He claims to have voted with the Union party. I should say that this man might with safety be set at liberty but for the fact that he is complicated with some pecuniary conditions contingent upon his release. This seems to be the fact; and if so there is danger of evil report to arise from it.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

Brigadier-General LOCKWOOD.

GENERAL: I have received your three dispatches of the 22d instant, dated at Drummondtown, and am much gratified with the judicious and efficient manner in which you are carrying out my instructions and with the readiness with which the people of Accomac are disposed to accede to the friendly overtures made to them in my proclamation. All that has been promised should be fully executed, and the most liberal interpretation should be given to its declarations. * * *

There are two or three matters on which you ask my directions:

First. As to the officers of the volunteer force who have been arrested. They were not found in arms as I understand. In that case I think they may justly claim the immunities pledged by my proclamation, but in order to become entitled to them they must recognize the authority of the United States. This test we have a right to prescribe, and I know no other than the oath of allegiance required by section 1 of the act of Congress of August 6, 1861, chapter 64, of the first session of the Thirty-seventh Congress. * * * Should they decline to take this oath they cannot be considered as belonging to the classes of persons to whom the benefits of the proclamation are promised. In that case you will if they were not found in arms release them on their parole of honor to abstain from all acts of hostility to the United States, &c. I inclose a form for the purpose, marked B. If they decline giving their parole in the form prescribed you will send them to Fort McHenry.

* For these cases see post.

Second. As to civil officers. It is desirable that the administration of the civil and municipal concerns of the two counties should go on if possible without any interruption whatever. If any of the civil officers now in the execution of their trusts have taken an oath of allegiance to the Confederate Government they should be required to take the oath inclosed, marked A.* It is especially desirable that the courts should hold their sessions as usual so that justice may be administered without adding to the law's delay.

Third. If the people return to their allegiance to the United States they should make such temporary provision for their own government not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States as they may think best. For the time being it seems to me that it would be well for them to act with Western Virginia, and hold elections by proclamation of the governor as you suggest. Before taking any action on the subject myself I should like to know the views of their discreet men and see what is done in the meetings about to be held. I think it very important on their own account that they should be represented in the next Congress, and I have very little doubt that a member duly elected will be received if they act in concurrence with Western Virginia. As preliminary to this it seems to me very desirable if not necessary that they should send a member to the legislature of Western Virginia.

I intended to have stated in connection with what I have said in regard to the officers you have secured that I suppose them to belong to a volunteer force raised in the two counties, although you call them officers of the Confederate Army. My information was different, but if I am mistaken in this particular you will hold them till I can obtain the direction of the Government as to the disposition to be made of them.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General.

[Inclosure.]

B.

I, ———, do give my parole of honor that I will do no act in hostility to the Government of the United States; that I will not go beyond the limits of the county of ——— without permission of the commanding officer of the U. S. forces in said county; that I will report myself in person to the said commanding officer once in seven days; that I will surrender myself to him whenever required to do so, and that in the meantime I will hold no correspondence or conversation with any person on political subjects, and have no communication direct or indirect with the States in insurrection against the United States or with any person within the said insurrectionary States.

You will therefore please inform all the prisoners confined at Fort Warren that this Department will not recognize any person as an attorney in such cases, and that if the fact comes to the knowledge of the Department that any prisoner has agreed to pay any attorney a sum of money or to give to him anything of value as a consideration for interceding for the release of such prisoner that fact will be held as an additional reason for continuing the confinement of such person. DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 27, 1861.

Maj. Gen. JOHN A. DIX, Baltimore, Md.

GENERAL: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 26th instant inclosing a list of prisoners confined at Fort McHenry and suggesting that it would be a great convenience if they could be sent away. In reply I have to request that you will send them all to Fort Lafayette, New York Harbor.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 27, 1861.

Col. MARTIN BURKE, Fort Lafayette, New York Harbor.

COLONEL: The Secretary of State has been informed* that Mr. William H. Ludlow has represented to some of the prisoners confined in Fort Lafayette that he possesses or can use some influence with the Government in their behalf, and has made it a ground for obtaining from them money in hand or engagements for money or other valuable considerations.

Discountenancing and repudiating all such practices the Secretary of State desires that all the state prisoners may understand that they are expected to revoke all such engagements now existing and avoid any hereafter, as they can only lend new complications and embarrassments in the cases of prisoners in whose behalf the Government might be disposed to act with liberality.

All prisoners can communicate directly by letter to either the Secretary of State through Colonel Burke himself or any unpaid and disinterested agent whom they may find for that purpose.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

(Same to Col. Justin Dimick, Fort Warren, Boston.)

F. W. SEWARD,

Assistant Secretary of State of the United States.

SIR: * * * Colonel Dimick had received no orders relating to Fort Independence and I am therefore still waiting for him before transferring the prisoners to that fort. I am still quite desirous that it should be done as in every way preferable to the present location. I have no additional facts to report in the matter of H. C. Wainwright.†

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN S. KEYES,
U. S. Marshal.

TO THE POLITICAL PRISONERS IN FORT LAFAYETTE:

I am instructed by the Secretary of State to inform you that the Department of State of the United States will not recognize any one as an attorney for political prisoners, and will look with distrust upon all applications for release through such channels, and that such applications will be regarded as additional reasons for declining to release the prisoners, and further that if such prisoners wish to make any communication to Government they are at liberty and requested to make it directly to the State Department.

SETH C. HAWLEY.

WILLARD'S HOTEL,
Washington, D. C., November 28, 1861.

W. H. SEWARD.

DEAR SIR: I am both pained and mortified to hear this morning of information given to you that I had acted as counsel in cases released from Fort Lafayette. Permit me to assure you on the honor of a gentleman that in no one of the three cases, viz, Colonel Berret, H. A. Reeves or J. McMaster, had I ever acted as such or received in any way directly or indirectly therefor any compensation. I mention those three cases specifically as being the only ones which I have any reason to believe were released through any application of mine on their behalf. I apply the same distinct and emphatic statement to any other released cases. And not only so but I have refused to receive from the parties named a refunding of money paid out of my own pocket, traveling expenses, &c., on their behalf.

I should sincerely regret any loss or diminution of your good opinion, and I take this opportunity to tender to you my grateful acknowledgments for any and all kindness and consideration which you have shown me. I shall next week take my place in the Army. I know that I shall like it and am determined to follow it. My heart has always been in this contest, and whatever influence I may possess politically at home or in our State at large has been uniformly exercised to sustain the Government without any reservation. After familiarity with military duties I will ask you to aid me to a permanent position in the regular Army.

With renewed assurance of my friendship to you, I am, yours, truly,
WM. H. LUDLOW.

HEADQUARTERS DIVISION, Baltimore, Md., November 28, 1861.

Brig. Gen. H. H. LOCKWOOD, Commanding Eastern Shore.

GENERAL: Your dispatches of the 26th instant* by Captain Knight are received. It is natural that our Union friends in Accomac County should feel nervous and desire to get rid of their late oppressors. While we look calmly and dispassionately to important and more remote results we must do all we can consistently with our public pledges to the people of Accomac and Northampton to give courage to those who desire to place the affairs of the counties on their former footing. In the language of the proclamation the Government asks that its authority may be recognized. In pursuance of this purpose we have a right to require as you have done that those who are in the execution of public trusts should take the oath of allegiance. If they refuse they decline to recognize the authority of the Government, and can claim none of the benefits or immunities promised by the proclamation. On the contrary by seeking to defeat the very object for which the expedition was sent into these counties they array themselves against the Government and cannot expect to be treated as friends. If the county clerk as is alleged has openly exerted his influence to dissuade the magistrates from taking the oath of allegiance he should be arrested for an overt act of hostility to the Government.

The rules by which you should be governed may be stated briefly as follows:

1. No arrests should be made for acts done before the proclamation was published.

2. No man should be disturbed who acquiesces in the authority of the Government no matter how cold or reluctant or sullen his submission.

3. Any person who exerts his influence to dissuade individuals from attending the meetings of the people called to declare their allegiance to the United States cannot for the reasons assigned be considered as entitled to the benefits and immunities promised by the proclamation. On the contrary he is to be regarded as an enemy to be dealt with at your discretion.

4. Any person who at any such meeting resists a proposition to declare the allegiance of the two counties to the United States can only be regarded as an adherent of the rebel Government and coming within the category of No. 3.

5. The twenty persons who have been named to you as deserving arrest should be watched, and at the very first indication of hostility to the Government they should be taken into custody. But if they have submitted in good faith they are entitled to the protection pledged by the proclamation. It must, however, be a real and not a pretended submission. It must be exemplified by an abstinence in fact from all attempts to dissuade others from an open and public declaration of their allegiance to the United States. And if you have good reasons to believe that any one of them is exerting a secret influence against the Government you may with perfect propriety send for him and require him to take the oath.

Now let me say one word to our Union friends. I understand their feelings perfectly. I have gone through the same process here which you are passing through in Accomac County. I have succeeded with the aid of a very judicious police in re-establishing order and bringing back the State to its true allegiance; but I have been constrained to differ frequently from our Union friends. They ask too much. They looked more to forcible measures than to a quiet, firm and steady adherence to fixed principles. Our Union friends in Accomac must not be unreasonable. They must act boldly and decisively, and they will beat their adversaries without difficulty. With all we have done and are doing to support them; with the certainty that they will be sustained under all circumstances, they will have no excuse if they do not come out fearlessly no matter what the course of secret traitors may be. As men of sense they cannot fail to see that treachery cannot long be kept secret, and that their game is a sure one. I trust therefore they will come out promptly and strongly and set the authors of the past mischief at defiance. If these mischief-makers continue their operations you will soon detect and bring them to punishment.

I send $2,000 in specie per Captain Tyler. The Kent will wait till Monday if necessary for the Seventeenth Massachusetts.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 29, 1861.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 7th instant in which after referring to your note of the 10th [6th] ultimo, relative to the manner in which the master and crew of the British schooner Revere appeared to have been treated subsequently to the capture of their vessel by the U. S. ship Cambridge, you request this Government to take into its serious consideration certain statements concerning another case of the same kind, to wit, that of the Louisa Agnes, in which two of the crew of that vessel also were placed in irons after her capture by the Cambridge, and the master did not meet with that considerate treatment which might have been reasonably expected.

In reply I now have the honor to inclose to you the copy of a communication of the 23d instant from the Secretary of the Navy on the subject, to whom these cases were referred.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to your lordship the assurance of my high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

[Inclosure.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, November 23, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 12th instant with inclosure from Lord Lyons in relation to the treatment of the master and part of the crew of the British schooner Louisa Agnes I have the honor to inform you that immediately upon its receipt Flag-Officer Goldsborough was directed to investigate the circumstances of the alleged ill-treatment of the crews of Louisa Agnes and also of the British schooner Revere by the officers of the U. S. S. Cambridge, and I inclose herewith the reply of Commodore Goldsborough together with copies of the papers therewith inclosed being reports of the officers of that vessel and of the prize masters who carried the schooner into port.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

GIDEON WELLES.

[Sub-inclosure.]

U. S. FLAG-SHIP MINNESOTA,
Hampton Roads, November 19, 1861.

Hon. GIDEON WELLES, Secretary of the Navy.

SIR: In reply to your communication of the 15th instant in relation to the treatment of the crews of the British schooners Revere and Louisa Agnes I have the honor to transmit to you herewith papers numbered from 1 to 4 inclusive just received from Commander William A. Parker, of the Cambridge.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

L. M. GOLDSBOROUGH,
Flag-Officer.

[Inclosure to sub-inclosure, No. 1.]

U. S. STEAMER CAMBRIDGE,
Newport News, Va., November 18, 1861.

Flag Officer L. M. GOLDSBOROUGH,
Comdg. N. Atlantic Blockading Squadron, Hampton Roads.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 17th instant I have to state that two of the crews only of the captured vessels (which were suspected of an attempt to break the blockade) were sent home in their respective vessels by order of Flag Officer Stringham.

The irons were placed on board for the protection of the prize masters and to be used by them when deemed necessary.

I forward herewith the statements of Messrs. Maies and Wells, the prize masters of the Revere and Louisa Agnes, as also a statement signed by the officers of the Cambridge who were on board at the time in question relative to the treatment of the crews while retained by me.

I am very certain that no unnecessary harshness or unkindness was used toward either the masters or crews of the captured vessels while on board the Cambridge. They were permitted to move about the decks in perfect liberty through the day. At night a sentry was placed over them for safety; they were not otherwise confined but had all the privileges of passengers; were regularly served with full rations and had as good accommodations as the ship could afford. I understood that when they left this vessel the captains and their men expressed themselves highly pleased with their treatment.

I can assure you, sir, the parties in question were not subjected to any unnecessary restraint; neither were they regarded in the light of prisoners of war; on the contrary they had full communication with the whole crew of this vessel. I am astonished at their complaints of ill-treatment and emphatically deny their assertions. I frequently enjoined on Lieutenant Gwin (first lieutenant and executive officer) that I wished the captured crews to have every indulgence their case would admit and that they should be made as comfortable as possible. As no complaints were made by them while here I cannot but construe it as an afterthought on their part.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM A. PARKER,
Commander.

Commander WILLIAM A. PARKER.

SIR: Having received orders to give a written statement of the treatment of the two men comprising part of the crew of the schooner Louisa Agnes (taken as a prize by this vessel), placed under my charge on the 9th of September, 1861, according to orders received from my executive and boarding officer I proceeded to place them in single irons, the boarding officer having this order executed before leaving me in charge. I kept them in irons three hours and liberated them until 8 p. m.; then put them in irons for the night, and on the 10th took them out of irons at 7 a. m.; at 8 p. m. put them in irons again for the last time, and liberated them the following morning, it being left optional with me to keep them in irons in the daytime but explicitly ordered to confine them during the night. They were in single irons twenty-five hours out of the fifty-six hours of passage to New York and their treatment while under my care was as good as circumstances would permit.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. MAIES,
Master's Mate.

After a careful examination of the foregoing statement I am willing to testify by oath to its correctness.

Commander WILLIAM A. PARKER,

U. S. Steamer Cambridge.

SIR: Having received orders to make out a written statement of the treatment of the two prisoners on board prize schooner Revere, placed in my charge on the 10th of September, I have the honor to make the following report:

On taking charge of the vessel I proceeded according to orders received from the executive officer to place the two men in irons, the object as stated being to prevent their rising and retaking the vessel. For the first two or three days the men were confined in single irons in the daytime and double at night; after that as they were quiet and orderly I allowed them their liberty during the greater part of the day but confined them at night. They were treated as well under my orders as the circumstances would admit.

I remain, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY W. WELLS,
Master's Mate.

After carefully reviewing the foregoing statement I certify that I am willing to take oath that it is correct.

HENRY W. WELLS.

We the undersigned officers of the U. S. steamer Cambridge were attached to her at the time of the capture of the Louisa Agnes and Revere, British schooners. We would hereby testify that the captains of the above vessels and their men had good accommodations—all that the ship could afford; were regularly served with rations, and upon their departure from this steamer spoke in high terms of approbation of their treatment. At all times on board they appeared perfectly satisfied and made no complaints. The above-mentioned parties had free intercourse with the crew of the Cambridge both on and below decks, and in all respects were passengers. The absence of Lieut. William Gwin's name to this paper is accounted for by his being detached from this vessel and ordered to the brig Perry November 12.

SIR: I inclose several letters* belonging to parties in New York which have been examined and appear to contain nothing objectionable. I will thank you to visit the persons to whom they are addressed, viz, Messrs. Charles Le Cesne and Cæsar August Robert, and tell them that the Government has conclusive evidence that they have suffered themselves to be made a medium for the transmission of correspondence between the insurrectionary States and Europe some of which is treasonable in character, and require them to engage upon honor that hereafter they will desist from the practice, and if any letter of the character mentioned come into their possession they will voluntarily deliver them to you for examination. WASHINGTON, November 30, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: I have carefully perused the papers communicated to you by the Secretary of the Navy, of which you did me the honor to send me copies with your note of yesterday's date. These papers establish the following facts: That two seamen of the British schooner Revere which was captured on a charge of breaking the blockades were for two or three days confined in single irons in the daytime and double irons at night; that after that they were left at liberty during the greater part of the day but confined at night; that two seamen of the British schooner Louisa Agnes which was also captured on a charge of breaking the blockade were kept in single irons during twenty-five out of fifty-six hours, and that in both cases this harsh treatment was inflicted in pursuance of express orders from the executive officer of the U. S. ship Cambridge.

It is stated that in the case of the seamen of the Revere this severe measure was resorted to in order to prevent their rising and retaking the vessel. No information, however, is given from which an opinion can be formed as to the reasonableness of the precaution. No evidence is adduced of there having been ground for suspecting the men of a design to retake the vessels or for apprehending that they had the means of executing such a design.

The Secretary of the Navy does not say with respect to either case whether he approves or disapproves the proceedings of the officers of the Cambridge. He does not express any intention of taking measures to secure considerate treatment in future to British seamen in similar circumstances.

The papers which you have been so good as to send me do not afford any information concerning the complaint made by the master of the Louisa Agnes of the treatment he experienced on board the U. S. steamer Susquehanna.

You will I am sure consider that I am doing no more than my duty in asking for further explanations concerning these grave matters.

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

LYONS.

OFFICE SUPERINTENDENT OF METROPOLITAN POLICE,
*New York, November 30, 1861.*Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: On the arrival of the Aspinwall steamer with Colonel Buchanan's regiment the detectives on board were informed that Lieutenant Scott had talked in a disloyal manner on the passage; that he was a son of Rev. Doctor Scott, of California, formerly of Virginia. This information was obtained for me by my detectives from his fellow-passengers. His name being given to them as Robert N. Scott they very naturally supposed he might be Robert G. Scott, late U. S. consul at Rio Janeiro, whom they had orders to arrest on his way home by the way of Europe. He was accordingly brought to my office.

I discovered their mistake at once, but to avoid doing anything that would bear the appearance of rebuking them for their extra vigilance I directed him to be held until his baggage could be examined and sent one of them, Officer Roach, back to the steamer for the baggage, directing it to be brought to headquarters for examination. In the course of two hours the officer reported to me that when he went to the steamer Colonel Buchanan interposed and prevented him from obtaining possession of it, on which I directed Colonel Buchanan to be brought to the office in person. I was not in when he arrived, and having to wait the colonel seemed to have lost his temper somewhat with his time. I found him in the office of Mr. President Bowen in company with Mr. Bowen and Mr. Commissioner Acton. He complained at having been brought there and explained as the reason for stopping the baggage that the officer who was sent for it was not in uniform; that he did not exhibit a written order; that he did not show to him any evidence that he was an officer. My reply to which was that officers on detective duty were not required to wear uniform; that it was as unusual to give a private policeman an order in writing as it was to give written orders to private soldiers; that if the detective had been required to show his authority he would have produced it on demand. After reaching my office and before I had an interview with him he had written an order to the purser of the ship to deliver up the baggage to my officer which he handed to me. A few unpleasant words were used that it is not necessary to repeat and he was allowed to go.

In the conversation he was very indignant that I should suspect Adjutant Scott, one of his staff in whom he said he had the utmost confidence. He was much excited at the time and spoke as people do under such circumstances. He spoke warmly in favor of Adjutant Scott.

This is in reply to a telegram I have just received from the War Department signed B. F. Davis [Lieutenant U. S. Army] whom I don't know.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

COLONEL: I take advantage of the departure of Señor Sepulva, Ramon Carillo's brother-in-law, to inform you of the arrest of the Showalter party, Showalter with them. It consists of sixteen men, each armed with rifles and a pair of revolvers. They gave us a hard chase but we finally captured them. They parleyed but finally concluded not to resist, although against the advice of Showalter.

The names of the party are: T. A. Wilson, Tennessee; W. Woods, Missouri; Charles Pendroth, Kentucky; William Sands, Tennessee; T. L. Roberts, South Carolina; R. H. Wood, Mississippi; T. W. Woods, Virginia; J. W. Sampson, Kentucky; S. A. Rogers, Tennessee; J. Lawrence, Arkansas; Levi Rogers, Alabama; Henry Crowell, Pennsylvania; William Turner, Georgia; Dan Showalter, Pennsylvania; A. King, Tennessee. Retook two of the party on the 27th near the post, viz, E. B. Summers and F. V. Chum. They were the advance party, eighteen in all. I am now examining them, and will send you by express that will leave here to-night some time full particulars. They now regret that they did not resist; if they had they would have given us a hard fight. There is no doubt that every one of them is a secessionist and are on their way to lend aid and comfort to the enemy. I would like to know as soon as possible what to do with them. They have pack-mules and are well fitted out and a desperate set of men.

I am under great obligations to Francisco Ocampo for my success. It is reported that some eighty men are getting ready and on the road. I will keep a good watch for them.

Very respectfully,

EDWIN A. RIGG,

SIR: His Excellency Governor Andrew directs me to inclose to you a copy of a letter which was sent to him by Hon. George Morey, one of our most experienced and influential citizens, who was one of the Presidential electors and whose views and opinions therein expressed he believes are worthy of the serious attention of the government. The letter as you will see by its date was sent to the governor during his absence in Washington or it would have been forwarded earlier. His excellency hopes that you will take an early occasion to present the substance of Mr. Morey's views to the President with the assurance from him that Mr. Morey's anxiety is shared by many of our most prominent and discreet citizens.

BOSTON, November 21, 1861.

His Excellency JOHN A. ANDREW.

DEAR SIR: The number of ordinary prisoners at Fort Warren, in our harbor, is about 700, and the number of state prisoners is something more than 100 as I am informed. Amongst the state prisoners are several persons of great ability and energy. There are some possessed of large means. There is a banker from Savannah whose name I do not recollect who is said to be very rich. Our banker, George B. Blake, assures me that this Savannah banker is worth several millions. It is supposed he has made this year one to two millions by speculations in cotton. In a short time the arch traitors Slidell and Mason with their secretaries are to be added to the congregation at the fort. Slidell is very wealthy, and Eustis, his secretary of legation, married the daughter of Corcoran, the rich banker at Washington who is worth three or four millions, and is without doubt a secessionist.

I am very sure of Corcoran's proclivities from what he said to me last May in Washington. Now when it is considered how much talent, energy, deviltry and wealth are congregated in this one fort it seems to me there is infinite danger that a successful escape may be made, especially when the men placed there to guard these rascals are only 300 or 400 raw troops. I think the arch traitors, say thirty or forty of the whole number of the state prisoners, ought to be placed in the vacant cells of the State prison (especially as the Confederate Government has now put many of our officers in separate cells at Charleston and Richmond), or if not in the State prison let them be kept separate at Fort Independence or elsewhere. I hope you will confer with the President and powers at Washington before you leave and see that measures shall be taken of the most effective character by which these rascals shall be secured against all possibility of escape. Why should not one or more ships of war be stationed near Fort Warren? Suppose some strong iron-clad steamer should come along and co-operate with those prisoners?

Of course Mr. Mallory (Secretary of the Navy in secesh) resides in Richmond. The daughter, Mrs. Bishop, is in constant correspondence with her parents and their letters are mailed to her in Baltimore. DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 3, 1861.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your lordship's note of the 30th of November last in which you review the explanations of the Secretary of the Navy which I had submitted to you concerning the cases of two seamen of the British schooner Revere and two other seamen of the British schooner Louisa Agnes, which two schooners were captured, though at different times, in attempts to break the blockade of the ports held by the insurgents. I have read your objections to those explanations with great care and as I trust with candor, inspired by a sincere desire to concede to the complainants whom you represent any redress to which they might be found entitled, and to preserve the best possible understanding with the Government of Great Britain.

The Secretary's explanations do in fact show as you have assumed that the two seamen of the schooner Revere were confined for two or three days in single irons in the daytime and in double irons during the night, and that after the period thus passed they were left at liberty during the greater part of the day but confined at night. I cannot admit, however, that you are perfectly just in calling this confinement "hard treatment." You notice the explanation that confinement of the seamen with irons to the extent practiced was resorted to in order to prevent their rising and retaking the vessel; but you object that no information is given from which an opinion can be formed as to the reasonableness of the precaution, and that no evidence is adduced of there having been ground for suspecting the men of a design to retake the vessel or for apprehending that they had the means of executing such a design. Whether the restraints practiced upon the two seamen in question were "hard treatment" and a "severe measure" as you have characterized them, or whether it was proper treatment of course depends altogether as you seem to admit upon the circumstance whether those restraints exceeded the rigor which reasonable prudence required for the security of the capturing vessel and her prize on their way to port for adjudication.

You seemed to have assumed that any confinement of the seamen especially in irons in such a case must by law be presumed to be unnecessary and therefore unreasonable and severe, and that consequently it devolves upon the officer who makes the capture to exculpate himself from the general charge of hardness or severity by showing that the rigor practiced was necessary in the act complained of. I submit on the contrary that in these as in all other cases it rests with the complainant to show in his statement the facts and circumstances which constitute the grievance before the accused party can be called upon to deny or at least justify the conduct alleged against him. I proceed to examine the case of the two seamen of the Revere in the light of this rule.

On the 6th of October your lordship addressed me a note in which you stated that you therewith handed to me a copy of a dispatch as well as a copy of a letter and an attested copy of an affidavit. You added that you desired to recommend to my favorable consideration the request to which those papers referred that the mate of the British schooner Revere, who appeared to be detained at Fortress Monroe, might appear at Boston as a witness for the defense of the vessel before the prize court at that city. You added that you desired also to direct my attention to the unusual manner in which the master and crew of the Revere appeared to have been treated, and especially to the fact of two of the crew having been kept (as it would seem very unjustly) in irons. You closed with requesting me to return the attested copy of the affidavit to you.

Your request that the captain might be allowed to appear at the prize court was promptly granted. The attested copy of an affidavit was returned to you as requested without a copy of it having been taken in the Department, as it was not then supposed that you thought it would be useful beyond the purpose of showing that you had grounds for calling my attention to the subject of the confinement of the seamen. It is necessary to state that the dispatch was silent upon the subject of the confinement of the seamen. A copy of your note together with a copy of the dispatch annexed to it was on the 7th day of October, the very day of their receipt, by me submitted to the Secretary of the Navy with a request in general terms for the information necessary to enable me to reply to the note.

On the 11th of November I had the honor to receive from your lordship a second note bearing date on the 7th of that month in which you recited that on the 10th of October (meaning the 6th) you had directed my attention to the unusual manner in which the master and crew of the British schooner Revere appeared to have been treated after the capture of their vessel by the U. S. ship Cambridge, and especially to the fact that two of the crew had been kept in irons. You then proceeded to lay before me another and kindred complaint about the rigor practiced as you assumed upon two seamen of another and different vessel. But you gave me no information whatever concerning the two seamen of the Revere. A copy of this last paper was transmitted by me to the Secretary of the Navy on the 12th day of November. The Secretary of the Navy having called Flag Officer Goldsborough's attention to the two complaints as thus submitted to me in very general terms, that officer reported to the Secretary of the Navy by sending him the papers, copies of which were transmitted to you and which you have found so unsatisfactory. These papers show that the irons which had been used had been placed on board for the protection of the prize-master and to be used by him when deemed necessary. I am informed that irons are always provided and kept on board blockading vessels as a necessary precaution. So customary is this that a naval officer who being charged with the maintaining of a blockade should lose his own vessel or even a prize for want of this precaution would justly incur punishment at the hands of his government. The papers show that Lieutenant Gwin, the executive officer of the Cambridge, certainly had injunctions from the commander that the crews were to have every indulgence their case would admit of, and that they should be made as comfortable as possible. Upon the capture of the Revere he put the prize-master on board of her with the irons with instructions to use them if he should deem it necessary. The prize-master going with probably only two or three loyal seamen spared from the Cambridge, it appears did deem it necessary at first to put the two captured seamen in irons until their dispositions should be ascertained. When it is considered that these seamen were strangers to him, captured, disappointed in the objects of their voyage and conveyed against their wishes and will to a distant and to them foreign port by an authority in the exercise of a belligerent power, I think that it might have been reasonably apprehended by the prize-master that if left from the first entirely free they might attempt the life of the prize-master or at least the deliverance of the prize. Using the same form of illustration as before I think that the prize-master who having irons put into his hands for his own safety and the security of the prize vessel should nevertheless have lost the prize by its being recaptured by captives whom he had not confined would justly be dismissed from the naval service. Whether the prize-master might not with safety have released the two seamen from their confinement in irons at an earlier day or hour remains uncertain. It should seem right if he has exercised his best discretion in which his discretion was necessarily the rule of his conduct, unless indeed it shall be affirmatively shown that he willfully or negligently abused his power over the unwilling and reluctant seamen. That he did not so abuse his power seems to me to be clearly proved by the fact that all of the officers of the Cambridge testified that the seamen made no complaints on leaving the Cambridge, and on the contrary spoke in good terms of their treatment, and that the commander of the Cambridge declares that he is astonished at the complaint of ill treatment, and with the best sources of information open to him denies those assertions altogether.

It remains to say that the Government having no sufficient ground cannot agree that the two seamen in question in the present case were hardly treated or made to suffer unnecessary hardship.

For this reason I cannot admit what your lordship seems to claim—that the Secretary of the Navy ought to have expressed his disapproval of the proceedings of the officers of the Cambridge, or that he ought in view of the whole case to have expressed an intention to take means to secure considerate treatment in future to British seamen in similar circumstances. At the same time this Government means and intends to conduct its operations upon the highest principles of humanity known in maritime proceedings, and especially with a view to the exercise of justice and moderation so far as these proceedings affect Great Britain and other friendly powers, and therefore a copy of these papers will be addressed to the flag officers of the blockading squadron, accompanied by an instruction from the Secretary of the Navy to use irons only when and so long as necessary, and in all cases to practice the utmost kindness consistent with the safety of captives and prizes toward seamen captured in attempting to break the blockade.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to your lordship the assurance of my high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 3, 1861.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I refer again to your lordship's note of the 30th of November for the purpose of saying that the case of the two seamen of the British schooner Louisa Agnes which was captured on a charge of attempting to run the blockade seems to stand so nearly on the same footing with that of the two seamen captured on board of the British schooner Revere which I have discussed in a previous note of this date, that I pray your lordship to accept my reply in the latter case as expressing the opinion of the Government upon the former case also.

I have the honor to be, with high consideration, your lordship's obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

You will see by the tone of the paper that it is a dangerous sheet, and we would like to have it suppressed if it could be done. The last grand jury here found a true bill against it, but as our judge is a Democrat it is uncertain that anything will be done with it. In one of the former issues it came down in the strongest terms against the last Congress, calling it a bloody Congress, &c. Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I beg leave to lay before your Department the record* of a case of Joseph M. P. Nolan, a British subject confined in the military prison of this city on suggestion of F. W. Seward, Assistant Secretary. In addition to the facts presented by the record I desire to say that Mr. Wilkins, the British consul at this point, after having satisfied himself of Nolan's unquestioned disloyalty refused to interfere officially in the matter. Upon Nolan's examination he refused to give any explanation of his letter; refused to state that he would not take up arms against the Government; refused to promise that he would remain neutral during the present rebellion. Through Mr. Wilkins' friendly intercession with General Curtis and myself and with an idea that if discharged his imprisonment might have the effect of inducing him to restrain his words and acts in the future I ordered his release, accompanying the order with a letter to the prisoner as suggested by General Curtis. His reply is contained in the letter of Lieutenant Butterworth addressed to myself, which is part of the record. I immediately withdrew the order for his discharge and he remained a prisoner.

The only motive I can possibly conceive for his conduct is the desire to become celebrated. My motive in presenting the matter at this time to the Department is that I understand that Mr. Wilkins, the British consul, will present the matter to Lord Lyons. He informs me that he will clearly present to his lordship the disloyalty of the prisoner and his own refusal to interfere in the matter for that reason. Mr. W. is himself a warm friend of the Government and all his sympathies are with it in the efforts to put down rebellion. I am sure he will not interpose his official position to protect a subject of Great Britain who departs from the strict neutrality ordered by the Queen.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

GEO. E. LEIGHTON,
Captain and Provost-Marshal.

HDQRS. CITY GUARD, PROVOST-MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 6, 1861.

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with a request of the Secretary of State just made of you to report the facts and circumstances in the case of

* Not found.

Benjamin J. Cross, a prisoner confined in the Old Capitol Building, I have the honor to report as follows:

I find on file in my office a letter addressed to yourself, of which the following is a copy and which seems to be the initiation of the case:

HEADQUARTERS CORPS OF OBSERVATION,
Poolesville, Md., October 10, 1861.

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER,
Provost-Marshal, Army of the Potomac, Washington, D. C.

GENERAL: I forward to you as a prisoner Mr. [B.] Jackson Cross who was this morning arrested by the Thirty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers at Seneca. Mr. Cross is brother-in-law of Doctor Causten, a member of the President's Mounted Guard lately in the service of the United States from the District of Columbia, who was taken prisoner in his own house near Seneca in May last by Virginia troops said to have been led there by this Mr. Cross. Lieut. Col. Samuel [W.] Owen, of the Kentucky [Pennsylvania] Cavalry (Colonel Averell), was captain of the company and can give testimony or information in the case. Mr. Causten, notary public on F street near Fifteenth, can also give information. Young Mr. Causten yet remains a prisoner in the hands of the rebels by the act as it is alleged of this Mr. Cross.

Very respectfully, I am, general, your most obedient servant,

CHAS. P. STONE,
Brigadier-General, Commanding.

[Indorsement on back of the letter.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 11, 1861.

I believe the facts herein stated to be true.

S. W. OWEN,
Lieutenant-Colonel Kentucky [Pennsylvania] Cavalry.

On the 7th of November I detailed one of my operatives to further investigate the matter. He learned from two nieces of young Causten at the residence of their grandfather on F street, near Fifteenth, that their uncle, the Doctor Causten above mentioned, was a brother-in-law of Cross; that they had understood that on the day before their uncle's arrest he went to the house of Cross at his (Cross') invitation, where he was captured by Virginia troops said to have been guided there by Cross. They further stated that they had been informed that their uncle was then a prisoner at Raleigh, N. C.; that Lieutenant-Colonel Owen knew more of the matter, &c.

On the 8th of November the same operative visited the camp of the Kentucky [Pennsylvania] cavalry on the Virginia side of the Potomac for the purpose of examining Lieutenant-Colonel Owen on the subject. Colonel Owen stated that Causten, the man who it was alleged had been betrayed to the rebels by Cross, was a member of the President's Mounted Guard of which he (Owen) was captain and which was in the service of the United States; that some time in May last Causten went to the house of Cross in Seneca, Md., to see his wife who was on a visit there, she being a sister of Mrs. Cross; that while he was there an officer of the Virginia army by the name of White came with a detachment of rebel soldiers and took him prisoner, carrying him to Virginia where he has been ever since; that he (Owen) went with the District volunteers to the vicinity of Seneca, near Edwards Ferry, a short time after the capture of Causten and remained there four or five weeks; that while there he had the house of Cross watched all the time and Cross never came to it; that on inquiry he learned that on the day of Causten's capture Cross was seen to go over the river at Edwards Ferry into Virginia; that a short time afterward White with his squad of men crossed over from Virginia at the ferry, proceeded straight to Cross' house, captured Causten and returned with him into Virginia; that it was the belief of all the persons in the vicinity who were cognizant of the affair that Cross betrayed Causten into the hands of the enemy; that Cross never came back from Virginia until about the time of his arrest; that General Stone had kept a watch on the place and had set several traps to catch White and Cross, but did not succeed while he (Owen) was in the vicinity.

From a letter of James H. Causten, of this city, on file in my office dated December 5, 1861, I learned further that his son, Manuel C. Causten, the above-mentioned captive of the rebels, is now a prisoner in Raleigh, N. C.; that a few days after his capture the same or some other rebel party forcibly took from the stable at the same place his horse and equipments and still retain the same; that since the capture of his son he has on the recommendation of the Secretary of State, Mr. Seward, been appointed a first lieutenant in the new Nineteenth Regiment of the U. S. Army, his commission as such as the father understands now awaiting his release from the rebels.

I further learn from refugee Union parties from the vicinity of Dranesville, Va., opposite Edwards Ferry, that Jack Cross has always had the distinguished credit in that neighborhood of having betrayed his own brother-in-law (Causten) from his Maryland home into the hands of the rebels, and that Jack has always been a great crony of the Virginia rebels, freely and fully enjoying their hospitality until their pressing invitations to carry one of their muskets and if necessary stop the balls of the Federal muskets so annoyed him and conflicted with his idea of personal safety that he again sought the quietude and felicity of his Federal-protected fireside, with what result the foregoing report discloses.

I also understand from parties from the vicinity of Seneca, Md., that at the time of the capture of Causten an ill feeling existed against him on the part of Cross (growing out of family affairs) which it was thought led to the treacherous and disloyal conduct of the latter.

Unless Benjamin Jackson Cross (as I understand his name to be) can satisfactorily explain the foregoing charges against him—where he was on the day of Causten's capture, &c.—I submit that there is but one true course for the Government to pursue and that is to hold Cross if not as a hostage for the return of Causten and his property (and it is not likely that the rebels would entertain such a proposition) at least until Causten returns or the war is at an end. While it is very hard for Cross to be thus separated from his wife and children it is no less a hardship for Causten separated from his young wife to be pining in a Southern prison while the Government is in need of his services in camp and in the field.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. J. ALLEN.

OLD CAPITOL PRISON. (Received July 1, 1862.)

MY DEAR MRS. MORRIS: Will you be kind enough to present the statement which I have made below of Mr. Cross' case to the Confederate Government? Poor fellow, he has been here a long time and he wishes that you would interest yourself for him. He is a young man and a right good fellow. Please answer my last.

Yours, truly,

MANSE.

Statement.

B. J. Cross, of Montgomery County, Md., was arrested 9th of October, 1861, charged with having his brother-in-law, M. C. Causten, of Washington City, a Federal soldier, arrested in June, 1861, by the Confederate soldiers and imprisoned at Raleigh, N. C. The Federal Government state that they hold Mr. Cross as a hostage for his brother-in-law and will release him on condition that M. C. Causten is exchanged for any Confederate soldier. Mr. Cross desires to call the attention of the Confederate Government to the matter, as by the release of Mr. Causten they will secure a Confederate soldier and also effect his own release.

HDQRS. OF THE ARMY, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 7, 1861.

Col. J. DIMICK, Fort Warren, Boston, Mass.

SIR: The General-in-Chief has received several communications in reference to the safety of the prisoners at Fort Warren. Although he has full confidence in your vigilance he thinks it not amiss to caution you against any attempt either from the land or sea which might be made to overpower your garrison and set free men of such political and personal wealth as many of the prisoners under your charge are possessed of. In this view a copy of instructions from the Secretary was sent you November 26 restricting intercourse with the prisoners, and you were asked by telegraph the 4th instant what additional force you would require for the safety of the post.

I am, sir, &c.,

L. THOMAS,
Adjutant-General.

U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK,
New York, December 7, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: On the 1st of November I had the honor to address you a letter* marked "confidential" calling your attention to the importunities of certain lawyers to obtain the release of political prisoners confined in Fort Lafayette, and alluded especially to the case of J. K. Millner,† who had offered as much as $2,000 to any one instrumental in procuring his discharge. On my recent visit to Washington I mentioned the circumstance to the Assistant Secretary, and that a lawyer named Ludlow had taken a peculiar and suspicious interest in Millner's case. The Assistant Secretary replied that Mr. Ludlow had most positively assured him he was actuated solely by friendly and disinterested motives, and that he had never received or claimed of Millner one cent for his services. I now beg to inclose you an order from J. K. Millner on Lieutenant Wood in charge at the fort to pay Ludlow the sum of $150, together with Lieutenant Wood's letter to me on the subject. With these documents in your possession you will perhaps be able to judge for yourself after this what Mr. Ludlow's pretensions to disinterestedness and truthfulness are worth.

I am, sir, your most obedient servant,

ROBT. MURRAY,
U. S. Marshal.

DEAR SIR: Yours of 6th instant inclosing two letters addressed to Monsieur Charles Le Cesne, New York; one to Monsieur C. A. Robert, New York, and four to M. A. Herera & Co., Havana, Cuba, is received. To-morrow I shall return the Herera letters to the post-office and restore the others to the parties to whom addressed. Monsieur Le Cesne is no doubt as clean as any man can be whose business connections have heretofore been very deep in cotton, but since the detention of his letters he has suddenly concluded to return to France, and has accordingly gone, family, coach, horses, driver and all. However, his business remains here. I regard the movement as strange.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, *Washington, December 10, 1861.*JOHN A. KENNEDY, Esq., Superintendent of Police, New York.

SIR: I have received your letter† of the 5th instant relative to the exaction of passes from persons going to California via Aspinwall. Your suggestions upon the subject of the adoption of a uniform rule are duly appreciated. I will thank you to call upon the agent of the steamers and after consulting with him to make such arrangements as in your opinion will best promote the public interests in the present exigency respecting the passenger whose real intention is to go to California. Should you, however, find it impossible to do so without the requirement of a passport in every case you will after reporting to this Department resume the enforcement of the regulation first adopted.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 6th instant and its inclosures. In reply I have to request that you will hold the prisoner Joseph M. P. I notice your observations respecting Her Britannic Majesty's consul at that point, Mr. Wilkins, and have to state that the Government of the United States appreciates the impartiality manifested by him.

HEADQUARTERS, Baltimore, December 12, 1861.

Hon. S. P. CHASE, Secretary of the Treasury.

SIR: In a letter to you of the 5th instant I mentioned in connection with a recommendation of two persons in Accomac and Northampton Counties, Va., for the offices of collector and surveyor that all my information from these counties was very satisfactory. I have to-day received a letter from General Lockwood in which he says that he summoned all the magistrates of Accomac County before him; that they all took the oath of allegiance as well as the sheriff and his deputies and clerks. He adds: "After this there was quite a rush of smaller officers to do likewise." He was to go in a day or two after to Northampton and pursue the same course. He has made but a single arrest for disloyalty.

I consider the restoration of these counties to the Union complete, and if our troops were to be entirely withdrawn I am satisfied that there would be no movement against the Government. Of the 3,200 men sent from here I have brought back 3,100. There are about 100 left in the two counties. As soon as convenient I trust you will appoint a collector and surveyor.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 13, 1861.

JOHN A. KENNEDY, Esq., Superintendent of Police, New York.

SIR: Your letter* of the 11th instant has been received. In reply I have to inform you that your remark on the subject of passports for passengers to California having been taken into consideration it has been determined to restore the original order upon the subject. In view, however, of the complaints which have been made upon the subject it is presumed that the order will be executed with the same discrimination which is expected in regard to passports for persons bound to Europe, and that while all cabin passengers will be required to provide themselves with passports passengers in other parts of the vessel may be exempted from the requirement except in particular cases. Conspirators against the Government should reasonably be suspected of embarking as passengers elsewhere than in the cabin.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 10th instant received this morning I have the honor to inclose the two letters† which led to the detection of Isaac G. Mask. In the letter of the 17th of September signed "I. G. M." he gives information in regard to the naval expedition sent out from New York and asks that it may be communicated "to General Beauregard or some one of the influential members of the Confederate Government without an hour's delay." In the letter of the 18th he gives the same information and says: "It is of the utmost importance that all knowledge of the expedition and its destination should be kept from the rebel Government." This letter professing to be loyal is signed with his name in full and contains his address. Both are written in pencil. Letters in the same handwriting signed "I. G. M." had been repeatedly intercepted. They were all written in pencil but until he had the folly to write a loyal letter no clue had been found to the author. I remember several of these letters but as they contained no important information they were not preserved.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General.

I have the honor to be with high consideration, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: On the 28th of November I received from you the papers (which I had asked for) in the case of A. Da Costa, a prisoner in Fort Warren. I have held his case waiting for the evidence taken before George G. Bull, U. S. commissioner, Detroit. The testimony was directed to me as C. Hawley, and was advertised and hence the delay. I make this report and send the evidence* taken on his arrest, and also the papers remitted to me by you.

It appears that he was arrested without any valid grounds. His statement to me accords exactly with the report from Detroit. If he had or has treasonable designs they are unknown. But he to me declined to take the oath required, from which it is fairly to be inferred that he is not loyal in his opinions or designs and therefore I cannot recommend his release. Yet I think if set at liberty and should go to Havana or Vera Cruz he would do no harm. He is an intelligent, good-looking, good-tempered man, and would perhaps count in some exchange of prisoners. With these papers in your files you have all the proof in the case likely to be had.

If the British lion should bite as well as roar the prisoners in Fort Warren might be in danger from British shell.

Yours, respectfully,

S. C. HAWLEY,

Hon. W. D. KELLEY, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: There are now here some seventy-six prisoners, including myself; most all belonging to Philadelphia who were with me in the U. S. transport steamer Union and wrecked on this coast on the morning of the 3d of November.

We are as a matter of course desirous to get home again, and we beg you will use your influence to get us released by an exchange for the same number of Hatteras prisoners, or if that cannot be done to use your influence toward a regular exchange if consistent with Government policy.

We were compelled to leave the wreck soon after she struck to save our lives, as she commenced breaking up immediately, and saved nothing but the clothes we had on at the time, and will soon be destitute. We suffer considerable these cold nights for the want of covering, and have not been supplied here. Unless something is done by our Government we shall have a large number of sick if not some deaths before the winter is over unless soon released. The destitute condition of the men exposes them to sickness now around them.

There are also some forty others including officers belonging to different regiments here who are likewise desirous of getting released as early as possible and fully as destitute, some having been here several months.

We feel it peculiarly hard after barely escaping with our lives from that severe gale of November 2 and then the shipwreck on the morning of the 3d to be held here as prisoners of war for an indefinite time short of clothes and covering this cold weather, and without funds or means of procuring the necessary articles for our comfort.

JOHN J. GARVIN.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S OFFICE, December 30, 1861.

Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR.

SIR: A few days ago you did me the honor to refer for my consideration and advice a letter of General Buell* addressed to Adjutant-General Thomas and by him transmitted to you.

I do not wonder that General Buell is put to difficulty about "the disposition of prisoners accused of giving aid to the enemy." I share in that difficulty, and mainly because in these disordered times it is hard to draw the exact line of separation between the different kinds of arrests as distinguished by their different purposes and objects—that is judicial arrest whose only object is to secure the presence of the accused so that he may be tried for an alleged crime before a civil court, and political arrest—which is usually executed by the military arm—whose object is to secure the prisoner and hold him subject to the somewhat broad and as yet undefined discretion of the President as political chief of the nation.

* See Buell to Thomas, December 5, p. 170.

As to arrests merely political or military they are as I understand the law beyond the reach of the judicial officers and subject only to the political power of the President, who may at his discretion dispose of the prisoners by orders addressed to his subordinate officers either civil or military. Without such order I have no authority to give any direction touching the disposition of political or military prisoners.

A judicial arrest is quite another thing, and fortunately the proceedings upon it are plain matters of statute law, presumed to be well known to every district judge, commissioner, attorney and marshal. It is not the business of the district judge (or commissioner) to accuse, arrest or keep a prisoner, but to hear and determine the causes properly brought before him; to commit the prisoner for indictment and trial or to discharge him with or without bail as in view of the testimony may be proper.

It is the duty of the district attorney to prosecute all delinquents for crimes and offenses against the United States; but that does not mean that he is to be an original accuser nor that it is his duty to arrest and keep the offender; nor indeed that he must be present as prosecutor in every preliminary inquiry before an examining magistrate. That would be unreasonable as a legal duty and impossible in practice.

It is the duty of the marshal to execute all criminal process for the arrest of offenders against the United States within his district, and in some urgent cases to arrest without process, and he is the lawful keeper of all such prisoners.

From all this, sir, you may readily infer my opinion to be that the judicial officers of the United States in Kentucky—with whom alone I have direct official connection—have no powers or duties in regard to the prisoners merely political or military in the hands of General Buell. But if the general have in his custody prisoners who are intended to be tried in the civil courts for alleged crimes he may easily get rid of them by turning them over to the marshal of the district together with all testimony and means to prove their guilt. The marshal I think is bound to receive them and of course will know how to proceed against them before a proper examining magistrate to have them committed to jail or bailed to answer the charge. The marshal has power to appoint deputies—as many as the occasion may require.

I do not yet see the necessity to appoint an assistant attorney as the general suggests. If one should be appointed for every vicinity in which arrests may be made I fear the number would soon become inconveniently large and the expense needlessly extravagant.

I have the honor to be, most respectfully, your obedient servant,
EDWD. BATES,
Attorney-General.

(Copy to General Buell January 27, 1862.)

WASHINGTON, December 30, 1861.

Hon. SECRETARY OF STATE.

DEAR SIR: On the morning of the 19th instant I arrested on board the steamer Mary Washington in Baltimore one William T. Wilson. On searching his person I found concealed in an overcoat pocket one large druggist's jar containing thirty ounces of quinine, one package of letters addressed to parties in Europe and a number of photographs. I also found in Wilson's hat very ingeniously concealed twenty ounces of quinine. From reliable information received since the arrest I am satisfied that Wilson is no other person than the notorious Billy Wilson, of Saint Mary's County, Md., and the individual for whom the Government recently offered a large reward. Wilson had on him when arrested British papers and a British passport showing that he had traveled throughout Europe as an Englishman. Wilson is now confined at Fort McHenry awaiting the orders of the State Department. I consider him a very unsafe man to be at large.

Yours, very respectfully,

L. C. BAKER.

U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK,
New York, December 31, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In obedience to your order of the 28th instant I have released the crew of the bark Empress and of prize ship Lida unconditionally. Caspar Klock and William [Brown] I liberated on the conditions stipulated in your special letter ordering their discharge.

I am, sir, your most obedient servant,

ROBERT MURRAY,
U. S. Marshal.

ANNAPOLIS, December 31, 1861.

General HUGER, Commanding Department, Norfolk.

DEAR SIR: My servant Robert Halloway, a negro, was taken prisoner at Bull Run. He is now cook for the Federal prisoners at Richmond and is known to most of the officers of your service who were formerly in our Army. As he has been with me for many years I of course am anxious to get him again, and Commodore Goldsborough has kindly offered to interest himself in the matter. Will you be kind enough to communicate with your Government on the subject and inform me through the commodore how I may if possible get him? General McClellan tells me that he released in Western Virginia a large number of officers' servants.

Very truly, yours,

A. E. BURNSIDE,
Brigadier-General, U. S. Army.

Hon. J. P. BENJAMIN, Secretary of War.

SIR: General A. E. Burnside having released to us our servants, slaves included, we respectfully request that his servant, Ro. Halloway, captured at Manassas in July last and now held a prisoner in Richmond, be restored to him. This release of our servants by General Burnside being unconditional we consider it due to ourselves as well as just to him that we should make the above earnest request.

Trusting that this request will meet the approval of the Department, we are, most respectfully, your obedient servants,

SIR: In obedience to your order of the 20th ultimo communicated by telegraph I conveyed to Fort Lafayette, New York Harbor, Christopher Ledwidge and S. R. Burnett, and formally delivered them into the custody of Lieut. Col. M. Burke, commanding, on the 29th ultimo.

Brig. Gen. S. WILLIAMS,

Adjutant-General, Army of the Potomac.

GENERAL: Two prisoners were sent in to me to-day from Allen's Fresh. They are J. Barrett Cohen and M. Francis McKee. The circumstances of these arrests will be found in the report of First Lieut. B. Q. A. Gresham, Third Indiana Cavalry, dated the 5th instant, and herewith inclosed.† On examination of them separately I find many discrepancies, but as I have no direct means of establishing their identity I have deemed it advisable to have them forwarded to Washington. My first impression was that they were from Virginia, as a small party crossed the river on Wednesday night last near Allen's Fresh. My opinion was that they were of them. They could give me no satisfactory reason for their visit to this district, but both agreed that they left Baltimore by a schooner a week ago last Friday, though neither of them remembered her name nor did they tell me what she was freighted with. They tell me that they landed at Drum Point, near the Patuxent. I regard them with suspicion. By referring to the letters forwarded to you in one of the trunks to-day I think the name of the former frequently appears.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOSEPH HOOKER,

Brigadier-General, Commanding Division.

Hon. GIDEON WELLES, Secretary of the Navy.

SIR: The Secretary of the Interior has referred to this Department a letter addressed to him by the U. He represents that there are no proper accommodations there for them and suggests that they be taken to New York by the steamer Connecticut or Rhode Island. I will consequently suggest an order to this effect, and that on their arrival at New York the prisoners be delivered to the marshal of the United States there for confinement in Fort Lafayette.

Lord LYONS, &c.:

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 11th instant* and its inclosure relative to the case of Mr. William T. Wilson, who was arrested at Baltimore on the 19th ultimo and who is at present held in custody at Fort Lafayette, New York Harbor. In reply, I have the honor to state that inquiries have been made of the officer who made the arrest from which it appears that the statement of Mr. Wilson does not relieve him from suspicion of being the Wilson for whom he was in fact arrested. I have, however, transmitted all the papers on file in this Department together with the statements submitted by you to Maj. Gen. John A. Dix at Baltimore, with a request to cause a careful examination to be made and return them together with his report thereon to me.

I avail myself of this occasion to renew to your lordship the assurance of my very high consideration,

Wilson who was recently arrested in Baltimore and who is now held in custody at Fort Lafayette, New York Harbor. Will you please examine these statements and take such other testimony in regard to the facts in this case as may be obtained and report to this Department as soon as you conveniently can?

HDQRS. CITY GUARD, OFFICE OF PROVOST-MARSHAL,

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER,

Provost-Marshal, Washington, D. C.

GENERAL: In accordance with the request† of the Hon. W. H. Seward, Secretary of State, directed to you requesting you to report on the case of Capt. B. F. Gwynn, I have the honor to report that on January 7, 1862, Captain Gwynn, residing in Prince George County, Md., was committed to your custody by order of Brigadier-General Casey under the following circumstances, to wit:

From information received by General Casey he on the 6th of January, 1862, caused to be detached for the purpose of arresting Captain Gwynn a force of 200 men belonging to the Eighty-fifth Pennsylvania Infantry, headed by the colonel, lieutenant-colonel and other officers of that regiment and of General Casey's staff. After a night's march of thirty-two miles the arrest was accordingly effected at 8 o'clock the next morning at his residence. He was charged with holding correspondence with and giving information to the enemy and suspected of being a spy. An immediate search of his residence resulted in the discovery of the boxes containing clothing obviously intended for transfer to the enemy and for their use, also five letters addressed to persons within the enemy's lines containing correspondence of a treasonable character. It is alleged by Captain Gwynn that the boxes in question were left with his wife in his absence, and that she on perceiving the directions tore them off intending to return the boxes to the lady from whom they were received.

* Not found.

† Omitted.

The colonel who arrested him states that "the written directions on labels upon the boxes had evidently been recently removed as I found labels corresponding with the directions upon the boxes concealed in a small box on the mantelpiece." The addresses on the labels are "Mrs. Morimia Cary, Hospital, Culpeper Court-House, Va.," and "Lieut. Charles S. Contee, First Maryland Artillery Company, stationed at Aquia Creek, Va."

Since the receipt of the papers on which the preceding statements are based documents inclosed to the Hon. W. H. Seward, Secretary of State, have been forwarded to this office from the State Department. They consist of statements by Mrs. Mary Harford and Mrs. Eleanor Gwynn, wife of Captain Gwynn, indorsed by Dr. G. H. Bayne, of the Maryland senate, and Hon. Charles B. Calvert, of the U. S. House of Representatives. Mrs. Harford states that the boxes in question were left with her by a young and inexperienced girl (name not given) to be sent to Piscataway; that Mrs. Harford took them to Captain Gwynn's residence to be sent, and Captain Gwynn being absent left them with his wife; that a large portion of the articles in question were old clothes and other articles of little value not intended for army purposes; that some of them were articles sent by a widow to her sick son, who left before the outbreak and was not permitted to return, he having taken no part whatever in the rebellion. She alleges most positively that Captain and Mrs. Gwynn knew nothing whatever of the contents or destination of the boxes in question; that Mrs. Gwynn did not even see the boxes until after she (Mrs. Harford) left, and that Captain Gwynn was not at home. She further states that whatever responsibility there is in the case belongs to her rather than to Mrs. Gwynn; that two of her brothers died in the service of this Government, &c.

Mrs. Gwynn's statement is to the same effect so far as her and her husband are concerned. She also states that on perceiving to whom the boxes were directed she tore off the labels intending to return the boxes to the lady from whom they were received; that Captain Gwynn never had any direct or indirect connection with the Southern Army; that his numerous friends and neighbors can give unequivocal evidence in his favor.

Dr. George H. Bayne, senator from Prince George County in the Maryland legislature, feels warranted in fully indorsing Mrs. Gwynn's statement "from a long and intimate acquaintance with Captain and Mrs. Gwynn."

Hon. Charles B. Calvert, U. S. House of Representatives, considers Mrs. Gwynn's statement indorsed by his friend Doctor Bayne entitled to be received as unquestionably true. The circumstances previously known at this office concerning Captain Gwynn are as follows:

It appears that last spring he was concerned in an attempt to get up and drill a company or companies of militia in the county in which he resides. It being deemed by the military authorities that the organization was covertly intended as an aid to the rebellion it was broken up. Apprehensive of being arrested for his share in those proceedings Captain Gwynn fled to the rebel portion of Virginia where he remained some months. The testimony is very conflicting as to what he did there; some persons allege positively that he was in the rebel army while others again are equally positive that he was not. Moreover I have no evidence showing whether his flight took place after or before the President's proclamation of non-intercourse with the rebel States.

After his return home he came to this office voluntarily on the 25th of November and expressed his wish to take the oath of allegiance to this Government. Having no authority to comply with his request I recommended him to call for that purpose on Thomas C. Donn, justice of the peace of this city, by whom the oath was administered to him. The oath and signature are now on file in this office. The evidence in this case proves the following facts, to wit:

That having been engaged in a military company of very questionable loyalty either as regards its composition or its objects he fled to a rebel State, apprehensive that if he remained he would be liable to arrest for his connection with said company; that after his return he voluntarily came to this city and took the oath of allegiance; that two boxes containing articles and correspondence unquestionably designed to be conveyed to rebels for the purpose of giving them aid, comfort and information were found in his residence under very suspicious circumstances.

I therefore respectfully recommend that as the testimony in this case is very contradictory and Captain Gwynn has been but a short time in custody he be retained until the military authorities stationed in that vicinity are able to institute further investigations. Herewith I inclose to you the statements* of Mrs. Eleanor Gwynn and Mrs. Mary Harford, with Doctor Bayne's and Hon. Charles B. Calvert's indorsements,* which the Secretary of State requests should be transmitted to him with your report on the subject.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. J. ALLEN.

JOHN A. KENNEDY, Esq.,
Superintendent of Police, New York.

SIR: This Department has received information to the effect that the house of Trenholm Bros. & Co., No. 42 Pine street, New York, is a branch of the house of Fraser, Trenholm & Co., of Liverpool, and John Fraser & Co., of Charleston, S. C. It is important and desirable to ascertain the truth of these statements because the two last-named houses have from the commencement of the insurrection been engaged in attempts to run the blockade, and some of the vessels owned by them have succeeded in that attempt. I will consequently thank you to inquire, first, if the Messrs. Trenholm in New York are British subjects, and secondly, if their house is a branch of the others referred to. It is not deemed advisable to take any other steps until this Department shall have received information on these points.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a letter from Mr. McPhail, the deputy provost-marshal of this city, and one from Mr. Franklin, the chief of the detective police in Philadelphia, in regard to William T. Wilson.* The identity of this person with the Wilson engaged in Saint Mary's County in carrying on illicit trade with Virginia is in some doubt, though I am strongly inclined to believe they are different persons. By Mr. McPhail's letter you will perceive that William T. Wilson had a quantity of quinine concealed on his person destined unquestionably to Virginia. He was arrested on one of the Patuxent boats on which he had taken passage for Saint Mary's County. A letter of which I inclose a copy† was also found on him. It was open when it came into the hands of the police as well as the larger envelope in which it was contained and which was believed to have had within it other letters.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

[Inclosure.]

OFFICE OF PROVOST-MARSHAL,
Baltimore, January 15, 1862.

Major-General DIX.

* DEAR SIR: About the 1st of November Mr. Reynolds of our force received information from Mr. John Fowler that a certain William [T.] Wilson, an Englishman, was carrying a Confederate mail and goods with Captain Alston, of Saint Mary's County, to Virginia by way of Blay Creek to Ragged Point. They occupied a log cabin with a Mr. Bradburn on Blay Creek.

On the morning of the 19th of December as I was examining the passengers of the steamer Weems one of my officers brought two men to me who had been avoiding us. I ordered them to be taken to the side of the boat and searched. Upon Wilson was found a bottle containing about four ounces of morphine and an English passport that disclosed his name as W. T. Wilson. Upon Mr. Krengle, the other party, nothing was found of a contraband character. They were conveyed to our office and there underwent another search when there was found in the hat of Wilson done up in a bladder filling about one-third of the hat crown a quart of quinine. These were the only articles secreted about him. He had a large navy revolver and holster, the holster much worn as if used on horseback, which agrees with the report of Fowler who stated that he always carried the mail on horseback from Alston's and always at night. I also inclose you a copy of the letter† found upon the person of Wilson; it was inclosed in a rough envelope which from its size indicated more inclosures. I was unable to find who opened it but supposed it to be Wilson who destroyed a part of its contents. Besides the letters we have two photographs of two females and a small lace collar and cuffs.

Fowler of whom we obtained the information is now engaged in teaming about Washington and Alexandria. Mr. Reynolds of our force thinks he would be able to find him and thus remove our doubts.

Respectfully, yours, &c.,

J. L. McPHAIL,
Deputy Provost-Marshal.

SIR: It is contemplated to release and send South all civilians or seamen from the rebellious States who were captured on board vessels seized for violating the blockade or who when captured were not in arms or had not been engaged in any hostile act against the United States. The Department does not know the names of all those who are now confined in Fort Lafayette by its order and will therefore be much obliged to you for a list of them, with the name of the vessel on board which or the place where they were captured, if you can give me that information.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

GIDEON WELLES.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN., January 21, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am in some doubt as to which Department to communicate the following facts, but have concluded to inform that under your charge of the same. A few days since two persons, one named Reemer the other Theodore W. Downs, arrived in this city from Memphis, having received a pass to come North from the rebel authorities. Reemer has a family here and Downs a number of friends. An article was published in one of the Chicago papers (which I cannot recollect) a few days since stating that they had been closely watched, inasmuch as it was reported and believed that they were coming North for the purpose of visiting some of the manufactories of arms, taking drawings of machinery, &c., for the benefit of the rebels. Reemer is a machinist by trade and quite expert. Adjutant Rust, of Colonel Buford's Illinois regiment, rode some distance behind them in the cars and informed some friends of his in this city that he believed from their conversation they were rank secessionists and upon no honorable errand. They design remaining here for some days.

There is every reason to believe that a lodge of Knights of the Golden Circle exists in this city, although their meetings are held secretly and without any degree of regularity. They at one time met on stated evenings, but on the eve of July 21, 1861, our citizens smarting under the result of Bull Run and thinking they had met for the purpose of glorifying over the result disturbed them in their deliberations, and procuring a locomotive lantern so placed it that all who came from the hall were recognized and names put down. Since then they have been more secret in their operations, but there is good reason to believe that they have not discontinued their meetings. Mr. William M. Connelly, room No. 6, police headquarters, New York City, is a shrewd and experienced detective and operated with me last December in investigating some supposed frauds upon the revenue, and suspected operations of some parties here in movements and designs of running the Southern blockade. He has an original certificate of membership in the order of Knights of the Golden Circle, and informed me that if any lodge of the kind did exist in this city he could find it out and obtain admission. It would be a desirable thing to have these matters investigated, inasmuch as this city is the focus and center of the secession sympathizers in this portion of Connecticut. I had some correspondence with the honorable Secretary of the Treasury in relation to those parties who were suspected of running the blockade, and will refer you to him as to whether any statements from me are reliable.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRED. H. THOMPSON,
Deputy Collector.

HON. HANNIBAL HAMLIN, Washington.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note* of this date, accompanied by one addressed to you by G. S. C. Dow, esq., in which that gentleman expresses a wish to correspond with a client at New Orleans and asks if it is possible or proper for him to do so. In reply I have the honor to acquaint you that the interruption of correspondence with that quarter has been occasioned by a military exigency. To the general regulation upon the subject there has been occasional exceptions. It is impracticable for me to determine beforehand whether the correspondence in which Mr. Dow wishes to engage ought to be one of them. If, however, he will send open to this Department any letter which he may wish to address to his client the expediency of forwarding the same to its destination will be taken into due consideration.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

You will also please inform him that in view of his having secreted about his person at the time of his arrest an unusual quantity of quinine, and of other suspicious circumstances which have come to the knowledge of the Government, a watch will be kept over his future movements. You will please discharge him.

*Washington, D. C., January —, 1862.*Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal, Washington, D. C.

GENERAL: I have the honor to report that on January 13, 1862, Rev. Bennett Smedes, of Raleigh, N. C., was received at this office and committed to the Old Capitol Prison, having been transferred to your custody by Captain Dahlgren, commanding the U. S. navy-yard, with the information that he was arrested by the Potomac flotilla in an attempt to cross the Potomac River into Virginia. On being examined at this office he made the following statement, to wit:

That he is twenty-four years of age; that he was born in Schenectady, N. Y., and that when three years of age he accompanied his parents to Raleigh, N. C., where they now reside; that his father is a clergyman in that place; that he (Smedes) at the age of sixteen went to Saint James College, near Hagerstown, Md., where, excepting vacations spent with his parents, he remained four years; that he then for three years attended a theological seminary in the city of New York, on leaving which in June, 1860, he commenced to officiate with the Rev. Dr. Cleveland Coxe, an Episcopal clergyman at Baltimore, with whom he remained until December 13, 1861; that for some time he has been desirous of joining his parents in Raleigh, N. C., and had with this view made application to the honorable Secretary of State for a passport, which he did not succeed in procuring; that he then determined to make the attempt without such passport and take his chances of eluding the blockading flotilla and military authorities of the United States; that he accordingly proceeded through Maryland to the river Potomac, and with three other persons attempted to cross it in a boat from Cedar Point, when he, with two of those persons, was arrested by a boat's crew from the cutter Howell Cobb; at 12.30 a. m. January 11 was taken to the cutter, searched by Captain Frank, transferred to the Island Belle, thence to Colonel Graham's headquarters at Indian Head, thence successively to the Wyandank, Harriet Lane and Yankee, on board of which latter he was taken to the navy-yard, whence he was sent by Captain Dahlgren to this office.

The prisoner refused upon the above examination to give any information relative to the person or persons by whose aid and abetment he was crossing the Potomac at the point and time named, or where he stayed while in Maryland preparing to leave for Virginia. No papers or correspondence were found on him when searched, excepting a letter of recommendation from Doctor Coxe. A letter from that gentleman relating to this case has been received at this office of which the following is a copy, viz:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 13, 1862.

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, U. S. Army.

DEAR SIR: The Rev. Bennett Smedes, a prisoner under your charge, was until about a month since assisting me as a deacon in Grace Church, Baltimore. He then left me as he said to see whether he could reach his parents in North Carolina. They had been recently afflicted by the death of his elder brother, and as he supposed were in need of his services and the comfort of his presence. His father is the Rev. Doctor Smedes, of Raleigh, but his parents as well as himself are native New Yorkers; to the best of my belief his mother is a daughter of the late Rev. Doctor Lyell, rector of Christ Church, New York. Having seen him since his arrest in the presence of an officer he assured me that he went with nothing but his raiment, a few sermons and a certificate of his good character (which I gave him), and that he designed nothing and did nothing more or less than was necessary to the sole object of seeing and consoling his parents. I believe his word absolutely, and can testify from long and intimate acquaintance with him that he is a young man of integrity and of great personal worth. When I accepted his services as my assistant eighteen months ago or more I found his academical character not only unsullied but remarkable for all that adorns youth in the eyes of the good and wise. I pray that these facts may have weight, and that his imprisonment (should his speedy release be denied) may be as little as possible rigorous. It is my earnest hope that his discharge may be deemed compatible with the demands of the public good.

I remain, &c.,

A. CLEVELAND COXE,
Rector of Grace Church, Baltimore.

It may be proper to remark that although Doctor Coxe preaches to a Baltimore congregation of which a large portion are known to entertain treasonable sentiments he is nevertheless considered a decided Union man. It has since been ascertained by inquiry at the Department of the Secretary of State that that portion of the prisoner's statement is correct in which he mentions his unsuccessful application for a passport to go South.

The evidence in this case establishes the following facts: That the Rev. Bennett Smedes having made application at the State Department for a pass and having failed to obtain one, the honorable Secretary of State not considering his case one in which the same should be issued, finding himself thus unable to attain his object in a legitimate manner did clandestinely, contrary to law and with knowledge that he was acting unlawfully, attempt to circumvent the authority of the United States by entering one of the States in rebellion; that inasmuch as the act of crossing the Potomac in this manner is in contravention of the proclamation of the President and highly detrimental to the efficiency of our military operations it is necessary that strong measures should be taken to discourage such attempts by the punishment of all concerned in them no matter what may be their character, standing or purpose.

I therefore respectfully recommend that Rev. Bennett Smedes be confined until the conclusion of the war or until such time as by the advance of our armies he may be enabled to visit his relatives without violating the President's proclamation.

All of which is duly submitted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. J. ALLEN.

[Indorsement.]

Let him be detained for the present.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 23, 1862.
Lieut. Col. MARTIN BURKE,
Fort Hamilton, New York Harbor.

SIR: Your letter of the 21st instant has been received, and in compliance with your request I inclose herewith 100 copies of the prescribed oath of allegiance. You will observe that the words "and further, that I will well and faithfully perform all the duties which may be required of me by law," is applicable to those only who hold office under the Government and may be omitted when administered to private citizens.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA, ADJT. GEN.'S OFFICE,
Wheeling, Va., January 23, 1862.

Brigadier-General ROSECRANS,
Commanding Department of Western Virginia.

SIR: I call your attention to the inclosed newspaper paragraphs in relation to certain loyal citizens of Virginia threatened with an ignominious death by the traitors assembled in Richmond: George W. Aubrey (printed Aufrey), A. W. McDonald and Henry A. Ault, all of Hardy County. These men were in a State military company and by orders were when taken acting under the U. S. military officers stationed at Fort Pendleton, near the southwest corner of Maryland, and were to all intents and purposes of war a military company in the U. S. service, and for its members this government demands the protection of the United States. John Alford has never been in arms and is charged with being a candidate for the legislature here. I have been unable to procure information respecting Messrs. Bone and Bergdale, but it is probable they were members of the Hardy County company aforesaid. In the name and on the behalf of the restored government of Virginia and by the direction of the executive thereof I earnestly appeal to you to take such action in the premises as will relieve these men from the perils which environ them at Richmond; or if the suggestion of the traitor Benjamin is adopted and our loyal friends die for devotion to our flag a signal example of retributive vengeance will be executed that will deter the cowardly traitors assembled there from the perpetration of like cruelties there afterward. The prisoners as far as known are respectable, worthy men.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
 HENRY I. SAMUELS,
Adjutant-General of Virginia.

[Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF WESTERN VIRGINIA,
Wheeling, Va., January 24, 1862.

Respectfully referred to the Secretary of War.

The within letter states facts which show that the persons alluded to cannot be hung or otherwise punished without violating the principles of humanity which have hitherto been acted on and tending to frightful reprisals.

W. S. ROSECRANS,
Brigadier-General, U. S. Army.

ARREST OF UNION PATRIOTS.

The following was sent to the Virginia senate on Thursday by Governor Letcher:

WAR DEPARTMENT, C. S. A., Richmond, Va., January 10, 1862.

JOHN RANDOLPH TUCKER, Esq., Attorney-General.

SIR: I respectfully inform you that the following-named persons now confined in jail here have been examined by the Hon. James Lyons, as commissioner for this Department, and he reports them as being in his opinion traitors that ought to be hung. This being a matter that concerns the civil authorities I deem it my duty to give you their names, as follows, viz: First, George W. Aufrey; second, Henry A. Ault; third, Benjamin Bone; fourth, John Bergdale; fifth, Aaron W. McDonald; sixth, John Alford.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. P. BENJAMIN,
Secretary of War.

HEADQUARTERS, Baltimore, January 24, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Nineteen persons were arrested last week at a place of rendezvous from which they were to go to the insurgent States. Several have been released on taking the oath of allegiance, the evidence not being perfectly clear in regard to them. There are twelve who should be sent away as there is no room for them at Fort McHenry. One of these men, Thomas C. Fitzpatrick, is claimed to be a British subject, and I am told was discharged from Fort Warren or Fort Lafayette on the application of Lord Lyons. I do not know what was the charge against him. We have satisfactory evidence that he has been engaged in recruiting for the insurgent army and that he was the leader of the party arrested. They were under an oath not to divulge the purposes of their organization.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 25, 1862.

Maj. Gen. JOHN A. DIX, Baltimore, Md.

GENERAL: Referring to your letter of the 24th instant the receipt of which has heretofore been acknowledged I have the honor to authorize you to convey the twelve prisoners (names not given) referred to by you to Fort Lafayette, New York Harbor. Will you please transmit to this Department a list of their names together with a report of the proof upon which they are held?

I have the honor to be, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Acting Secretary of State.

HDQRS. CITY GUARD, PROVOST-MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 27, 1862.

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal.

DEAR SIR: In the case of Nathaniel N. Clabaugh, of Morgan County, Va., a prisoner confined in the Old Capitol Building, I have the honor to report in obedience to the request of the honorable Secretary of State as follows:

Said Clabaugh was received at this office from General Banks' division, Upper Potomac, on the 18th instant, accompanied by the following charges:

First. That said Clabaugh was one of a party of four instrumental in conveying information from Maryland to Winchester of a treasonable nature.

Second. That he harbored rebel officers and soldiers.

Third. That he oppressed the Union party of that section of Virginia in which he lived.

Fourth. Refused to take the oath, declaring he was a Virginian and Virginia had declared her independence.

Fifth. That he aided and abetted in connection with Van Arsdale and Fleece, of Morgan County (reported at Frederick), to sustain the rebel Government and was very violent in opposition to the Federal Government.

These several charges stated before me.

JOHN G. HOVEY,
Lieut., Thirteenth Regt. Massachusetts Vols., Provost-Marshal, Williamsport.

Witnesses: Lieutenant Graffen, First Virginia Brigade; Capt. J. Kearns, First Virginia Brigade; others can be obtained.

About the 21st instant Mr. Clabaugh sent to this office from the Old Capitol Building substantially the following statement which he said he was willing to verify on oath: That he was never in Winchester in his life but once, about the 20th of October last, and did not then know a resident of the place; that he went at the request of several men in his neighborhood who had helpless families dependent upon them; that he traveled the entire way to and from Winchester alone; that his business was, first, to see General Carson, and then Colonel Johnson, of the home militia; that he was introduced to General Carson by an old acquaintance from his neighborhood, Doctor Canfield, now he believed a captain; that after being introduced to the general he informed him of his business, stating the helpless condition of his neighbors, and asking him if under the circumstances he could not exempt them from military duty as if they were forcibly taken from their homes (and they would not go otherwise) their families must necessarily suffer; that the general replied very kindly saying he was sorry for them but he had had twenty applications of the kind; that all men were equal and that he could not grant his (Clabaugh's) request; that he (Clabaugh) was not as he should judge over half an hour with General Carson; has never seen or written to him directly or indirectly before or since nor communicated with him through any other person; in short knew nothing more of him than he had stated; that the first call for militia was merely a notification about the 1st of July, there being no force attempted to his knowledge; that this first call was generally regarded as being unlawful or not authorized by the governor, and so far as their particular vicinity was concerned was as he thought wholly disregarded; that no further call was made until about the 1st of October, when it was currently reported that such as refused to go would be forcibly taken; that at this last date a large majority of their eligible militia had left the State or congregated in the woods of Sideling Height, where they were comparatively safe from arrest, but that some men, probably a dozen, within three or four miles round had families and could not without serious loss and suffering leave either to go to Maryland or to join the rebel army; that at his (Clabaugh's) earnest solicitation at that time the impressing officer who had discretion in the matter agreed not to disturb the militia in that neighborhood until after they had done their seeding, which agreement was being kept at the time of his (Clabaugh's) arrest, November 1, no further call having been made up to that time; that after his ineffectual mission to General Carson he went to Colonel Johnson, of their militia, and informed him what he had done, asking him if he had not considerable influence and whether he had not the power to grant his request; that the colonel answered that he had to a certain extent; that he (Clabaugh) then informed him as he had Carson of the unprotected and helpless condition of his neighbors, and requested him as far as lay in his power to favor them; that he (the colonel) most blandly, cheerfully and apparently sincerely informed him that he might say to his neighbors that they should not be further molested if he could possibly avoid it; that this was about two weeks before his (Clabaugh's) arrest, and that no further notice to or arrest of any party had taken place up to the time of his arrest; that he had not seen Fleece but twice since the Virginia election of last spring; that he (Fleece) was the sheriff of the county, and necessarily passed his (Clabaugh's) house sometimes and never did so without stopping, business or no business, as was the case on the two occasions above alluded to; that he merely called, probably remaining an hour each time, just about long enough to get his dinner and his horse fed; that he (Clabaugh) had never been in his company or passed a line with him directly or indirectly since the occasions above mentioned taking place last spring; that Van Arsdale has not been a near neighbor of his, and as he (Clabaugh) never had any business with him of any kind he had not even seen him for ten months or more to his knowledge until they met in Williamsport, and that he had never passed a word with him about the war either since or before it commenced; that all of his family are uncompromising Union folks, &c.

The above charges and statement is all the evidence that I have been able to collect in this case. The prisoner is quite an old man of frank and earnest manners, and I have no doubt but that his statement is correct. He suggests that his property is all without our military lines, and that it would be unnecessarily jeopardizing it to require him to take the oath of allegiance to the United States at the present time. I understand that he is willing to give his parole of honor not to interfere in this contest.

In conclusion I am inclined to think that Nathaniel N. Clabaugh, of Morgan County, Va., may safely be released from custody on taking the usual oath of allegiance, stipulating that he will not go beyond our military lines during the present contest between the Federal Government and the rebel States.

All of which is respectfully submitted by your obedient servant,
E. J. ALLEN.

FORT LAFAYETTE, N. Y., January 31, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,

Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I desire an investigation of my case, and it is for the purpose of giving you an insight into the circumstances attending my arrest that I now address you. I left Hickman, Ky., November 19 to go to Cairo, Ill., to pay taxes on land that I own on Bird's Point, Mo. On my way thither I met with Colonel Wallace at Charleston, Mo., and went with him to Bird's Point. Arriving there I ascertained that my agent was at Cairo. I then asked the colonel for a pass to Cairo which he granted. After paying my taxes to Mr. Falls I was arrested and held for five weeks at the above-named place when I was sent here, arriving at my present quarters on the 29th of December. I know of no charges against me nor have I heard of any reasons for my arrest. For proof as to my loyalty I refer you to Capt. D. L. Duffy, of the flag-ship Benton.

I remain, yours, respectfully,

C. LEDWIDGE.

N. B.—If it is required I am perfectly willing to take the oath of allegiance.

HDQRS. ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, January 31, 1862.

Brig. Gen. JOSEPH HOOKER, Commanding Division.

GENERAL: Your communication with accompanying papers concerning the arrest of James T. Blackiston, of Leonardtown, Md., was received at these headquarters some time since. Pressure of public business has caused the delay of this reply. The report of Major Chapman, the officer making the arrest, expressly states that no proof exists that the prisoner had either committed, aided or abetted any treasonable act against the United States nor do the papers show the slightest ground for suspecting that he entertained any such design. The commanding general directs me to say that the unnecessary arrest of any citizen is much to be regretted, and that that of Mr. Blackiston seems to have been without sufficient cause and is therefore not approved. Mr. Blackiston has been discharged.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. V. COLBURN,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

[Inclosure.]

LONDON, January 18, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State, &c., Washington.

SIR: I feel it my duty to call your attention to the fact that a person who has been for some time in this country representing himself, and I believe correctly so, to be the agent of Union men in Baltimore who hold a Government contract (concerning wool or woollen goods) openly avows himself a secessionist, associates constantly with that class here, and habitually uses such ability and influence as he may possess in behalf of the Southern rebellion and in opposition to the Government of which you are at the head. The person to whom I allude is Mr. John Wethered, of the house of Wethered Bros., of Baltimore.

I should be glad if there were any doubt about the facts, for Mr. Wethered and myself have hitherto been upon the most friendly terms. He was here last winter, and before returning home then it was plainly to be seen that his sympathies lay in that direction. After a short absence he returned again to this city in the character above stated, and there is not the slightest doubt that his conduct ever since has been as I have already represented. By reason of our former friendly relations I should desire that if possible my name should not be revealed as the author of this communication, but if necessary I feel that my duty to the true cause is paramount to all private friendship. If you deem the fact of any importance it can be readily substantiated from other sources here. It certainly galls your loyal friends here to know that a man who is doubtless filling his pockets with Government money is at the same time pursuing a treasonable course to that Government, and it seems also proper that you should be advised of the fact in order that you may ascertain whether the direct parties to the contract mentioned are also guilty of the same bad faith or whether they have been misled in the character of the agent they have sent here.

It is proper that addressing you as a stranger I should furnish you with some reference concerning myself. When I left Washington three years ago to spend some time in Europe in literary pursuits I was on intimate terms with (among others) Mrs. Henry R. Schoolcraft and Lieutenant Gilliss, of the Observatory, either of whom I think would be willing to vouch for my social position and my loyalty. I might refer more directly to Hon. E. Joy Morris, U. S. minister at Constantinople, and may also add that I am not unknown to Hon. Simon Cameron through his friend Henry C. Hickok, esq. I beg to add that I hope I am rendering my country and its Government some service here both privately and through the press, and that I should be most happy if you could in any way make my abilities and disposition more directly available. I should be ready at a moment's warning to go anywhere and do anything in obedience to your instructions. That the true cause needs all the help it can muster here is too true, for the loyal Americans in England are few while the Southern refugees are numerous, unscrupulous and untiring in their efforts to influence the public sentiment, nor are they without evident success. I should also add that I may refer generally to our legation in this city.

I am, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,

JOSEPH L. CHESTER.

In thus separating myself from associations which I have cherished for twenty years I wish it to be understood that no doctrine of the right of secession nor wish for disunion of the States impel me, but simply because my home is the home of my people in the South and I cannot bear arms against it or them.

QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington City, February 5, 1862.

SECRETARY OF STATE:

Upon inquiry of the officers in charge of clothing contracts at New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore I learn that they have now no contracts with the house of Wethered Bros., of Baltimore, but that Col. Charles Thomas, formerly in charge of the clothing depot at Philadelphia, made a contract with Charles E. Wethered for 32,500 yards of six-quarter dark blue kersey at $1.69 per yard, which contract was completed on November 21, 1861. This probably is the person and the contract referred to in the confidential letter from London referred to me by the State Department and returned yesterday. I presume Mr. Wethered had visited Europe to purchase wool at a time when its increased price in this country bore heavily upon contractors for army cloths. I know nothing of the person himself.

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal.

GENERAL: In the case of Isaac Ballenger, a prisoner confined in the Old Capitol Building, I have the honor to report as follows: On the 27th of September last the following letter was received at this office:

CAMDEN, September 22, 1861.

JAMES LESLIE, Esq.

DEAR SIR: A man by the name of Isaac Ballenger, a native of Burlington County, N. J., but for the last five or six years a citizen of Saint Joseph in Missouri, is now in this place. He left Saint Joseph, Mo., last Wednesday according to his own account and arrived here Saturday evening. He is now visiting his relatives in New Jersey. He is a violent secessionist, and I understand admits that he was arrested before he left Saint Joseph by the Union men. His mother, a very estimable woman, lives in Virginia between Alexandria and Mount Vernon. She is the wife of David Walton, a Union man, formerly of New Jersey. He has a brother, John Ballenger, who lives close to Walton, in Virginia, who is also a Union man. I understand he (Isaac) is about to visit Washington on his road to Virginia. He will no doubt apply for a pass to visit his relatives in Virginia and will most likely pass himself off as a Jerseyman. If he gets over into Virginia he will carry information to the rebels and do us mischief. You had better watch out for him and put the authorities on their guard against him. His relations in Virginia are all from this State—loyal and very clever people.

Very respectfully, yours, &c.,

THOMAS H. DUDLEY.

On the 7th of November last the following letter was received at this office:

DIVISION HEADQUARTERS, Fort Lyon, November 6, 1861.

Brigadier-General MONTGOMERY, Alexandria.

GENERAL: By the direction of General Heintzelman I send you a man by the name of Isaac Ballenger who was arrested and brought to these headquarters. He has strong Southern proclivities, and came to Alexandria under a pass belonging to another party, not being able to obtain one for himself. He wishes to go to New Jersey. The general requests you to take charge of him to-night and forward him with a guard to the provost-marshal in Washington.

Respectfully,

ISAAC MOSES,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

On the same 7th of November on examination at this office Ballenger made substantially the following statement: That he was originally from New Jersey; that he had for four years past resided in Saint Joseph, Mo.; that he left there about the middle of September last to visit his friends in New Jersey, Moorestown, Burlington County, and his mother, Mrs. David Walton, living about two miles from Accotink toward Mount Vernon, Va.; that he went from Missouri directly to New Jersey; that he left New Jersey about sixteen days ago and went to see Isaac Hosea residing near Laurel, Del.; that Hosea accompanied him from Missouri; that he (B.) arrived in Washington on the 22d or 23d of October and went to a boarding house, No. 368 or 386 Eighth street, back of the Patent Office, having been solicited by the man keeping the house on his arrival at the depot; that he stayed in Washington three days trying to obtain a pass to cross into Virginia; that not succeeding he borrowed one belonging to George Haines, speculator in wood, who was at the time boarding at one Augustine's on Van street, east of Four-and-a-half street; that Augustine obtained the pass for him, he (A.) being an old acquaintance of his (B.'s) and formerly a merchant at Accotink, Va.; that while at Washington he visited the Twenty-third Pennsylvania Regiment to see Richard Lippincott, attached to one of the companies, but that he could not find him; that he was at no other encampment while stopping in Washington; that on the 26th of October he left Washington by boat, using Mr. Haines' pass, and went to Alexandria; that at Alexandria he met his brother John, living adjoining his stepfather's, and with him rode to his mother's near Accotink; that Mr. Augustine accompanied him to Alexandria to take his wife there; she was going to visit some friends and look after their household goods which had been left at their place near Accotink, they having been driven off by the rebel pickets; that he (Ballenger) obtained a pass from General Montgomery's office to go to Accotink, there being a man there by the name of Joseph Styles who knew him and wrote the pass; that on Wednesday he visited Accotink to see his sister, being accompanied by a guard; that he was no farther than Accotink, two miles from his stepfather's, during his stay there except on one occasion when he rode with his mother and sister up to his brother Charles', about five miles from Alexandria toward Mount Vernon; that on Sunday afternoon he left his mother's for his brother Charles' on his way back to New Jersey where he proposed stopping a short time prior to his return to Missouri; that he stopped at his brother's until Monday night when he was arrested by the lieutenant of Company B, of the Fifth Michigan Regiment, on the charge of using another man's pass; that he (Ballenger) was a clerk in the dry goods house of Powell, Levy & Lemon, Saint Joseph, during the time he was there; that Isaac Hosea was clerk for Toole & Fairleigh, dry goods dealers in Saint Joseph and came east to visit his relatives; that he (Ballenger) has never been under arrest before except in Saint Joseph where he was arrested by some soldiers one evening because he would not allow them to enter the store of which he was clerk, and that in this instance he was discharged after a few minutes by the officer of the company; that he (Ballenger) has no relatives in the rebel army to his knowledge; that he was in Saint Joseph until the day before he left for New Jersey; that one reason for his leaving was the dullness of business there, it being his intention when he left to return again to his situation.

We have here it seems a violent secessionist who no doubt left his situation in Missouri because his insults to Federal soldiers had made it too warm for him. Coming here and being refused a pass into Virginia on account of his sentiments and antecedents having been made known before him, he in defiance of the constituted military authorities here crossed the river into Virginia on a fraudulent pass and was hovering on the outside of one of the most vulnerable portions of our entire lines at the time of his arrest. I see but one prudent course to pursue in this case, and that is to keep him in close confinement until the end of the war for the Union when there will no longer be any danger in violent secessionists going at large on fraudulent passes.

All of which is respectfully submitted by your obedient servant,

E. J. ALLEN.

HDQRS. CITY GUARD, PROVOST-MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 5, 1862.

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal.

GENERAL: In the case of William Oswald Dundas, a prisoner confined in the Old Capitol Building, I have the honor to report as follows:

Said Dundas was sent to this office on the 1st of November last by Brig. Gen. L. P. Graham, stationed between this city and Bladensburg, Md., with a statement that he had been in the habit of leaving his home in the neighborhood on horseback early in the evening and returning sometimes late at night; that when challenged he would represent himself as "officer of the road," and would use tantalizing and insulting language, asking the sentinels why they did not arrest him, &c.; that the inmates of the house where he lived had been suspected of being secessionists, and that on previous occasions signals had been made from said house; that at the time of his arrest Dundas attempted to force his horse past the sentry challenging him, but did not succeed in so doing; that on being delivered by the arresting sentinel to the officer of the guard Dundas represented himself as a gentleman of means and one who had a right to go where he chose; that in answer to the inquiry why he was always away from his home at night in the present unquiet state of the country, knowing that the roads were lined with picket and grand guard, he said that he went to visit the neighbors; that as his time was his own he could use it as he chose; that in answer to the question whether he was in favor of our Government he said he was not; that he would never be with a Government that oppressed his country; that finally in answer to the question whether he was a secessionist he admitted that he was.

On examination at this office on the 1st of November Dundas stated that he was twenty years of age, and resided about four miles from Washington on the old Bladensburg turnpike; that he was a farmer and lived on a farm owned by his mother; that on the night of the 31st of October he was returning from Mrs. Wood's, who resided two miles from where he did, and when arriving at the forks of the road he was challenged by a soldier who was on guard; that he answered he was a "resident of the road," and not "officer of the road," as had been reported; that this was the first time that he had ever been stopped by the guard at that place; that when he was brought before the major (De Zeng) he told him the same in regard to himself as he stated on this occasion; that he admitted to those arresting him that he was a secessionist as he admitted on the present occasion, but had never taken any part with the secessionists against the Federal Government; that he had friends in the South but had no relatives in the Southern Army; that he had not written or received any communications to or from any of his friends now living in the South or verbally sent any communication to any of them; that he would not take the oath of allegiance to the Federal Government of the United States; that he would take the oath of allegiance to support the Confederate States Government so-called were he called upon to do so, and would be proud to be called a rebel under the present existing circumstances.

In a note to the Secretary of War dated January 29 Dundas says that he told the authorities of the provost-marshal's office that he would not take the oath of allegiance, and does not see why a man should be taken from his family at night and be made to take an oath which he had taken before—that is to support the Constitution of the United States, and that he is willing to take the oath the second time. He also says that if he had told the officers he was a Democrat he would have been taken for as good as a rebel, and consequently he told them he was a rebel to wind up his statement of the case. Not content with this lame and prevaricating management of his own case he takes up the vindication of a fellow-prisoner and kindred spirit named Isaac Ballenger whom he has met with in prison, and of whose case he can know nothing except what he has ascertained in secret conclave and rebel communion in the Old Capitol. This Ballenger as will be seen by a report accompanying this is a violent secessionist who undertook to cross our lines into the rebel States in a surreptitious manner and was only arrested by the vigilance of our soldiers on the outposts.

Here we have the case of a sprig of would-be nobility suspected of disloyal practices but claiming to be "a gentleman of means" (to use his own language) with a right to go where he pleased night or day without being questioned by common soldiers on duty. When challenged by the sentinels of the U. S. Army picketed around the national capital day and night, through sunshine and storm, the faithful guardians of their country's honor and integrity, he has invariably thrown himself upon his dignity, insulted them to their faces and defied them to arrest him.

After his arrest under the most suspicious circumstances, relying upon the power and influence of his patrimonial wealth acquired from the patronage of the Federal Government, he has refused to take the oath of allegiance after having by his own acts compromised his position; has acknowledged fealty to the Confederate Government and has gloried in being called a rebel. All this has been done after plenty of time for reflection after the excitement naturally attending his arrest.

In his prevaricating note to the Secretary of War after nearly three months' confinement he but superciliously insults the intelligence of that Department while calling into question the common sense and honesty of this office. He says that he does not see why a man should be taken from his family at night and be made to take an oath which he had taken before—that is to support the Constitution of the United States; that he is willing to take the same oath again, &c.

It was under very different circumstances than being taken from his family at night that he expressed his unwillingness to take the oath of allegiance at this office. He here said nothing about having previously taken the oath even to support the Constitution of the United States and a proposition to have taken the same oath again with the "mental reservations" that he would be likely to make would hardly have been satisfactory.

He also says that if he had told the officers [at the provost-marshal's office] that he was a Democrat he would have been taken for as good as a rebel and he consequently told them he was a rebel to wind up his statement of the case and I suppose get rid of the plebeian public servants who were humbly endeavoring to ascertain his true relation to the Government.

Of course it is not necessary for me to say to you or the honorable Secretary of War that we are not in the habit at this office of confounding Democrats and rebels and that a man's civil politics or religion has nothing to do with his examination or disposition at these headquarters; and any full-grown man that would resort to such a miserable subterfuge and falsehood to effect his release does not deserve to succeed in his attempt.

The undertaking of Dundas after essaying to clear himself by this miserable prevarication to set himself up as a court-martial and coolly recommend the simultaneous release of one of the most dangerous characters confined in the Old Capitol Building is too ridiculous to be laughable these serious times.

Of course it is unnecessary for me to suggest that the safety of the country demands as a military necessity that this pert sprig of aristocracy—so full of secession venom that he would gladly forswear his foster Government, swear allegiance to the Confederate States and glory in being called a rebel—should be kept in close confinement until the end of the war for the Union. Of course any oath that he would now take would be merely for the purpose of getting out of confinement and would be but adding perjury to treason.

All of which is respectfully submitted by your obedient servant,

E. J. ALLEN.

SIR: I have to acknowledge and thank you for the information contained in your confidential letter of the 18th ultimo. Having referred it to the Quartermaster-General of the United States that officer has learned upon inquiring of the officers in charge of the clothing contracts at New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore that they have now no contracts with the house of Wethered Bros., of Baltimore, but that Colonel Thomas, formerly in charge of the clothing depot at Philadelphia, made a contract with Charles E. Wethered for 32,000 yards of six-quarter dark blue kersey at $1.69 per yard, which was completed on November 21, 1861. This it is thought by the Quartermaster-General is probably the person and the contract referred to by you, and he presumes that Mr. Wethered had visited Europe to purchase wool at a time when its increased price in this country bore heavily upon contractors for army cloths.

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

I resigned to avoid bearing arms against my father's home, my father's sons and my relations, all of whom are scattered through the seceded States, and to whom I am bound by the ties of blood and affection stronger than life itself. I prefer to give up my commission in the Navy rather than incur the displeasure and risk the affection of those dear ones. I surrender twenty years' service and an ample support rather than offer bodily hurt to them. I therefore cannot take the oath offered me. Could I subscribe to it why should I have resigned? I am and have been a citizen of the State of Maryland since the year 1848 when I married in Annapolis, and have at the present time a wife, a child and a little property there. I have no property of any kind in the seceded States. I am not hostile to the Constitution and laws of the United States. I am not its enemy. I venerate the flag, and would to God the strife it is now engaged in was with a foreign and not a domestic foe that I might hazard limb and life and shed freely my blood in its defense. I am pained to feel that a suspicion rests upon me and that it is necessary I should be compelled to declare my intention to remain a quiet, unobtrusive person in the city of Annapolis during this civil war. If the Government officials will [not] consider me above suspicion but hold me a prisoner, a man of felonious intent, I am surely at their disposition. I need no watchman, I need no guard. If I am to be consigned to the walls of a prison I will be the bearer of the order to its keeper and will deliver my body to his care until such a time as it may please the Government to order my release. I simply desire to be permitted to occupy the position of a citizen of the United States just as thousands of men are to-day. I have finished.

SIR: Yours of February 3 to Col. Luther Day, judge-advocate, inquiring as to a list of prisoners at Camp Chase prison was opened by Governor Tod in absence of Colonel Day. Governor Tod sent me to the prison to see as to cause of commitment of these men, &c. I found that all the persons, viz, G. A. Davis, Matthew Bright, George T. Henderson, J. Allen Harwood, W. H. Wise, Lewis S. Farrell, A. W. Jones, J. W. Wigal, W. H. Peterson, J. B. Smith, G. S. Grove, John W. Coffman, John Barneto and Thomas W. Tillman had been already discharged or sent away. The bedding, &c., at camp is public property but is all needed there. There is none that can be sent with the prisoners worth anything. Jonathan Whisler, sent there from Blue's Gap, Va., as a military prisoner is willing to be discharged on his parole give security and remain in Ohio and not bear arms. He was a Virginia militiaman and pressed into the service. Is a rheumatic man and I am satisfied is a non-combatant and ought to be released.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 1st instant I have the honor to report that N. D. Falls is not the president of the Bay line of steamers. The president's name is Moor N. Falls. There is an inaccuracy therefore in the intercepted letter. The person alluded to is no doubt the same. I do not believe from the examination I have made that he has been concerned in the transmission of correspondence except as the provost-marshal is. Open letters with the Confederate postage inclosed are sometimes forwarded to him and handed by him to the provost messenger on the steamer to be delivered to Major-General Wool for examination before they are transmitted to Virginia.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General.

ALEXANDRIA, February 9, 1862.

HON. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State:

To-day the Rev. J. R. Stewart was arrested in the pulpit of Saint Paul's Church in Alexandria for omitting the prayer for the President of the United States by your detective here, Mr. Morton. The omission of that prayer occurred in the same church in my presence weeks since. I reported the fact to the headquarters of the [Army of the] Potomac for the information of the Government, but did not deem it an act that authorized or called for my interference. Had it been a matter of duty I would cheerfully have taken such measures as the circumstance called for and will execute any instructions as may be given in the case but as it now stands I conceive my rightful authority has been interfered with and the quiet and police order of the city disturbed. May I ask to be put in possession of the Government's views in such case. My own views and object in the performance of duty here has been to win rather than force back the affections and adherence of Southern people to the Constitution and its blessings. This I have and still believe the true policy to reinstate the Constitution in all its integrity.

W. R. MONTGOMERY,
Brigadier-General.

ALEXANDRIA, February 9, 1862.

Hon. F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State:

Attended church over which Reverend Mr. Stewart is pastor. He omitted to read prayer for the President of the United States, also for Congress. I requested him to read them twice. He declined. Ordered him under arrest as a state prisoner. He is a Northern secessionist.

S. W. MORTON.

HEADQUARTERS, Baltimore, February 10, 1862.

His Excellency AUGUSTUS W. BRADFORD,
Governor of Maryland.

SIR: Hon. R. B. Carmichael has for many months been one of the prime movers of disaffection and disloyalty on the Eastern Shore of Maryland. He was the author of a treasonable memorial to the legislature, published and circulated under his own signature while holding a place on the bench. His charges to the grand juries in his district have been inflammatory and insulting to the Federal Government. He has caused military officers to be indicted and has charged grand juries that it was their duty to find bills against all persons who had given information on which arrests had been made by order of the Government. Under his instructions Brigadier-General Lockwood—whose conduct has been marked by the most prudent and discreet forbearance in the execution of my orders which have been by many regarded as too lenient—was subjected to the indignity of an indictment. This man is a dishonor to the bench. He is a dishonor to the loyal State of Maryland. I have forbore to take any measures in regard to him by the advice of gentlemen on the Eastern Shore; but I believe the feeling is now nearly unanimous that his disloyal and vindictive conduct has been endured too long. It was proposed months ago to arrest him and send him to Fort Lafayette. Though he deserves it I prefer to have him sent into the Confederate States to be turned over to the insurgents with whom he sympathizes and whose cause he is doing all in his power to promote. He is unworthy of the protection of a Government which he is laboring to subvert and he ought not to enjoy its privileges. I think he should go where he will find congenial associations. In this matter I should be glad to know Your Excellency's views.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General.

Extract from proceedings of the British Imperial Parliament, Monday, February 10, 1862, in relation to the arrest of British subjects in America.*

The Earl of Carnarvon said he was anxious to ask a question of some importance of the noble earl [Russell], the secretary of foreign affairs. The House would remember that on Friday last he made some remarks on the case of an Englishman in America who had been taken into custody and sent to prison under the warrant of Mr. Seward. Since Friday he had received further information in reference to similar cases, but they were if possible worse than the one he then mentioned. He understood that at this moment there were no less than three British subjects who had been for four or five months confined in Lafayette prison, and they had been detained there without any charge of any sort or kind having been made against them. There had been no inquiry made into their cases. An inquiry had been asked for, but it had been refused unless they first consented to take the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States.

* See Executive Document, third session Thirty-seventh Congress, 1862-1863, Vol. I.

Now if that were so it was clear that those persons had been illegally arrested, illegally imprisoned and illegally detained, and there ought not to be a moment lost before clearly understanding the present position of affairs. [Hear.] In these American prisons there were confined persons of every rank and means and intelligence, and many who had been brought up in affluence—there were representatives of the liberal professions, of the bar, the press and the judicature, and many of the best classes of American society. They had been arrested and dragged from prison to prison and they had undergone very great hardships. So far as it concerned the American citizens their lordships' House had nothing to do except in this way that their position would throw some light upon the manner in which British subjects were treated in prison. The state of this prison was very bad. In it were confined twenty-three political prisoners, and two-thirds of them were placed in irons. From this prison the light and air were excluded, the ventilation was imperfect and the atmosphere was oppressive and intolerable. The prisoners were deprived of the decencies of life, and the water supplied to them was foul and for some purposes it was salt. He had received these facts from an authority which he could not doubt, and he believed in their correctness.

The names of the British subjects were Charles Green* formerly a British merchant resident at Savannah. He went from Liverpool, and his connection with this country had been maintained to the present time, for he had now a son residing at Liverpool. The next person was Andrew Low,* also a British merchant residing at Savannah, and he had children now at school at Brighton. The other person was an Irish laboring man who went out to America in October, 1860, in search of a relative resident near Harper's Ferry, and the troops of the Federal Government having found him there he was taken into custody and the oath of allegiance having been tendered to him and refused he was dragged to a prison in New York and had since been confined there. Now if these persons had broken the laws of the United States they ought to be brought to trial and if they were found guilty then let them be sentenced according as the law directed; but if they had not broken any law then they ought not to be kept in prison for an indefinite period and on secret charges. He understood that an inquiry would be directed into the cases of these persons, but Mr. Seward made it a preliminary condition that they should take the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States. Now the very fact that these persons would not do that served to show that they were British subjects. He wished to know how far the noble earl had been informed of these things and what steps or measures he had taken to obtain redress.

* See Lyons to Seward, November 16, 1861, with its inclosure, and Seward to Lyons in answer January 6, 1862, case of Andrew Low, Mrs. John Low, and Charles Green, p. 1031 et seq.

Earl Russell said :

I conclude that the noble earl has hardly read the papers which have been laid upon the table of the House by command of Her Majesty for the noble earl would there have found a correspondence between Lord Lyons and Mr. Seward and also between Her Majesty's Government and Lord Lyons on this subject. The noble earl in his statement seems hardly to have taken into account the very critical circumstances in which the Government of the United States has been placed. In the spring of last year nine of the States in the scheme of confederation declared war against the Government of the United States. In such circumstances as these it is usual for all governments to imprison upon suspicion persons who they consider are taking part in the war against them.

In a case which happened not many years ago, viz, 1848, when there was a conspiracy for the purpose of overturning the authority of Her Majesty the secretary of state applied to the other House of Parliament for authority to arrest persons on suspicion, viz, for the suspension of the habeas corpus act, and in the papers presented to Parliament at that date there are two cases in which the lord-lieutenant of Ireland had ordered the arrest of two American persons; a complaint was there-upon made by the American Government, and my noble friend (Lord Palmerston), at that time at the head of the foreign office, replied that with regard to those persons the lord-lieutenant had due information upon which he relied that those persons were engaged in practices tending to subvert the authority of the crown and were aiding practices which were being pursued in that part of the kingdom. Those persons were never brought to trial, but on that authority they were arrested.

After this civil war broke out in America complaints were made by certain British subjects that they had been arrested upon suspicion. I immediately directed Lord Lyons to complain of that act as an act enforced by the sole authority of the President of the United States and especially in regard to one of those persons there seemed very light grounds of suspicion and I said he ought not to be detained. I am not here to vindicate the acts of the American Government for one or for any of those cases. Whether they had good grounds for suspicion or whether they had light grounds for suspicion it is not for me here to say. If I thought there were light grounds for suspicion it was my business to represent that to the Government of the United States, but it is not my business to undertake their defense in this House. The American minister replied that the President had by the Constitution the right in time of war or rebellion to arrest persons upon suspicion and to confine them in prison during his will and pleasure.

This question has been much debated in America and judges of high authority have declared that the writ of habeas corpus could not be suspended except by an act of Congress. But certain lawyers have written on both sides of the question; and I have recently received a pamphlet in which it is laid down that the meaning of the law of the United States is that the writ of habeas corpus can be suspended on the sole authority of the President of the United States. The question itself was brought before Congress and a resolution was proposed that there should be no arbitrary arrests except with the sanction of Congress. But it was contended that it was part of the prerogative of the President and a large majority decided that the question should not be discussed and thereby left the President to act for himself. So much for the power given by the Constitution of the United States.

With regard to the particular acts which the Secretary of State under the sanction of the President has authorized as to the arrest of British subjects as well as American subjects, I am not here to defend those arrests, but I certainly do contend that it is an authority which must belong to some person in the Government if they believe that persons are engaged in treasonable conspiracies in the taking part as spies or in furnishing arms against the Government. I believe that in regard to many of the cases of arbitrary authority that power was abused. I believe that not only with regard to persons arrested but in the courses pursued there was unnecessary suspicion, but I do not find that in any case there has been any refusal to allow British consuls at places where convenient to hear the cases of those persons or when a statement was made by the British minister that Lord Lyons was slow in representing the case to Mr. Seward. Lord Lyons represented to me that these cases took up a great part of his time and he was anxious to investigate every one of them.

Nor can I say that Mr. Seward has refused at any time to listen to those complaints. He has always stated that he had information upon which he could depend that these persons were engaged in treasonable practices against the Government of the United States. That being the question, the noble earl states upon his own authority that the arrests are illegal and that the persons are kept in prison illegally. But that is more than I can venture to say. I can hardly venture to say that the President of the United States has not the power, supposing persons are engaged in treasonable conspiracies against the authority of the Government, to keep them in prison without bringing them to trial; and it would require a strong denial of the authority of the law officers of the United States before I could presume to say that the President of the United States had not that power.

With regard to the particular cases which the noble earl has referred to I am unable to say whether or not some of those persons may not have been engaged in these conspiracies. We all know that during the time in which the United States have been divided there has been much sympathy shown in this country on one side and on the other; some have shown a strong sympathy for the North and some for the South. [Hear, hear.] With regard to some of those cases I have stated I thought the circumstances were such that it was quite evident that they had not been engaged in any conspiracy. There was one gentleman who happened to be a partner in a firm, and the other partners had great connections with the South. It was true that the firm had strong Southern sympathies, but the gentleman himself was a firm supporter of the Government of the Union. It was the mere circumstance of letters being sent to his partner which induced his arrest. I thought that a most arbitrary and unjust proceeding. [Hear.] Mr. Seward said he thought the circumstances were enough to induce suspicion; but as soon as it was ascertained that there was no ground for suspicion that gentleman was released.

An innocent person being arrested and confined for several days in prison was undoubtedly a great grievance, and one for which he was entitled to compensation; but beyond the right to complain and beyond the constant remonstrances of Lord Lyons, the British minister, in every such case I do not hold that the circumstances warrant further interference. I believe the gentleman to whom I allude had stated that he expected his own friends would procure his release. The noble lord mentioned three cases. I was not aware of the cases the noble lord would mention. But with regard to Mr. Green this is the statement he made on the 5th of September: "I desire no action to be taken by my friends in England in consequence of my arrest. Lord Lyons has represented my case, and it will receive investigation in due time. Meanwhile I am in the hands of the officers of this fort."

There have been other cases of arrest and imprisonment under circumstances involving considerable hardship. There have been many cases of arbitrary imprisonment without trial; and these cases of arbitrary imprisonment have taken place under a Government which is engaged in a civil war, perhaps one of the most serious and formidable in which any country was ever engaged. Right or wrong, it is not for us to decide; but we must admit that all the means that have been used by civilized nations in warfare against each other are open to the Americans in this case. With respect to the particular cases I believe that to whatever cause it may be owing—whether owing to the novelty of the case in North America or to the inexperience of persons who are not conversant with the carrying out of affairs, or whether it is this that arbitrary power can never be safely intrusted to any one without being abused—to whatever cause it is owing I believe there will ever be many cases of abuse of such power. [Hear, hear.]

But in every case where a British subject is arrested and a reasonable case is made out for him I shall be ready to instruct Lord Lyons to bring the case under the consideration of the Government of the United States. Lord Lyons has never been wanting in his duty. [Hear, hear.] He has I think shown himself a vigilant British minister in that respect; and I trust your lordships will not think that these cases have been neglected by the Government of this country. [Hear.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 11, 1862.
 Maj. Gen. JOHN A. DIX, Baltimore, Md.

GENERAL: Your letter of the 8th instant relative to Mr. N. D. Falls has been duly received and I thank you for the information which it contains.

I am, general, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

OFFICE OF COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF PRISONERS,
Sandusky, Ohio, February 11, 1862.
 Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 28th ultimo and I beg leave to say in reply that in answer to my inquiries as to the facts and circumstances connected with the arrest of certain prisoners confined at Camp Chase to whom I referred in my letter to the Adjutant-General of the 13th ultimo I have been informed by direction of Governor Tod of Ohio that all of them had been already discharged at his receipt of my letter. I am not informed by what authority the discharge was made, though I judge it was not made by order of the Governor as his private secretary went out to Camp Chase to inquire for the men. The following are their names, viz: G. A. Davis, Matthew Bright, George T. Henderson, J. Allen Harwood, W. H. Wise, Lewis S. Farrell, A. W. Jones, J. W. Wigal, W. H. Peterson, J. B. Smith, G. S. Grove, John W. Coffman, John Barneto and Thomas W. Tillman. From those it was my intention to select the most favorable cases.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. HOFFMAN,

Lieut. Col., U. S. Army, Commissary-General of Prisoners.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 12, 1862.

GOVERNOR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 28th ultimo introducing General George W. Morgan and requesting the Department to consult freely with him relative to prisoners confined at Camp Chase, Ohio, and also to have your duties in the premises defined and pointed out. In reply I have the honor to state that the Department sometimes desires to take the advice of gentlemen of known character and standing in regard to the cases of prisoners confined at different military posts in the country so that the Secretary of State may act intelligently and for the best interests of all concerned. Governor Dennison was kind enough to perform these duties for a time at Camp Chase, and when his term of office as governor expired the Secretary sent to you not as a duty but as an act of kindness to him and for the Government of the United States, and if he should have occasion to make similar requests in the future he will endeavor to explain the nature of the service required in each case in the communication to you upon the subject.

I have the honor to be, governor, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,

Assistant Secretary.

ALEXANDRIA, VA., February 12, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: In compliance with your request I respectfully submit to you the following report of the arrest of a secessionist on Sunday last in this city whose arrest and subsequent release by order of General Montgomery occasioned considerable excitement.

The Rev. J. R. Stewart, an Episcopal clergyman officiating at Saint Paul's Church, has long been notoriously known in this city as an open and avowed secessionist, denying the authority of the Government of the United States and recognizing that of the (so-called) Confederate States and of Bishop Meade who has seceded. He has habitually refused to read the prayer for the President of the United States as established by the authority of the church and only omitted to pray for Jeff. Davis and his Government (as he avowed to his congregation one week before) because they (the church) were so peculiarly circumstanced. His congregation is made up almost wholly of rebel citizens of Alexandria, well known for their habitual mockery of the Stars and Stripes and their insolent bearing toward Union citizens and U. S. soldiers.

Learning the truth of these statements beyond a question I attended Saint Paul's Church on Sunday morning and when Stewart omitted to read the prayer for the President of the United States as required by the church service I arose and respectfully requested him to do so. He paying no attention to my request I again requested him to read the prayer with the same result. Immediately Captain Farnsworth, of the Eighth Illinois Cavalry, who was present and to me an entire stranger, arose and demanded that he should read the prayer. Still refusing Captain Farnsworth ordered his sergeant to arrest and take him to the quarters of Colonel Farnsworth, of the same regiment, which order was immediately executed. Fearing a collision between the congregation and the military present I immediately directed Captain Farnsworth to hold him only as a state prisoner subject to your order.

After arriving at the headquarters of Colonel Farnsworth, Stewart sent for Brigadier-General Montgomery, military governor of the city, who soon called in. At the request of General Montgomery Stewart was delivered to his custody and was not long after by him discharged from arrest I am informed unconditionally.

This arrest I believe was approved and applauded by the Union citizens of Alexandria and by the military officers here with scarcely an exception.

In this connection I deem it proper for me to attempt to give you some correct idea of the condition of things in this city and to call the attention of the Government to the abuses (as they seem to me) which are practiced almost constantly. There are a large number of secession sympathizers resident here who openly and defiantly boast of being secessionists and avow their disposition to aid the rebels all in their power and to do us all the harm they can. Many of them, especially the females, are in the practice of insulting the soldiers of the United States, denouncing our flag and the authority which upholds it. Yet these people are freely granted passes to go to and fro to Washington and wherever else they desire by the military authorities.

The divisions of Generals Heintzelman, Sumner and Franklin are within from two to four miles of Alexandria, and many of the men of those divisions are obliged to visit here constantly to procure their letters, supplies, express matter, &c. Two regiments of troops are quartered in Alexandria, yet in all parts of the city may be found the vilest of whisky dens and rum holes and other vile places of corrupt debauch to demoralize the soldiers, carrying on their trades not only without opposition but with (many of them) absolute protection. In consequence the streets leading from the city toward the camps of those divisions are almost constantly filled with staggering, drunken soldiers, poisoned and rendered unfit to serve their country in this trying hour; their money filched from them, the Army disgraced and weakened, and all under the eye and protection of military officers of the General Government.

Under this state of things I have no doubt that Alexandria is made a rendezvous by rebels and a depot whence information and correspondence is obtained and constantly kept up. Rebels who are in active correspondence and close league with the enemy have been arrested and passes from high military functionaries found upon them.

In conclusion I beg to suggest the great importance to the cause of the Union that more stringent measures should be adopted and a wiser policy pursued in the military administration of the affairs at this point.

I am, sir, respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. W. MORTON,
Special Government Agent.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: Referring to my note of the 4th of December last relative to the alleged maltreatment of the captain of the schooner Louisa Agnes I now have the honor to inclose to you the copy of a communication of yesterday addressed to this Department by the Secretary of the Navy on that subject.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to your lordship the assurance of my high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, *Washington, February 12, 1862.*Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: In compliance with your request of the 4th of December last the Department wrote for statements from the officers of the U. S. steamer Susquehanna respecting the treatment of the captain of the English schooner Louisa Agnes, seized for a violation of the blockade. The statements have just been received, and are herewith submitted with a letter from Flag Officer Du Pont dated the 28th ultimo. Will you please return them when you shall have no further use for them?

I have the honor to be,

GIDEON WELLES.

Hon. GIDEON WELLES, Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

SIR: On the return to this port of the Susquehanna from blockading duty I called the attention of Captain Lardner to the subject of the treatment of the master and crew of the English schooner Louisa Agnes.

I have the honor to inclose communications from Captain Lardner, Lieutenant (Commanding) Bankhead and Lieutenant Weaver.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. F. DU PONT,
Flag Officer, Commanding South Atlantic Blockading Squadron.

U. S. STEAMER SUSQUEHANNA,
Port Royal, January 24, 1862.

Flag Officer S. F. DU PONT,

Comdg. South Atlantic Block. Squadron, Port Royal, S. C.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a copy of a dispatch from the Navy Department of December 11 referring to the treatment of the master and crew of the English schooner Louisa Agnes together with extract from Lord Lyons' letter to the Secretary of State and an extract from the affidavit of the master, to which my attention is called.

Captain Chauncey who commanded this ship at the time was detached soon afterward. From the senior lieutenant, Bankhead, now in command of the Pembina, I inclose a statement of the treatment and condition of the men; also one from Lieutenant Weaver, of this ship.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. L. LARDNER,
Captain.

[Sub-inclosure No. 3.]

U. S. STEAMER SUSQUEHANNA,
Port Royal, S. C., January 24, 1862.

Capt. JAMES L. LARDNER,

Commanding U. S. Steamer Susquehanna, Port Royal, S. C.

SIR: In reply to your request of this day I have to state that the master of the schooner Louisa Agnes was received on board this ship on the 10th day of September, 1861. He (Robert Nicholson, master of the schooner Louisa Agnes) was furnished with bedding and a hammock and took his meals in one of the messes of the crew of this ship where he was treated as a member of said mess. The said Nicholson would not have been received in any officers' mess as his personal condition was filthy and ragged in the extreme.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. W. WEAVER,
Lieutenant, U. S. Navy.

[Sub-inclosure No. 4.]

U. S. GUN-BOAT PEMBINA, Port Royal, January 25, 1862.

Capt. JAMES L. LARDNER,

Commanding U. S. Steamer Susquehanna.

SIR: In answer to your request to furnish you with the particulars as to the treatment of the captain and two of the crew of the Louisa Agnes while on board of the Susquehanna, of which ship I was first lieutenant, I have to state that the said captain and men after having been transferred from the Cambridge were both messed and berthed. He, the said captain, was recognized by several of the crew as having served on board a U. S. vessel of war in the capacity of seaman at some previous time.

His personal appearance and want of cleanliness was such that I did not feel justified in berthing him in the steerage where I had been in the habit of putting men of his class while on board of the Susquehanna. A ration was issued for himself and the two men, and a place assigned on the forward orlop deck (under a sentry's charge) for their effects. He was treated as well as the crew of the ship and quite as well as I judged from his manners and appearance he had any reason to expect.

While the said captain and two men were on board of the Susquehanna none of them were put in irons or in any manner deprived of their personal liberty, but were treated with all the consideration which men in their situation were entitled to.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. P. BANKHEAD,
Lieutenant, Commanding.

FORT HAMILTON, New York Harbor, February 13, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: There are now about 170 prisoners at Fort Lafayette. I have to request that immediate orders may be given that no more be sent to that post. I have to request if the good of the service will permit that some designated portion of the above prisoners be sent to Fort Columbus or Fort Warren.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. BURKE,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Executive Order, No. 1, Relating to Political Prisoners.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 14, 1862.

The breaking out of a formidable insurrection based on a conflict of political ideas being an event without precedent in the United States was necessarily attended by great confusion and perplexity of the public mind. Disloyalty before unsuspected suddenly became bold, and treason astonished the world by bringing at once into the field military forces superior in number to the standing Army of the United States.

Every department of the Government was paralyzed by treason. Defection appeared in the Senate, in the House of Representatives, in the Cabinet, in the Federal courts; ministers and consuls returned from foreign countries to enter the insurrectionary councils or land or naval forces; commanding and other officers of the Army and in the Navy betrayed our councils or deserted their posts for commands in the insurgent forces. Treason was flagrant in the revenue and in the post-office service as well as in the Territorial governments and in the Indian reserves.

Not only governors, judges, legislators and ministerial officers in the States but even whole States rushed one after another with apparent unanimity into rebellion. The capital was besieged and its connection with all the States cut off.

Even in the portions of the country which were most loyal political combinations and secret societies were formed furthering the work of disunion, while from motives of disloyalty or cupidity or from excited passions or perverted sympathies individuals were found furnishing men, money and materials of war and supplies to the insurgents' military and naval forces. Armies, ships, fortifications, navy-yards, arsenals, military posts and garrisons one after another were betrayed or abandoned to the insurgents.

Congress had not anticipated and so had not provided for the emergency. The municipal authorities were powerless and inactive. The judicial machinery seemed as if it had been designed not to sustain the Government but to embarrass and betray it.

Foreign intervention openly invited and industriously instigated by the abettors of the insurrection became imminent and has only been prevented by the practice of strict and impartial justice with the most perfect moderation in our intercourse with nations.

The public mind was alarmed and apprehensive though fortunately not distracted or disheartened. It seemed to be doubtful whether the Federal Government which one year before had been thought a model worthy of universal acceptance had indeed the ability to defend and maintain itself.

Some reverses which perhaps were unavoidable, suffered by newly levied and inefficient forces, discouraged the loyal and gave new hopes to the insurgents. Voluntary enlistments seemed about to cease and desertions commenced. Parties speculated upon the question whether conscription had not become necessary to fill up the armies of the United States.

In this emergency the President felt it his duty to employ with energy the extraordinary powers which the Constitution confides to him in cases of insurrection. He called into the field such military and naval forces unauthorized by the existing laws as seemed necessary. He directed measures to prevent the use of the post-office for treasonable correspondence. He subjected passengers to and from foreign countries to new passport regulations and he instituted a blockade, suspended the writ of habeas corpus in various places and caused persons who were represented to him as being or about to engage in disloyal and treasonable practices to be arrested by special civil as well as military agencies and detained in military custody when necessary to prevent them and deter others from such practices. Examinations of such cases were instituted and some of the persons so arrested have been discharged from time to time under circumstances or upon conditions compatible as was thought with the public safety.

Meantime a favorable change of public opinion has occurred. The line between loyalty and disloyalty is plainly defined. The whole structure of the Government is firm and stable. Apprehension of public danger and facilities for treasonable practices have diminished with the passions which prompted heedless persons to adopt them. The insurrection is believed to have culminated and to be declining.

The President in view of these facts and anxious to favor a return to the normal course of the administration as far as regard for the public welfare will allow directs that all political prisoners or state prisoners now held in military custody be released on their subscribing to a parole engaging them to render no aid or comfort to the enemies in hostility to the United States.

The Secretary of War will, however, in his discretion except from the effect of this order any persons detained as spies in the service of the insurgents or others whose release at the present moment may be deemed incompatible with the public safety.

To all persons who shall be so released and who shall keep their parole the President grants an amnesty for any past offenses of treason or disloyalty which they may have committed.

Extraordinary arrests will hereafter be made under the direction of the military authorities alone.

By order of the President:

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

NEWPORT BARRACKS, KY., February 14, 1862.

Capt. J. B. FRY,

Assistant Adjutant-General and Chief of Staff.

SIR: I have the honor to report that to-day five more prisoners were sent here by Colonel Warner, Eighteenth Kentucky Volunteers, and are now confined here for safe-keeping, viz:

Benjamin Hayden, charged "with aiding and abetting Jenkins and the Adamses in their efforts to raise a company of men to burn the bridges on the Kentucky Central Railroad; also harboring and organizing recruits for the rebel army, concealing arms and supplying them therewith," &c. John Hayden, son of the said Benjamin, charged with same offenses as the father. Nelson Yarber, charged with being the "secretary and treasurer of the organization of the Knights of the Golden Circle;" also with "procuring arms, powder, &c., and distributing them to persons pledged to resist the action of the State and aid the present rebellion;" and also with "encouraging persons to enlist in companies for the accomplishment of these purposes and to intimidate by every possible means the loyal men of his neighborhood." Richard Hull, charged with being "a very desperate character," who has been "carrying a U. S. musket for some months," and "proclaimed publicly a purpose to use it for the destruction of Union men;" also that "he has been making himself a terror to all loyal men of his neighborhood." Alexander Webster, charged with having "once started to join the rebel army," but "was captured and brought back and subsequently released after which he committed a rape on the wife of a soldier, and fled to Owen County for protection."

I also report that David Kinman, sent here a few days since and reported by me as confined here, it now appears from a letter from Colonel Warner addressed to me was sent here by mistake, he being "a deserter from Captain Johnson's company." He has accordingly been released and returned to Colonel Warner in charge of one of his officers sent here for him.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

J. P. SANDERSON,
Lieutenant-Colonel Fifteenth Infantry, Commanding.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HON. EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

Under the order (No. 1) of the War Department dated February 14 the disposition of matters of this nature is transferred to the War Department and the functions of Mr. Dunn as special agent of the State Department are terminated.

He has been instructed to deliver this letter in person, and I have the pleasure in this connection of commending him to the War Department as an efficient, competent and laborious officer, whose discharge of his duties so far as known has been eminently satisfactory to this Department.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF VIRGINIA,
Fort Monroe, February 16, 1862. (Received 19th.)

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: In reply to your communication of the 13th instant in relation to "persons received and held in confinement at Fortress Monroe other than prisoners of war since the 4th of March, 1861," I have the honor to report that there are no records at these headquarters whereby such information can be obtained previous to my assuming command on the 17th of August, 1861.

On the 14th of September, 1861, I received from Major-General Dix by direction of the Secretary of War the following-named prisoners arrested in Baltimore: S. T. Wallis, George W. Brown, Henry M. Warfield, William G. Harrison, Charles H. Pitts, Leonard G. Quinlan, T. Parkin Scott, Robert M. Denison, Lawrence Sangston, Henry May, Ross Winans, F. Key Howard, John Hanson Thomas, Andrew A. Lynch and Thomas W. Hall, jr.*

On the 23d of September, 1861, Mr. Ross Winaus was released by the direction of the Secretary of War on his renewing the parole which he had given on a previous arrest. On the 24th of September the remainder of these prisoners were forwarded by direction of Lieutenant-General Scott to Fort Lafayette.

* See Vol. I, this series, p. 667, et seq., for the arrest of the members of the Maryland legislature.

In addition to the above-named prisoners Charles K. Gallagher, of North Carolina, taken on board the brig H. C. Brooks August 29, 1861, off Hatteras by Commodore Stringham's forces was retained as a prisoner at Fort Monroe from August 30 until January 25, 1862, when he was released and permitted to proceed to Norfolk on his parole.

The above list comprises all the prisoners indicated in your communication.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JOHN E. WOOL,
Major-General.

HEADQUARTERS, Baltimore, February 17, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: In accordance with the request contained in your letter of the 13th instant I have the honor to inclose a list of prisoners other than prisoners of war received at Fort McHenry since the 4th of March last. A large number of these prisoners were discharged subsequently to their transfer from Fort McHenry to other places of detention, and I have not deemed it necessary to designate them as I suppose the evidence of all such discharges is in the State Department. Mr. Malcolm Ives is regarded as a prisoner of war and is not included in the list.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General.

W. W. MORRIS,

Colonel Second Artillery, Commanding Post.

FORT MCHENRY, MD., February 16, 1862.

FORT HAMILTON, New York Harbor, February 17, 1862.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,

Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Inclosed you will receive papers containing information ordered by you in your letter of the 13th instant. I had but little else to guide me except my own judgment in designating those prisoners who were not prisoners of war. The lists may therefore want more or less correction at the Department of State. There are now (assumed by me) at Fort Lafayette 112 prisoners of war and 51 prisoners other than prisoners of war; total, 163. It will be seen that there were no prisoners at Fort Lafayette until the 22d of July, 1861. There have been no prisoners of war or state kept at Fort Hamilton.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

MARTIN BURKE,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Brig Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal.

GENERAL: I have had the honor to have laid before me by yourself a correspondence in which Lord Lyons requests of the honorable Secretary of State to be informed in regard to the case of Thomas Craggs, a prisoner confined in the Old Capitol Building who claims to be a British subject, and in which the matter is referred to yourself for a report as to his citizenship, &c. I have the honor to report in this case that Craggs claims to be a British subject, and in fact there is no doubt but that he has lived nearly eight years securely and prosperously under the protection of the United States Government without ever troubling himself to assume allegiance thereto. Of course this is all right, as the Government claims to be a free asylum for the emigration of all lands and to have enough native citizens ever ready to defend its flag and its proteges from assault at home or abroad.

But just before the arrest of Craggs several Federal pickets had been foully murdered in the immediate vicinity of his home near Accotink, Fairfax County, Va. Although the act was generally attributed to a guerrilla band of independent Texas rangers who frequented the neighborhood and it seems claimed the glory of the ignominious achievement, still the citizens were considered too indifferent to say the least to the perpetration of such acts among them, and several of them including Craggs were arrested by order of Brigadier-General Heintzelman, who regarded it as a military necessity that such citizens should be removed from daily intercourse with the rebel pickets. Craggs' own brother-in-law, Matthew Plaskett, also a British subject as he claims, who frequently stayed at Craggs' house, is by his own statement a scapegrace of the most disreputable kind, having voluntarily taken up arms against the benign Government which had welcomed him to its hospitable shores and given him a home beneath its liberal flag.

However, Brig. Gen. S. Williams, assistant adjutant-general, being satisfied on an examination of the case that Craggs himself was not a particularly dangerous man, and feeling disposed to ameliorate his situation as much as possible compatible with the public safety ordered that a parole of honor be tendered to him with a view to his release, specifying among other things that he should not leave the District of Columbia without permission of the provost-marshal. Craggs refused to execute this parole for the reason as he said that this condition would not allow him to return to his home.

As our gallant military officers would probably not require a man to be kept from his home and his family without good cause I see no alternative but for the Government to accommodate our English cousin with the best quarters and fare in the range of its republican simplicity until the lines of the Federal Army are sufficiently advanced to allow him to return to his Anglo-Virginian home and household without the possibility of detriment to the cause of the Union.

All of which is respectfully submitted by your obedient servant,
E. J. ALLEN.

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal.

GENERAL: I have had the honor of having laid before me by you a note from the honorable Secretary of State requesting a report in the case of J. Barrett Cohen, a prisoner confined in the Old Capitol Building. I beg leave to state that J. Barrett Cohen, together with M. Francis McKee, Moses P. Donaldson and Francis X. Lacross were arrested by the military authorities and committed to the Old Capitol Prison by order of General McClellan, to whom I have already made a report* in their cases after a thorough examination thereof, recommending that as an important military necessity they be held in close confinement until the end of the war for the Union. If this fact were intimated to the honorable Secretary of State I have no doubt but that it would be entirely satisfactory to him without our troubling him with a prolix duplicate report for his own consideration.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. J. ALLEN.

HDQRS. CITY GUARD, OFFICE OF THE PROVOST-MARSHAL,
Washington, D. C., February 19, 1862.
Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal.

GENERAL: In accordance with the request of the Hon. William H. Seward, Secretary of State * * * I have the honor to submit to you the following report.

The request of the honorable Secretary of State inquires only in relation to prisoners "confined in the Old Capitol Prison." In preparing the following report I have, however, given a list of all prisoners arrested by your command or sent to you for safe-keeping. The prisoners arrested by command of General Mansfield I have no record of except the few found in custody at the time you assumed the duties of provost-marshal. Those are embodied in this report.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. J. ALLEN.

Witness present:

HARRY C. EGBERT,

First Lieutenant, Twelfth Infantry.

U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS,
Springfield, February 23, 1862.

Hon. F. W. SEWARD,

Assistant Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I inclose herewith a report made by A. J. Davis, esq., and handed me on the 20th instant, of his doings in Southern Illinois. I have given it careful and thoughtful examination and fully concur in the conclusions reached by him touching the parties named as connected with those in arms against the Government. If the late order* from the War Department does not preclude the arrest of persons I would suggest that James D. Pully, A. P. Corder and Dr. John M. Clemerson, of Marion, Williamson County, be arrested at once. There can be no peace in that county while these men remain at large. I also think that it would be well to seize C. C. Carpenter at McLeansborough, Hamilton County, and Dr. D. Green at Mount Vernon, Jefferson County. The others although dangerous and noisy men may on account of our late brilliant victories on the Cumberland and Tennessee Rivers keep quiet. The persons whose arrest I recommend will not.

I have by your kindness in furnishing me the necessary assistance been able at last to completely hold in check the treasonable elements in Southern Illinois, and now hope that no more "aid and comfort" may be extended to traitors in that quarter. It is feared, however, that the order of the Secretary of War already referred to releasing all political prisoners and confining arrests to the military authorities exclusively will again embolden the bad men of Illinois to renewed acts of disloyalty. Already boasts are freely indulged that the order is a confession of the illegality of the arrests made and a guarantee against such in future and a perfect immunity against any interruption by the marshal.

It is well understood that I know almost every disloyal man in my district and such persons have been compelled to be quiet hitherto. As to what they may do hereafter I cannot say. If the Department intends that I shall as heretofore exercise an espionage over all plots of treason please inform me. If the order from the War Department transfers this duty to other hands I shall be greatly relieved; but it will take a great deal of time for any one man to become as thoroughly conversant with all the elements of disloyalty in Southern Illinois as I am. I have spent almost the entire past year in possessing myself of all sources of information likely to reach the schemes of our Illinois traitors, and I think that the disloyal in our State feel that they are completely at my mercy unless they are secured by an order from the Government at Washington. Hence the disposition to exult over the late order referred to. Will you please advise me as to my movements in the future and if my services are any longer needed in the direction mentioned?

I have discharged Mr. Frank, the detective employed in conformity to the order of your letter† to me dated December 5, 1861, and ordered him to submit his account to you for adjustment. Please refer to Mr. Bradley's letter to me from Chicago, left with you December 5, for the terms on which Mr. Frank was employed. I have paid him $150. I have also paid Mr. Davis $115. He was out of money, and I assumed that as he was here and under my charge you would approve the advance. Please inform me if Mr. Davis may remain in Illinois and how long. I can employ him to advantage but desire to use the best economy. The services of Mr. Frank and Mr. Davis have been of incalculable importance and I have no doubt they have been instrumental in preserving the public peace of Southern Illinois, as it is now well understood that nothing but the restraining fear of the marshal's office has kept from deeds of violence a great many men in the Ohio and Wabash River counties of Illinois.

* Order of February 14, 1862, p. 221.

† See p. 170.

Please to communicate with me at an early day, and as fully as convenient advise me as to the future.

I am, most respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. L. PHILLIPS,

U. S. Marshal.

[Inclosure.]

Report of A. J. Davis to U. S. Marshal D. L. Phillips, concerning certain disloyal persons in Southern Illinois.

Mr. J. P. Haynes [of Ashley, Washington County], formerly a merchant, is a violently noisy, fault-finding secessionist and does all he can to discourage enlisting for the U. S. Army, and is a member of the K. G. C. He is a North Carolinian; has considerable influence and takes great care (pains) to find fault with the administration. He told me when I first saw him that if I wanted to go South he would show me the way.

Robert and William Palmore [of Mount Vernon, Jefferson County] have the mail contract from McLeansborough to Ashley. Any person wishing to go South can get all help from them. They give all the names of men on the route and where to cross the river. I got the route from Robert, and he gave me the full particulars and said he had sent numerous persons, among whom were two Englishmen of great wealth and bearers of dispatches for the South; altogether twenty-seven persons. I got the route with the understanding that I was going South with another man named King. We started and went far enough to find the route as represented by Palmore. I then arrested King and gave him in charge of the military at Shawneetown. Palmore has a son in the Southern army; he says he gets and sends letters to him. I saw one letter written from Knoxville, Tenn. The arrangement is for any one to see William Palmore at Ashley, give him the signs and grips of the order of K. G. C.; he will bring them to the old man at Mount Vernon and give the necessary instructions for the rest of the route. The old man is about forty years old and William twenty-two or twenty-three; both very noisy secesh. They are from Tennessee.

There is a Mr. William Dodds [of Mount Vernon], clerk of the county court and the most violent of all the party at Mount Vernon. He is always talking against the administration and he has said repeatedly in my hearing he wished Jeff. Davis had Illinois and if he had not a family he would go and join the army South. He is forever cursing the heads of this Government. He says he don't try to hide his feelings as there is no Black Republican that dare arrest him. He says the K. G. C. elected him knowing his principles. He is a very influential and dangerous man. He is the main man who initiated me into the order of the K. G. C. whose whole intention is treason.

Dr. Duff Green is a very intelligent and most influential man in Mount Vernon; native of Kentucky and relative of J. C. Breckinridge and boasts of his correspondence with him. He showed me a letter on Sunday, the 16th, that he said came from Mr. Breckinridge. He is always commenting on the policy of what he calls the Black Republican Government and he always objects to all its measures and he convinces all his listeners that the Government is wrong. He has more influence than any other man in Mount Vernon. The people refer all their disputes to him and believe him implicitly as their oracle. He always concludes his remarks that he is opposed to Lincoln and his Cabinet and their policy; that his sympathies are with the South and as soon as he can get his property into money he is going South. As long as he lives under this Government he is too honorable a man to do anything against this Government, but as soon as he gets away he will come out boldly and help the South with all his powers, physically and financially. He does all he can to prevent recruiting. All these charges can be proved by Mr. Barret, postmaster, and C. D. Ham, esq. His influence is very dangerous. There are numerous other things connected with him all tending the same way. I was very careful to get well acquainted with him and to know him well before saying anything against him on account of his standing. He is surrounded by a class of men principally from the South and strongly prejudiced against the Government and generally not well educated or intelligent. He would have to be heard to fully understand him or understand the idea I try to convey.

Mr. Thompson Anglen [of Mount Vernon], a native of Tennessee, keeps a hotel; is a strong friend of the South but very cautious. He corresponds with a Mr. John Saterfield, former editor of the Mount Vernon Star, who is now in the rebel army. He has charge of the property of Colonel Bagwell, who is also in the Southern army at Bowling Green. I saw a letter from Colonel Bagwell giving a description of the fight at Green River under Colonel Terry, Texas rangers, where Colonel Terry was killed; also several letters from John Saterfield, whose paper was discontinued because of its secession proclivities. Mr. Anglen is also a merchant and magistrate and a man of considerable influence.

James M. Pace [of Mount Vernon], merchant and the principal of the express from Mount Vernon. He is a great politician and reported to be the proprietor of the underground mail route to the South. I was told so by members of the K. G. C. who have a good right to know, and I believe it is so, but of my own knowledge I cannot say. He is violent in his talk against the Government and has a good deal of influence with the people. A native of North Carolina I think, and very wealthy.

——— Williams [of Spring Garden] is a dangerous man to the Government; a native of Tennessee; a merchant and keeps a hotel; is the leader of that country and of the K. G. C.; violently opposed to the administration. I saw him on the 17th instant and heard him say in speaking of the battle at Forts Henry and Donelson and the killed that he wished it had been Lincoln and his cursed abolition administration; that the North could not whip the South for the South had better men and were fighting for their homes and the G—d d—d abolitionists were fighting for the negro. He has a brother a surgeon in the rebel army, and says he hears from him whenever he wants to. He controls the people in that place and is a dangerous man every way.

Mr. Doyle, of Spring Garden, has been traveling to the South and back three times since the battle of Bull Run. He brought letters with him for several persons in and around Spring Garden. He is carrying the underground mail regularly I think.

Mr. Henry Williams, two miles from Spring Garden, brother of ——— Williams at Spring Garden, a leading member of the K. G. C. and a leading politician, a large land owner and has in charge a large lot of land of his brother who lives in Tennessee. He has just got home from a town in the South. He says they cannot be whipped. He is violently opposed to this Government. Says he can go South when he pleases and no thanks to the Federal authorities. Says he is opposed to the war and he will oppose it in every way he can. He and his brother commenced to get up a company for the rebel army but failed. A dangerous man to the interests of the Government.

Mr. C. C. Carpenter and Mr. McIlvain [of McLeansborough, Hamilton County] are the agents of the route for passengers for Jeff. Davis' empire, the regular agents given to me by Mr. Palmore of Mount Vernon. I saw them and they gave me the necessary directions for the rest of the route. Carpenter is secretary of the K. G. C.; he showed me the minutes of all their meetings in that place. Is a lawyer and has great influence in that place, which he is using to the utmost against the Government. McIlvain is also a lawyer and the most influential in that county and is doing all he can to obstruct the Government. They are both violent, noisy and dangerous.

Doctor Clemerson [of Marion, Williamson County, Ill.], prosecuting attorney and M. D., a native of Georgia. The most wicked, malicious secessionist I ever met. He says if the postmaster at Marion and Mr. George Owens of Bainbridge and two others were killed that the K. G. C. would have Williamson County all their own way and he hopes to kill Owens and Lang (the postmaster) and he will be satisfied. He says it is no harm to kill a Black Republican; says if U. S. Marshal Phillips ever comes there he will be killed. He is a desperately vicious character and has a great influence with the people by whom he is surrounded. They are nearly all from the Southern States, are very illiterate, and Clemerson's influence is very considerable over them. He does all he can in opposition to the Government. He also keeps a grocery and gambling house and that helps him to control the frequenters of his place. He has a sister in the South whom he says he corresponds with at pleasure. He makes no secret of his sentiments, and the friends of the Government are so afraid of him they dare not say a word or they are shot at with impunity by him and his colleagues in secession. He is associated with one notorious James D. Pully, who was arrested once but released. He is so mean and desperate that I cannot command language to describe him. He hurrahs for Jeff. Davis publicly and dares any one to say a word for the Union. He and Clemerson have made the postmaster leave the place on account of being a Union man. They have shot at him and stoned his house and threatened to kill him anyhow. He has relatives at the South and a brother in the rebel army. He has been at the South several times since the war commenced and there is nothing that deters him from his mischief. He is the right kind of man to influence such people. One cannot imagine such a set of God-forsaken creatures. They are a true type of the ignorant class of Southern people.

Associated with Clemerson and Pully is one Capt. A. P. Corder, a native of Tennessee; a lawyer; has a son a captain in the rebel army, and also a great many relatives in the army of the South. He showed me several letters from his son and said he had sent him money and a pair of boots and when they were gone he should have more. He said he should send him all he wanted and if that was treason Lincoln could make the most of it; that he liked his son and if he himself was young enough he would be with him. His whole soul was with the South and his only regret was that he was not able to be with them. There are not on earth three more malicious, devilish enemies of this Government than Clemerson, Pully and Corder, and their arrest at this time would do a world of good.

All of this is respectfully submitted.

ALBERT J. DAVIS.

SIR: The inclosed papers* indicate the intention of the Government to allow certain persons released from arrest to return to the South. One or two discharged from custody at Fort Warren under your late order have applied to me for the requisite papers. This is a new class of cases and I ask your direction in regard to them.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Wheeling, Va., February 25, 1862.

Hon. E. M. STANTON,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Samuel Clark, of Harrison County, Va., was engaged in assisting the quartermaster of General Morris in getting forage and as a guide in Randolph County, and on the 31st day of July, 1861, was taken prisoner by the Confederates at Big Springs and taken to Huntersville, thence to Richmond and afterward as is reported to New Orleans. I doubt, however, his removal to the latter city. Mr. Clark was not regularly enrolled in any company. He is a heavy-built man, dark complexion, arching eyebrows, black whiskers and a true and valuable man.

I inclose you resolutions passed by the General Assembly of Virginia in regard to the persons therein named. I hope in the exchange of prisoners these men will be remembered. They are worthy non-combatants and ought to be reclaimed if possible.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SIR: Calling at your Department this morning I was disappointed in finding that you were out as I desired to consult your good judgment and get a word of advice in regard to the inclosed telegram* from the marshal of the western district of Virginia. I am not aware that I have anything to do with the matter of transferring military prisoners to judicial custody for trial, but I can readily foresee that cases of this sort may frequently happen and may lead to some embarrassment in the absence of any fixed rule for the treatment of those who are at once prisoners of war and subjects of judicial prosecution. Will you do me the favor to bestow some thought upon the subject so that I may have the benefit of your views when next we meet?

HDQRS. DEPARTMENT OF THE OHIO,
Nashville, Tenn., February 26, 1862.

* * * * *

Peaceable citizens are not to be molested in their persons or property. Any wrongs to either are to be promptly corrected and the offenders brought to punishment. To this end all persons are desired to make complaint to the immediate commander of officers or soldiers so offending, and if justice be not done promptly then to the next commander, and so on until the wrong is redressed. If the necessities of the public service should require the use of private property for public purposes fair compensation is to be allowed. No such appropriation of private property is to be made except by the authority of the highest commander present, and any other officer or soldier who shall presume to exercise such privilege shall be brought to trial. Soldiers are forbidden to enter the residences or grounds of citizens on any plea without authority.

No arrests are to be made without the authority of the commanding general except in case of actual offense against the authority of the Government, and in all such cases the fact and circumstances will immediately be reported in writing to headquarters through the intermediate commanders.

The general reminds his officers that the most frequent depredations are those which are committed by worthless characters who straggle from the ranks on the plea of being unable to march, and where the inability really exists it will be found in most instances that the soldier has overloaded himself with useless and unauthorized articles. The orders already published on this subject must be enforced.

Second. That Maj. Gen. John A. Dix, commanding in Baltimore, and the Hon. Edwards Pierrepont, of New York, be and they are hereby appointed commissioners for the purposes above mentioned, and they are authorized to examine, hear and determine the cases aforesaid ex parte and in a summary manner at such times and places as in their discretion they may appoint and make full report to the War Department.

L. THOMAS,
Adjutant-General.

OFFICE OF PROVOST-MARSHAL,
Saint Louis, Mo., March 3, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a report of "all persons received and held in confinement at Saint Louis and Alton other than prisoners of war since the 4th of March, 1861, showing when and on whose order they were arrested, when and on whose order any of them were discharged and especially designating such as now remain in custody."

In connection with this report I desire to say that they have all been confined in the Saint Louis Military Prison, the prison at Alton being exclusively devoted to prisoners of war. All the arrests were made at Saint Louis except where otherwise designated. No arrests were made previous to the declaration of martial law August 4, 1861. The recapitulation exhibits a list of those persons now in confinement exclusive of prisoners of war.

I beg leave to apologize for the delay in transmitting this record, but the confusion in which the records of the office were kept during the first two months after martial law was declared has rendered it as to cases occurring within that period unavoidable.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
GEO. E. LEIGHTON,
Provost-Marshal, District of Saint Louis.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
Washington, March 3, 1862.

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal-General.

GENERAL: * * * Concerning Joseph Widmeyer, arrested in Morgan County, Va., by order of General Banks on February 17, 1862, the commanding general directs that he be held in custody until the lines of our forces are so far advanced as to render it impossible for him to do harm in any way.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. WILLIAMS,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

HEADQUARTERS, Baltimore, March 4, 1862.

Hon. GEORGE H. PENDLETON, Member of Congress.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 3d instant, with one from Mrs. Broadstreet, &c. I am very sorry to inform you that her case is not within the rules I have adopted. She desires to go and return, whereas passes are given to women and children whose husbands, parents or means are in the South and who intend to remain there. A more extended indulgence would lead to continual crossing and recrossing our military lines and would be entirely incompatible with the public interests.

While on the subject allow me to mention that Mrs. Semmes, the wife of the commander of the privateer Sumter, is in Cincinnati with her children. Her position is a very unpleasant one in many respects and she is anxious to go South. Should she not be allowed to go?

Indeed should she not be sent whether she wishes to go or not? Should we retain within our limits the families of those who are in arms against the Government? Should they not be sent into the insurgent States to share the privations, the social disquietude and the desolation they have brought and are bringing upon themselves? I believe their presence there in the midst of all this social derangement would be a much more effectual cure for secessionism than a residence among us where no such disturbance exists.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A DIX,
Major-General.

FORT HAMILTON, N. Y., March 5, 1862.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD:

A writ was sent here from New York this morning for the person of Arthur Brown,* a state prisoner confined in Fort Lafayette. I refused to let him go without your order. The person who served the writ stated that the said Arthur Brown was a witness in a law suit but his testimony was not material, and he would not probably be wanted. In case he should be shall I allow him to go?

MARTIN BURKE,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 6, 1862.

Lieut. Col. MARTIN BURKE,
Fort Lafayette, New York Harbor:

Send me a description of the character of the writ and the names of the attorneys and judge by whom issued.

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

WASHINGTON, March 6, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: Her Majesty's Government have considered with attention the correspondence which I had the honor to hold with you in the months of October, November and December last concerning the treatment experienced by the crews of two British schooners, Revere and Louisa Agnes, which had been captured on the charge of breach of blockade.

Her Majesty's Government cannot but regard the putting of seamen belonging to these vessels in irons under the circumstances in which and for the period for which this was avowedly done as wholly unjustifiable. I am, however, instructed to express to you the satisfaction with which Her Majesty's Government have seen that upon the matters being brought by me to your notice you informed me that an instruction would be addressed by the Secretary of the Navy to the flag officers of the blockading squadrons to use irons only when and so long as necessary, and in all cases to pursue the utmost kindness consistent with the safety of captures and prizes toward seamen captured in attempting to break the blockade.

* See case of Arthur Brown, p. 1345.

I am desired to add that Her Majesty's Government trust that this instruction will be so carried into effect as to prevent the recurrence of any cases similar to those of the Louisa Agnes and the Revere.

I have the honor to be, with high consideration, sir, your most obedient, humble servant,

LYONS.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 6, 1862.

ROBERT MURRAY, Esq., U. S. Marshal, New York.

SIR: Herewith I send you a copy of a letter* from Otis Gibson, esq., relative to Samuel L. Gouverneur, esq., late U. S. consul at Foo Choo, China, who is expected to return to the United States soon. You will please be on the lookout for him, and if he should land at New York you will arrest and convey him to Fort Lafayette and report to this Department.

By order of the Secretary of War:

L. THOMAS,
Adjutant-General.

(Same to Charles Ogden, Toronto, Canada; J. R. Giddings, esq., Montreal, Canada; John S. Keyes, esq., U. S. marshal, Boston.)

FORT HAMILTON, New York Harbor, March 6, 1862.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In answer to your telegram just now received I have to state that the writ was a very informal one, commanding me to appear before Justice J. S. Bosworth, of the U. S. superior court, at 11 a. m. on the 5th of March. The writ was brought down between 10.30 and 11 o'clock of that day and had no attorneys' names mentioned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

MARTIN BURKE,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

P. S.—This is the recollection of the officer of the day, Lieutenant Noble, Eighth Infantry, who saw the writ.

M. B.

FORT HAMILTON, New York Harbor, March 6, 1862.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In connection with my letter of this date I have to say that a person sent me in word that he was from the marshal's office, &c. I received him and found out that it was a falsehood. I turned him over to the officer of the day, Lieutenant Noble.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

MARTIN BURKE,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

* Not found.

ROUSE'S POINT, *March 6, 1862.*Hon. E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

DEAR SIR: I inclose a letter from "C. M.," but in truth from John C. Brune, a rebel member of the Maryland legislature, and since he has been in Montreal has shown himself as unscrupulous in his secessionism as any there. If it be a fact as he represents that the order for his arrest has been recalled I am confident misrepresentations have been made to the Department, for knowing as much as I do of him I am certain his entire sympathies are with the rebels.

Most respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. DUNN.

P. S.—I think Mr. Underwood has some evidence of his disloyalty.

[Inclosure.]

No. 9.]

MONTREAL, March 2, 1862.

DEAR WILLIAM: Since my last of 20th ultimo we have a complete interruption of travel and mails in consequence of heavy and continued falls of snow, but I previously received yours of 17th (No. 13) and now those of 22d and 24th (15 and 16), consequently No. 14 of 20th to which you refer has failed to reach me.

First, in reference to the sugar, I have nothing more to say than to repeat my "startling cry"—the longer they are held the worse it will be for all concerned, and if others can sell 800 and 900 barrels per day why cannot we dispose of ours? I tell you once more that in my opinion fair refining will soon fall to 6 cents.

Next, as regards my return home, unless I can have some assurance that not only the order for my arrest is withdrawn but that I can go back without any parole and my future as free and open as I feel my past political career to have been innocent, and my poor wardrobe said to be held* at Rouse's Point restored to me, I am not disposed to sneak back somewhat in the position of a felon against whom, at any convenient time, an old or new offense may be trumped up by those holding and reveling in power and utterly unscrupulous in its exercise. At the same time you may readily imagine how happy I would be to see and be with you all—to take my share of the little labor (unfortunately) you have to perform. As to my advice or counsel, that I have given and will continue so to do from here, and so soon trust to learn that the sad and painful topic open between us has been obliterated at however great a sacrifice.

Not having anything to say on the subject to any of the family who I sincerely trust may all understand my position I must leave the matter to be arranged as best they may, taking only my share of pecuniary responsibility and meeting it as soon and fully as I can. Meanwhile let me hope that you may be able to obtain some new commission business, especially from our friends J. C. B. & Co., but I would again beg to impress upon you that the refinery is our best and surest dependence and that if we can retain that agency we should only be too thankful till brighter and better days dawn. Our commissions from that source should meet my expenses, which will be smaller hereafter as I shall have settled by my next draft for $250 probably all my bills except a small one to the tailor and doctor. Apropos I am glad to say I think my boils have nearly run out. They have been very painful and annoying. In regard to my remaining household effects, silver, glass, books and plate, sell them as well as you can and whenever it may be necessary.

* See Dunn to Seward, October 17, Vol. I, this Series, p. 602, for allusion to Brune's detained trunk.

I don't suppose I shall ever keep house again if I ever do return to my dear native city.

Remember me to all kind friends and give much love to every member of the family. Tell E. B. H. that I have his of 19th, most welcome, and will answer it in a few days.

MARCH 3, [1862].

No mail went out yesterday, and on re-perusing the inclosed I find I have omitted to give my best thanks to George for his kind interference in my behalf. Let them withdraw the order if they please, and maybe he could obtain an order for the release of my trunk and then I could be guided and governed by events as well as my feelings.

Yours, ever,

Be on the lookout for Peter Herman, who is expected by every steamer, bearer of treasonable dispatches from Europe. He is about forty-seven or forty-eight years old and has a passport, No. 959, dated May 4, 1857, signed Lewis Cass, Secretary of State, and viséed by Samuel Ricker, late U. S. consul at Frankfort-on-the-Main. Arrest and send him to Fort Lafayette; secure his papers and send them to the State Department.

By order of the Secretary of War:

Adjutant-General.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: There has been a falsehood perpetrated on me with regard to a prisoner at Fort Lafayette yesterday, and I have requested Marshal Murray to have the matter investigated.

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

Maj. Gen. JOHN A. DIX, Baltimore.

GENERAL: You may release John A. Hibbs, John Wild, John Lemon, Thomas W. Hollis, George Seeley, John G. Goodin and John Ferris, prisoners confined in Fort Delaware, upon their giving their written parole of honor that they will render no aid or comfort to the enemies in hostility to the Government of the United States.

By order of the Secretary of War:

Adjutant-General.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 8, 1862.

Maj. Gen. JOHN A. DIX, Baltimore, Md.

GENERAL: I have been directed by the Secretary of War to report to yourself and Mr. Pierrepont for duty as clerk of the commission created by Executive Order, No. 2, of the War Department in relation to political prisoners. Will you have the kindness to inform me when and where the commission will meet to organize and in what manner I can serve you? It seems to me that it is desirable to dispose of all these cases as soon as possible. There are now a large number of prisoners confined in the Old Capitol Prison in this city and their cases are familiar to Mr. E. J. Allen, a detective in the employ of the provost-marshal, who I am informed intends to leave the city in a short time. I would suggest therefore that those cases here had better be disposed of first.

I have the honor to be, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. D. WEBSTER.

HEADQUARTERS, Baltimore, March 9, 1862.

E. D. WEBSTER, Esq., Department of State, Washington.

DEAR SIR: Major-General Dix has received your letter of yesterday and instructed me to say that he will communicate at once with Judge Pierrepont, his associate, and inform you what arrangements the commissioners will make. The general would be glad to receive from the State Department as early as practicable a list of the prisoners at Forts Lafayette and Warren.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. BOLLES,
Captain and Aide-de-Camp.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 10, 1862.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have had the honor to receive your note of the 6th instant in which after reverting to the correspondence which has passed between us concerning the treatment experienced by the crews of the British schooners Revere and Louisa Agnes you state that Her Majesty's Government cannot but regard the putting of seamen belonging to those vessels in irons under the circumstances in which and for the period for which this was avowedly done as wholly unjustifiable.

In reply I have the honor to observe that it is believed that except in the cases of the Revere and Louisa Agnes and one other case which has just been brought to my notice no complaints whatever have reached this Government during the existing rebellion of harsh treatment of persons on board of vessels captured by our naval forces. And when in the first two of those cases a complaint was preferred by you the Secretary of the Navy, though perfectly convinced in his own mind of their humanity, lost no time in enjoining upon the flag officers of our blockading squadrons kindness in all cases toward captured prisoners and that irons be used only when and as long as may be necessary for the safety of the captors and the prizes. If, however, our naval officers are in any case justly chargeable with rigorous treatment of persons taken by them from on board prize vessels such persons have their judicial remedies in our courts of law.

I have the honor to be, with high consideration, your lordship's obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Assistant Secretary of War.

Col. JUSTIN DIMICK, Fort Warren, Mass.

COLONEL: The Secretary of War directs me to inform you that if Rev. A. L. Hitzelberger be a loyal and proper person he may be admitted to Fort Warren to visit the prisoners if in your judgment it can be done without detriment to the public service.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. H. WATSON,
Assistant Secretary of War.

BALTIMORE, MD., March 10, 1862.

P. H. WATSON, Assistant Secretary of War:

There is not room at Fort McHenry for any more political prisoners. There are only two rooms of moderate size and both are occupied.

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General.

HEADQUARTERS, Baltimore, March 11, 1862.

P. H. WATSON, Esq., Assistant Secretary of War.

SIR: The whole number of political prisoners ever confined within the walls of Fort McHenry is seventeen. This was only for a few days, when a room now occupied by the garrison was used for their custody. Twelve prisoners can be conveniently accommodated, but six of these must use officers' quarters. Whenever the number of political prisoners has risen to twelve or fourteen I have always asked for their removal. It is still more necessary now, as we have been compelled to take one of the rooms usually occupied for the close custody of particular prisoners for ordnance stores. At present there are eight political prisoners in custody, all that can now be conveniently accommodated, and this number may be increased any day by arrests here as there is no place within the city for the confinement of political prisoners.

I inclose an extract from a letter written by me* on the 5th of September last to Major-General McClellan on this subject. Since then our facilities for the custody of prisoners have been diminished by the necessities of the garrison.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., March 11, 1862.

Judge EDWARDS PIERREPONT, New York.

SIR: The Secretary of War directs me to inquire how soon the commission consisting of General Dix and yourself, appointed under the President's Executive Order, No. 2, in relation to state prisoners will be ready to hear and determine cases and at what place it is proposed to sit first? This inquiry is made to enable this Department to satisfy the numerous applicants for information on these points. For a while they were quieted by receiving a copy of the circular inclosed, but that no longer satisfies them.

Assistant Secretary of War

HEADQUARTERS PROVOST-MARSHAL-GENERAL,

Washington, D. C., March 11, 1862.

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal-General.

DEAR SIR: In the case of John F. C. Offutt, a prisoner confined in the Old Capitol Building, whose application to the honorable Secretary of War to be released from custody on his parole of honor, &c., has been referred to yourself for a report I have the honor to report as follows:

Said Offutt was sent to this office from General Banks' division on the 20th of January last, he having crossed the river from Virginia near Harper's Ferry and having gone into Virginia by the way of the Eastern Shore about the middle of October last, being then from Baltimore. My operatives inform me that Offutt was one of the notorious Marshal Kane's policemen in Baltimore, who from their leader down took such an active part against the Government in that city at the commencement of our national troubles, said Kane being now confined in Fort Warren as one of the most dangerous traitors in the country. Offutt stated to one of my operatives in Virginia that he had had a hand in the murderous assault on the Federal troops in Baltimore on the 19th of April last, and he exhibited portions of Federal military equipments as corroborative evidence of his participation in that ignominious affair. He also stated that he had come into Virginia for the purpose of aiding the rebels all he could against the Federal Government.

My operative thinks there is no doubt but that Offutt has come from Virginia as a spy for the rebel Government, and that from his extensive acquaintance on this side of the lines and his avowed hostility to the Government and sympathy with the rebels he is a spy of the most dangerous stamp. While on examination at this office Offutt also recognized one of my operatives who had seen him in Virginia and who happened to be present here at the time. Being misled as to the character of this operative here he (Offutt) stated to him privately that the statement he (Offutt) had made at the office in regard to military affairs in the South was not true. The fact of his having seen this operative at these headquarters from which he might also infer the character of an associate operative now in Virginia renders it even more unsafe for him to be set at liberty, as in case of his return to Virginia he would not only carry all the military information he could get to the enemy but might seriously interfere there with the secret service of this office and endanger the lives of my operatives on duty there. In consideration of this double dangerousness of this man therefore I have to recommend that as a most imperative military necessity he be kept in secure confinement until the close of the war for the Union.

All of which is respectfully submitted by your obedient servant,

E. J. ALLEN.

GENERAL DIX'S HEADQUARTERS, March 15, 1862.

Hon. E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War:

I propose to be in Washington on Monday to meet Judge Pierpont and take up the cases of political prisoners there.

JOHN A. DIX,
Brigadier-General.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 15, 1862.

WILLIAM P. WOOD,

Superintendent of Old Capitol Prison, Washington, D. C.

SIR: The Secretary of War directs that upon their respectively taking the oath of allegiance to the United States you will release from custody the following prisoners now held in the Old Capitol Prison, viz: J. B. Angel, P. Hanety, L. Van Arsdale, James Riley, B. W. Wine, John M. Brooke, James Haislip, A. Gunnell, A. G. Gunnell, J. Rockford, James Poole, Noah Hunt, M. Rourke, F. X. Lacross, and J. L. Smith.

By order of the Secretary of War:

P. H. WATSON,
Assistant Secretary of War.

OFFICE OF COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF PRISONERS,

Sandusky, March 15, 1862.

General M. C. MEIGS,

Quartermaster-General U. S. Army, Washington, D. C.

GENERAL: I have the honor to inclose herewith two letters* addressed to me by two state prisoners at Columbus who desire to be released on their taking the oath of allegiance. I know nothing of the charges against them except what they state, but I believe there are among the prisoners a number who have been taken up without any very specific charges against them, and we encumber ourselves with the care of men who are of very little account. They were captured in the early part of the war by scouting parties who were not very particular so that they brought in a prisoner. Heretofore it has been well to keep them to exchange for better men, but now that they are no longer required for that purpose I would suggest that all against whom there are not grave charges be released on their taking the oath of allegiance.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. HOFFMAN,

Lieut. Col. Eighth Infantry, Commissary-General of Prisoners.

[First indorsement.]

Respectfully referred to the Secretary of War.

It appears to the Quartermaster-General that on taking the oath of allegiance these prisoners could be properly released.

M. C. MEIGS,

Major-General.

[Second indorsement.]

MARCH 28, 1862.

Approved.

Secretary of War.

[Indorsement.]

Respectfully referred to E. D. Webster, esq., Department of State.
E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

HEADQUARTERS, Baltimore, March 15, 1862.

Brig. Gen. H. H. LOCKWOOD, Commanding Eastern Shore.

GENERAL: I had yesterday a letter from the Secretary of War directing me to inquire into the circumstances attending the arrest of Mr. Bayard by Colonel Wallace, and expressing the belief that there was no just ground for such a measure. I have communicated with the colonel and instructed him to release Mr. Bayard on his parole of honor to report to me when required. The colonel advises me that he has undertaken to disarm a company of militia. This should not have been done without my order. I have never in this State ventured on so rigorous a measure without the approbation of the governor. In my letter to you of the 9th of October I said:

If you can get any legitimate authority, executive or military, in Delaware to direct the disbandment or disarming of companies in that State it should be done. In that case I think the arms had better be deposited at Fort Delaware.

I supposed you would understand that without such authority the measure should not be attempted unless upon specific directions from me. If any of the members of Mr. Bayard's company make demonstrations in favor of the Confederates they should be arrested and the facts reported to me. On the 27th ultimo I wrote you as follows:

If any person within the limits of your command shouts for Jeff. Davis or Beauregard as charged in Mr. Fisher's letter, or displays any secession emblem arrest him at once and keep him in custody subject to my order. You will please report to me the circumstances in each case. I will not permit where I have the power any demonstration in favor of a political or military organization which is making war on the United States.

I wish this course to be pursued in regard to every man thus offending against the Government and people of the United States no matter what his private or official position may be. But in a State which has given no evidence of a want of loyalty no step should be taken to break up any military organization but on full consideration and after consultation with the State authorities. Individual members of such organizations may for open acts of disloyalty be summarily dealt with as above directed.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., March 17, 1862.

Brigadier-General WADSWORTH,
Military Governor of the District of Columbia.

GENERAL: The attention of this Department has just been called to a gross violation of its orders by publishing information of military movements in the Sunday Chronicle, a newspaper published in this city, yesterday. You will immediately take military possession of the printing office in which publication is made, arrest the printers and publishers of the paper, take possession of all the papers that can be found and destroy them and hold the parties in custody that they may be dealt with according to the Rules and Articles of War.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

FORT WARREN, Boston Harbor, March 17, 1862.

Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In reply to yours of the 15th* I have the honor to report that the following-named persons have taken their parole and left agreeably to your order of the 21st ultimo: J. R. Barber, R. S. Freeman, F. D. Flanders, J. R. Flanders, José English, James Brown, Robert

* Not found.

Denison, W. F. McKewen, M. W. Barr, A. Da Costa, Parker H. French, George Van Amringe, J. Hanson Thomas, P. F. Rasin and G. A. Shackelford.

The following persons have refused to take their parole, viz: William G. Harrison, W. H. Winder, William H. Gatchell, Henry M. Warfield and Charles Keene. Keene was received from Flag Officer Goldsborough, he having enlisted to get South. Failing to do this refused duty and stated that he would not fight under our flag. Since he has been here he has been kept in close confinement; refuses to give his parole of honor not to aid or comfort the enemies in hostility to the Government. I consider him partially insane, and would respectfully recommend that he be unconditionally released and obliged to labor for his support. Evidently this would be the least desirable thing that could befall him.

Edward Baum, William St. George, R. S. Grissons, J. F. Newton, S. F. Newton, E. Sibern, E. C. Myatt, J. A. Douglass and Edward O'Neil, sailors taken from merchant vessels for running the blockade. They are willing to take their parole if they can get South. I have kept them until I could hear from General Dix relative to their getting to their families South. They are poor men and rather remain as prisoners than be released without any means of support or hope of getting to their families.

I have to report that I have released J. D. Sudendorf in order that he may be placed in the asylum in Boston. He has been crazy ever since he has been here, but of late quite troublesome.

Bethel Burton, ordered to be released on 21st ultimo, had already been released by the Secretary's order of the 19th ultimo.

I am, sir, with highest respect, your obedient servant,

J. DIMICK,

Colonel First Artillery and Brevet Colonel, Commanding Post.

HEADQUARTERS MOUNTAIN DEPARTMENT,

Wheeling, March 17, 1862.

Brig. Gen. L. THOMAS,

Adjutant-General U. S. Army, Washington, D. C.

GENERAL: I have directed Major Darr, provost-marshal-general of this department, to proceed to Washington taking with him to the War Department, first, a list of citizen prisoners* by orders from these headquarters; second, list of prisoners of war at Camp Chase, Columbus, Ohio; third, copies of the evidence against prisoners on which they were committed or are held; fourth, list of prisoners released on parole November 3, 1861; fifth, list of oaths administered since last return; sixth, report of the disposition of prisoners* heretofore released; seventh, list of prisoners sent to Washington to be exchanged for the Guyandotte prisoners, Ninth Virginia; eighth, a letter from Governor Peirpoint stating that many loyal citizens of the State have been dragged off to Richmond, and suggesting the arrest of hostages.

The nature of the testimony and many details were such that the provost-marshal-general's explanations could alone make the matter fully understood. There are many prisoners of state held because they are dangerous to the peace and provokers of secession, sedition or treason. These are held without the least record of evidence of active crime. The evidence against the state prisoners ought to be returned to this office because it is only here we can tell when it will be advisable to liberate many of them. Major Darr has therefore been instructed to request that the written evidence records be returned to this office.

* See ante.

† Not found.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. S. ROSECRANS,
Brigadier-General, U. S. Army, Commanding.

Superintendent of Old Capitol Military Prison.

SIR: You are hereby directed to release from custody Rev. Townsend J. McVeigh, a prisoner confined in the Old Capitol Military Prison, on his giving his parole of honor that he will within ninety days from the date hereof return and surrender himself to you unless he shall within ninety days procure the release of Rev. David J. Lee from the conditions of a parole given by him at Winchester, Va., in the month of August last and forward the same to the Secretary of War; and that meanwhile he (the said McVeigh) will do no act hostile to the Government of the United States nor give any information calculated to aid the insurgents.

J. A. DIX,
E. PIERREPONT,
Commissioners.

CYNTHIANA, KY., March 18, 1862.

Judge SAMUEL BRECKINRIDGE.

RESPECTED SIR: Since the defeat of the rebel troops in Kentucky many of the men who took up arms against us are returning without having renounced their allegiance to the Confederate Government. We are fully persuaded that these men are coming here for the purpose of either recruiting for the rebel army or for the more dangerous purpose of organizing secret military companies to wage a guerrilla war in this part of Kentucky, or by violence and assassination to make the country so uncomfortable that the loyal men cannot stay here in peace. If General Halleck will authorize the military here to arrest these men and hold them as prisoners of war until the war is over or authorize a company to be raised of loyal men here to keep these men in subjection we can do it. We will raise the company and keep it up at our own expense. Something must be done and that immediately or the loyal men will have to surrender to violence and treason. Treason will have to be put down with a strong hand in Kentucky and treated as General Halleck has treated it in Missouri before we can have peace. In this part of the State disloyalty is in the ascendant, and in order to place it at a discount the rabble must see that the Government has the will and the force to deal with it promptly and successfully. They treat with ridicule the administration of the oath of allegiance.

Respectfully,

W. O. SMITH.
R. T. LINDSAY.
JAMES J. TEBBS.
W. W. TRIMBLE.

D. L. PHILLIPS, U. S. Marshal, Springfield, Ill.

SIR: By direction of the Secretary of War I have to acknowledge the receipt of your communication asking that the officers in charge of the prisoners taken at Fort Donelson be instructed to furnish the names of all citizens of Illinois found among them in order that they may be tried for treason. In reply you are informed that such matters belong to the civil authorities, and that no fees can be paid or sanctioned by this Department for services rendered by marshals or district attorneys in the prosecution of citizens for treason.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. H. WATSON,
Assistant Secretary of War.

General L. THOMAS,
Adjutant-General U. S. Army, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Inclosed you will receive paper to which I have to request the approbation of the honorable the Secretary of War.

U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK,
New York, March 19, 1862.

Lieut. Col. MARTIN BURKE, U. S. Army,
Commandant Fort Lafayette.

DEAR COLONEL: In your note of the 15th instant* you tell me that a person made use of my name to introduce himself into the fort and serve on you a writ of habeas corpus which you disregarded. Allow me to assure you that I have never authorized any one to use my name to approach you, and should the like be again attempted I would suggest that you seize the person so introducing himself and hold him in custody until I come down to identify him.

I am, dear colonel, very faithfully yours,
ROBERT MURRAY,
U. S. Marshal.

P. S.—Any individual wishing to see the commanding officer will give his name and business to the officer of the day or the sergeant of the guard during the temporary absence of the officer of the day, and will show his papers if necessary. Should the officer of the day have any doubt on the subject he will indicate to the person above referred to that if he has any purpose of interfering improperly with the state or war prisoners in Fort Lafayette he cannot be received, and that if he makes use of Marshal Murray's name improperly he will be immediately sent to Fort Lafayette.

[NOTE.—This postscript appears to have been the copy of an order issued by Colonel Burke, forwarded for the information of the War Department. It is printed as found.]

Col. W. W. LOWE, Fort Henry, Tenn.:

All citizens who come in to avoid imprisonment by the enemy should be allowed to go to Illinois or elsewhere. Prisoners of war should be retained till they are exchanged or can be sent to prison depots.

Major-General.

HEADQUARTERS, Baltimore, March 24, 1862.

T. F. BAYARD, Wilmington, Del.

SIR: I have been absent from this city on business connected with the military service; your letter would otherwise have been sooner answered. My direction to General Lockwood in October last was to disarm companies alleged to be disloyal if he could get any legitimate authority in Delaware, executive or military, to justify his action. The measures adopted by Colonel Wallace were approved by the major-general residing at or near Wilmington and were therefore so far as reported to me sustained. I expect General Lockwood here shortly and will then inquire into the whole proceeding. The parties who gave bonds for the arms cannot certainly be held for the penalty as they have been dispossessed by military force.

I am, very respectfully,

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General.

OFFICE OF THE DETROIT TRIBUNE,
Detroit, March 28, 1862.

[Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.]

MY DEAR FRIEND: Circumstances have transpired which render it certain to my mind that there exists here and probably through every Northern State an organized treasonable association which is in sympathy and constant communication with similar associations in the rebel States and with the rebels. Since the publication of the Guy Hopkins* letter, which you may or may not have observed in the Tribune, a certain class of men uniformly known as Democratic sympathizers with the rebels have exhibited a spirit which goes far to prove in the minds of candid men the truth of that letter. Canada seems to be the base of their operations and communication with Europe and the South through sympathizing friends along the borders of this frontier, extending from this city to Lake Huron at least if no farther.

* See case of Hopkins et al., p. 1244 et seq.

I have just been informed of a trunk left here by an emissary and apparently a traveling agent of the secret cabals from Connecticut and who is now in the Southern States. The man with whom this trunk is left at my suggestion examined its contents, and he informs me that there are letters in it of an important character confirmatory of the supposed existence of the treasonable order and criminating some individuals as parties thereto. I am promised an examination of the contents of the trunk, when if the report of it is confirmed, of which I have now little doubt, I will communicate with you again or have the trunk and contents seized and sent to you or their import.

There are other facts and circumstances of a similar character which together have induced me to write you to suggest the propriety of having detectives employed here more than at present. I understand that there is but one person here only partially employed in that service. That person (I mean Mr. Goldman) is all right—good as far as he is authorized to act; but I am well satisfied that some one here should be authorized to employ other aid to him. The person so authorized should act simply as agent for the Government in directing the work to be done and to protect the Government against exorbitant charges and unnecessary expense. One or two and at times three or four persons might be necessary but not more than one probably would be needed in service all the time. I do not think our U. S. marshal is the proper person. He is seldom here, and I am sorry to add he leaves his office with two Democrats whom I would not dare confer with on this subject, Mr. Goldman, a deputy, being the only reliable Union man around in the absence of the marshal, and the marshal is too timid and inefficient for such duty.

I write all this confidentially but it is reliable. With such a detective organization as I suggest I think that in a few weeks the whole thing can be ferreted out. Without it while individuals may do much it will take some months if it can be thus made successful. It is the most extensive treasonable organization that ever menaced any Government. I shall do all I can to root it out but should like to [see] some active Government effort to do it thoroughly.

Very truly, your friend,

H. B. BARNES.

HEADQUARTERS EXPEDITION TO CARTHAGE,

Camp Dietzler, March 30, 1862.

Col. CHARLES DOUBLEDAY,

Acting Brigadier-General, Commanding Post, Fort Scott.

COLONEL: I have in custody at this place twenty prisoners that I have apprehended since my arrival here. They are charged with the murder of Union men, driving them from their homes, stealing and destroying their property, &c. They have been members of independent guerrilla bands and some of them have been a terror to the peaceable citizens of this vicinity—moderate secessionists as well as Union men. If you will pardon me for the suggestion I would recommend that a commission be called to meet at this place for their trial. I do so because the great bulk of the testimony that could be produced to substantiate the charges could not be obtained if they should be tried at Fort Scott or any other distant point.

Referring the subject to your superior deliberation, I remain,

Very respectfully, colonel, your obedient servant,

POWELL CLAYTON,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Expedition to Carthage.

FORT HAMILTON, New York Harbor, April 1, 1862.

Brig. Gen. L. THOMAS,

Adjutant-General of the Army, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I send you inclosed an application made by the chaplain of this post for as I take it a general permit to visit the prisoners at Fort Lafayette and preach to them. I do not approve of this. I think, however, that it would be very well if I were permitted to send him over to the fort in cases of extreme sickness where the patient expressed a desire to that effect.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

MARTIN BURKE,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Third Artillery.

[Indorsement.]

The suggestions of Colonel Burke are approved and he is authorized to exercise his discretion on the subject.

EDWIN M. STANTON.

[Inclosure.]

FORT HAMILTON, N. Y., April 1, 1862.

Col. MARTIN BURKE, U. S. Army, Fort Hamilton.

COLONEL: Since the period of my appointment to the post chaplaincy at Fort Hamilton I have as a Christian clergyman indebted alike to Jew and Gentile, bond and free, greatly desired to have conceded to me the privilege of visiting the political prisoners now consigned to your care at Fort Lafayette or hereafter to be committed to that fort or to any of the strongholds of the harbor of New York within the sphere of our commanding officer's inspection. Will you, colonel, with your wonted kindness and scrupulously vigilant regard for the public good (provided that you are from my position and character satisfied of my loyalty and gratitude to a Government of the beneficence of which I afford even in my own humble person so impressive an example) forward and indorse my application to the proper Department for permission to me as aforesaid to visit as a Christian clergyman and Government chaplain the political prisoners referred to?

I have the honor to remain, colonel, with great respect, your obliged and faithful servant,

JOHN BURKE,
Chaplain, U. S. Army.

sition by order of the commanding general. The release of citizen prisoners has been heretofore granted on their furnishing a petition from their loyal Union neighbors indorsed by the members of legislature and senate from their district on taking the oath of allegiance, and finally by giving bond in a certain sum as some security for their future loyalty.

By order of Brigadier-General Rosecrans I lately reported these matters to the honorable Secretary of War at Washington. I was informed by General Thomas, Adjutant-General, that no further proposition to exchange prisoners with the rebels would be made at present, as the Confederate authorities had so often broken faith with us.

The practice of the rebels in arresting and imprisoning citizens loyal to the United States and non-combatants in Eastern Virginia has been much condemned, and a proposition made to the Secretary of War for his sanction to arrest and hold as hostages for these persons such residents here as are known to entertain no sentiments of loyalty to the United States and to be connected by family ties or other close relationship with the leaders and abettors of the rebellion, anticipating by this proceeding to mitigate if not suppress the evil complained of.

Hon. GILLET F. WATSON, Senator of Virginia.

SIR: I have received yours of the 30th ultimo. I have been very much pained to observe that the Union feeling which was manifested in Accomack in November last has not been fully sustained. I attribute it to the want of courage and firmness in a few leading men. I think the course of Judge Pitts has done more to demoralize Accomack and Northampton than all other causes combined. His last act I regard as disloyal and criminal and my strong inclination was to arrest him. He has engaged in correspondence with a rebel Government at war with his own and labors to show that he has always been faithful to the former. He has lost irretrievably the respect of the friends of both. I say this in sorrow. It was in his power by a manly support of the Government to have carried the Eastern Shore of Virginia with him, and he has not only sacrificed his own influence but compromised the loyalty of both counties and possibly opened a fountain of dissension and disaster. I wish you would show him this letter for I have no concealments, and let him understand as he will from this that your letter contains no allusions to him. I write to you spontaneously what I should have said to him two weeks ago when I read his printed address to the rebel legislature of Virginia if I had not been engrossed by important business in Washington.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry of the 4th instant I have respectfully to inform you that John C. Greigg not being in the military service could not be exchanged in regular course for a prisoner taken in arms against the United States. Brig. Gen. L. THOMAS,
Adjutant-General U. S. Army, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I received to-day your note of the 9th inclosing Major-General Halleck's General Order, No. 9, sent to me by direction of the Secretary of War.

This order does not furnish me with any information which I did not already have. The trial by military commission of offenses not properly the subject of a court-martial was ordered by me and practiced under my administration in Missouri.

The question which I submitted to the decision of the Secretary of War referred rather to the mode of punishment and to the expediency of a public declaration concerning it than to the form of trial. The subject is comprehended in the two following points:

First. What course shall be pursued toward officers and men of the rebel army who formerly citizens of Virginia are now returning into this department, claiming for themselves immunity in person and property upon the ground chiefly that they have thought it now expedient to abandon the Confederacy and consequently desire to resume their old allegiance? The people of the Wheeling government are strongly opposed to the return of these persons among them, and in the opinion of Governor Peirpoint their presence here would involve the most serious difficulties.

Second. What course shall be pursued in relation to guerrillas bearing the commission of Governor Letcher or other Confederate authority? Much excitement has been created among the people here by a knowledge of the fact that numerous bands are being organized in this department under the sanction of the Confederate authorities. It is officially reported to me that many commissions for this purpose have been sent into Western Virginia by Governor Letcher, and such commissions have been recently found upon the persons of guerrillas. Such bands are already making their appearance in different counties and are only waiting the coming of the leaves to go fully into their work. Whether as guerrillas or spies the sense of the country here is that these people should be summarily and severely punished.

Concerning these points there is entire unanimity of opinion between Governor Peirpoint and myself as well as with the public sentiment, but I judged them sufficiently important to require reference to the War Department. I accordingly desired to know if I should act without special instructions. It seems also expedient and would give general satisfaction that the course of proceeding to be adopted should be made known for the information of all parties interested.

I have to ask that you will procure me an early reply from the Secretary of War, and meantime I will so far as possible defer final action in any case.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. C. FRÉMONT,
Major-General, Commanding.

SIR: Yours of the 15th is received. * * * As to the time of trial of the cases to be tried I have at present no instructions to give. That is a matter which must generally rest in the discretion of the district attorney, for it is quite impossible for this office to make preliminary examinations in cases generally or to judge correctly of the circumstances which may make it prudent to advance or retard trials in the various localities. Leaving the conduct of prosecutions mainly to the good judgment of the district attorneys I expect to give instructions only when asked and when there seems to me to be particular reasons for taking that course.

Assistant Secretary of War.

BALTIMORE, May 12, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

MY DEAR SIR: Some circumstances have come to my knowledge concerning Major Ludlow's transactions with political prisoners at Fort Lafayette and in such a way that I cannot possibly overlook them. It is necessary in order that I may do justice to myself and the public for me to know other facts which I can only obtain through you. I allude particularly to a letter addressed to you by him denying that he had ever received any money from political prisoners. Will you be so kind as to furnish me with a copy of that letter? You will also oblige me by informing me what was the nature of the authority he received from you to visit the prisoners at Fort Lafayette. You will I know appreciate the delicate relation in which a knowledge of the circumstances referred to places me to Major Ludlow as he has a confidential position on my staff and that you will give me all the information I require to enable me to act advisedly in the matter.

I am, dear sir, sincerely, yours,

JOHN A. DIX.

Resolution adopted by the U. S. Senate May 14, 1862.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the Senate if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interests any information in his possession touching the arrest of persons in Kentucky since the 1st of September, 1861, and their imprisonment beyond the limits of that State.

U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK,
New York, May 17, 1862.

Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Within the past few weeks several prisoners captured by U. S. cruisers on board vessels attempting to break the blockade have been delivered into my custody and consigned by me to the care of Colonel Burke, commandant Fort Lafayette, which proceeding on my part you have been pleased in each instance to indorse with your approval.

I learn that among these prisoners there are many foreigners who owe no allegiance to this country, have no interest in remaining here when at liberty, and have in many cases been deceived as to the true destination of the vessel on which they were captured. Their consuls having made frequent application at this office for their discharge, and considering that they are only an expense to the Government and would in most instances immediately leave the country never to return I respectfully ask your authority to examine and release all prisoners of the class above described who are not subjects of the United States willing to give their parole of honor to hold no communication with the insurrectionary States and to commit no act hostile to the Government of the United States.

Soliciting the favor of your early reply, I have the honor to remain, sir, your most obedient servant,

ROBT. MURRAY,
U. S. Marshal.

Col. MARTIN BURKE, Fort Hamilton, N. Y.

COLONEL: Under existing circumstances no objection is entertained to allowing the British consul at New York to visit any of his countrymen at Fort Lafayette who may have been captured in vessels attempting to break the blockade. I will consequently thank you to give directions to that effect.

I am, your very obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

annoyance as this (properly so termed by you) "wretched affair of Millner." When my attention was first called to it I was disposed to treat it lightly for I did not then know that I was charged with seeming corruption or breach of trust. I have emphatically denied both and you do me but simple justice in resting upon your early confidence. I have never before during my whole life been charged with or even suspected of either corruption or breach of trust, public or private. When you are less pressed by responsible cares and when there is time without intrusion upon public duties to take up cases of individuals and when I am enabled to follow up the necessary investigation I desire to go over this whole matter with you. I think that you will then admit I have not acted wrongly. Until such time I beg that you will rest upon your old confidence and predilections.

Memoranda of Various Political Arrests—From Record Book, U. S. Department of State, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

This person [Ferdinand Alfons Okelemski] was arrested by order of John A. Kennedy, superintendent of police at New York, June 21, 1861. He was charged with attempting to enter the rebel army. His letter dated April 4, 1861, addressed to the commander of Pensacola Navy-Yard, says:

I have been civil engineer of the city of Montgomery, Ala. My heart was always beating strongly for Southern rights and Southern constitution, and now since the Southern Confederacy is established I most respectfully would solicit some sort of employment in the Southern military engineering department.

An order was issued from the Department of State dated June 29, 1861, directing John A. Kennedy to release Okelemski. He was released July 1, 1861.

Thomas C. Fitzpatrick was arrested in Baltimore in July, 1861, and transferred to Fort Lafayette August 1, 1861. He was charged with having been concerned in the seizure of the steamer Saint Nicholas, which was delivered into the hands of the insurgents. Representations having been made to the Secretary of State that Fitzpatrick was a British subject and was not implicated as a party to the seizure of the Saint Nicholas an order was made for his release on the request of the Secretary of State by Lieutenant-General Scott. Fitzpatrick was accordingly released from Fort Lafayette August 19, 1861. About the 15th of January, 1862, Thomas C. Fitzpatrick was again arrested by order of Major-General Dix and committed to Fort McHenry from whence he was transferred by order of the Secretary of State dated January 25, 1862, to Fort Lafayette. This last arrest was made upon the charge that he with others were conspiring to go to the insurgent States, in regard to which General Dix informs the Secretary of State by letters dated January 24, 1862, that "we have satisfactory evidence that he has been engaged in recruiting for the insurgent army and that he was the leader of the party arrested." The said Thomas C. Fitzpatrick remained in custody at Fort Lafayette February 15, 1862, when he was transferred to the charge of the War Department.

This man [William Williams] was arrested by the civil authorities at Prince Fredericktown, Md., for gross violation of the criminal law in July, 1861, and committed to jail. The grand jury which had its sitting in the following October having failed to find a bill of indictment against Williams he was released.

This man [Robert D. Chambers] was taken into custody by order of Major Spear, provost-marshal at Martinsburg, about July 6, 1861, and sent to Fort Delaware. He was charged with being a member of a regiment in the rebel service. An order was issued from the Department of State dated October 23, 1861, directing General John A. Dix to release Chambers on his taking the oath of allegiance stipulating neither to enter nor correspond with the States in insurrection without permission from the Secretary of State, and that he will do no act hostile or injurious to the United States during the present insurrection. He was accordingly released October 26, 1861.

This man [Dr. Edward Johnson] was arrested by order of General Dix and committed to Fort McHenry about July 8, 1861, and from thence transferred to Fort Lafayette by order of the Secretary of State. There are no papers on file in the Department of State showing on what charges he was arrested. An order was issued from the Department of State dated September 13, 1861, directing Lieut. Col. Martin Burke to release Johnson on his giving his parole to do no act and to give no information hostile or injurious to the United States. He was released September 17, 1861.

Charles Wilson was confined by order of the military authorities at Baltimore about July 8, 1861, at Fort McHenry. He was one of the crew of the schooner Margaret when taken by Richard Thomas, alias Colonel Zarvona. Wilson was kept in custody as a witness against said Thomas, being unable to give security for his appearance at the trial of Thomas.

Charles M. Hagelin, of Baltimore, was owner of a vessel called the Alverda. In June, 1861, he made a trip in her to the Patuxent River under an agreement to get off a vessel ashore there. He took eight men as passengers without charging them any fare, as it appears. These men he afterward learned were on the way to Virginia, but he proceeded to land them as he had undertaken. He was afterward and before he returned to Baltimore taken into custody by Captain Craven, of the U. S. Navy, and sent to Baltimore and delivered to General Banks at Fort McHenry. He was afterward transferred to Fort Lafayette. The date of his capture does not appear in any papers in the Department of State, but Mayor Brown* says it was the 19th of July. There is no more particular statement of the cause of his arrest than is given above, but that being substantiated by his own admission seems all sufficient. General Dix, who assumed command at Fort McHenry about the time of Hagelin's confinement on the 21st of October, wrote to the Department describing Hagelin as a person of simple character and without influence and saying: "I think he has been sufficiently punished and recommend his immediate release." Hagelin was thereupon released on the 24th day of October, 1861, on taking the oath of allegiance.

* See Brown to the President, p. 115.

William Leland Boggs, of North Carolina, arrived in New York from Bremen on or about the 24th of July, 1861. On the passage he had stated that he was a bearer of dispatches for the Confederate States. And on the arrival of the steamer and reception on board of the intelligence of the rebel success in the battle of 21st of July, 1861, he was excessively violent in the expression of his gratification. He was arrested by the superintendent of police of New York, but on searching his baggage and papers nothing of importance being discovered he was discharged July 25, 1861.

The Department of State has no information of the time, place, or cause of this person's [Samuel H. Lyon] arrest. He was received at Fort Lafayette July 31, 1861, having been transferred with other prisoners from Fort McHenry, and has since been sent to Fort Warren. In a letter dated February 5, 1862, he states that about the 6th of January an order arrived at Fort Warren directing that six persons—Drane, Dawson, Orrison, Cusick, Murphy and Shepherd—be sent to General Banks' headquarters to be exchanged as prisoners of war; that there was no person named Shepherd among the prisoners, and the remaining five were sent; that two of these persons, James Murphy and John H. Cusick, were taken at the same time and under precisely the same circumstances as himself. No record is found in the Department of any order for any one to report to General Banks for exchange. In the list of prisoners at Fort Warren Lyon is stated to be from Baltimore. The said Lyon remained in custody at Fort Warren February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department. (Sent to Fort Monroe, Va., November 26, 1862. Exchanged for Captain Schley by order of the Secretary of War.)

A. Dawson was captured in August, 1861, by a portion of General Banks' command. He was a member of a Virginia rebel cavalry company and as a prisoner of war was probably exchanged. (Turned over to General Banks at Fredericksburg for exchange January 6, 1862.)

Robert Drane was captured in August, 1861, by a portion of General Banks' division. He belonged to a Virginia rebel cavalry company, and being a prisoner of war was probably exchanged. (Turned over to General Banks at Fredericksburg for exchange January 6, 1862.)

James Connor was arrested by order of General Mansfield in the month of August, 1861, and committed to the Thirteenth Street Prison and from thence transferred to the Old Capitol Prison. There are no papers on file at the Department of State showing on what charge he was arrested. The said James Connor remained in custody at the Old Capitol February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department. (Ordered released February 21, 1862. Refused parole February 22, 1862. Released March 26, 1862.)

Eben Lane, one of the prize crew placed by the privateer Jeff. Davis on board the schooner Enchantress which was afterward captured by U. S. steamer Albatross and brought by that steamer into the port of Philadelphia, was arrested and taken into custody by U. S. Marshal Millward, of Pennsylvania, August 2, 1861. He was brought into court for trial on the 30th day of October, 1861, and was acquitted.

Thomas Quigley was taken into custody by U. S. Marshal Millward at Philadelphia August 2, 1861, and transferred to Fort Lafayette by order of the Secretary of State dated January 31, 1862. He was one of the prize crew placed by the privateer Jeff. Davis on the schooner Enchantress, afterward captured by the U. S. steamer Albatross and brought into the port of Philadelphia. He was brought into court for trial on the 30th day of October, 1861, and convicted. Said Quigley remained in custody at Fort Lafayette February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

Richard Lewis was one of the crew of the privateer Petrel which was captured by the U. S. frigate Saint Lawrence and brought into Philadelphia, Pa., by the U. S. steamer Flag, and was taken into custody by Marshal Millward August 8, 1861, and afterward committed to Fort Lafayette. The said Richard Lewis remained in custody at Fort Lafayette February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department. (Ordered released February 21, 1862. Released on parole February 22, 1862.)

This person [Frank Albor] was taken into custody by U. S. Marshal Millward, of Philadelphia, August 8, 1861. He was one of the crew of the rebel privateer Petrel captured by the U. S. frigate Saint Lawrence and brought into the port of Philadelphia by the U. S. steamer Flag. Said Frank Albor died in prison at Philadelphia, November 9, 1861.

This man [Austin C. Williams] was taken into custody by U. S. Marshal Millward at Philadelphia August 8, 1861, and transferred to Fort Lafayette by order of the Secretary of State dated January 31, 1862. He was one of the crew of the rebel privateer Petrel captured by the U. S. frigate Saint Lawrence and brought to Philadelphia by U. S. steamer Flag. Said Williams remained in custody at Fort Lafayette February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

Hugh Monagrow was one of the crew of the privateer Petrel captured by the U. S. frigate Saint Lawrence and brought into the port of Philadelphia by the steamer Flag on the 8th of August, 1861. Monagrow in company with the balance of the crew was transferred to Fort Lafayette February 5, 1862, where he remained February 15, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

This man [Robert Barret] was taken into custody by U. S. Marshal Millward, of Philadelphia, August 8, 1861, and sent to Fort Lafayette by order of the Secretary of State dated January 31, 1862. He was one of the crew of the rebel privateer Petrel captured by the U. S. frigate Saint Lawrence and brought into the port of Philadelphia by U. S. steamer Flag. Said Barrett remained in custody at Fort Lafayette February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

This man [Thomas A. Brookbanks] was taken into custody by U. S. Marshal Millward at Philadelphia August 8, 1861, and sent to Fort Lafayette by order of the Secretary of State dated January 31, 1862. He was one of the crew of the rebel privateer Petrel captured by the U. S. frigate Saint Lawrence and brought into the port of Philadelphia by the U. S. steamer Flag. Said Brookbanks remained in custody at Fort Lafayette February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

John W. Dearing was one of the crew of the privateer Petrel captured by the U. S. frigate Saint Lawrence and brought into the port of Philadelphia August 8, 1861. Dearing in company with the balance of the crew was taken to Fort Lafayette February 5, 1862, where he remained February 15, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

A. C. Delahay was one of the crew of the privateer Petrel captured by the U. S. frigate Saint Lawrence and brought into the port of Philadelphia by the U. S. steamer Flag on August 8, 1861. Delahay in company with the balance of the crew was transferred to Fort Lafayette February 5, 1862, where he remained February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

William Bryan was taken into custody by U. S. Marshal Millward at Philadelphia August 8, 1861, and sent to Fort Lafayette by order of the Secretary of State dated January 31, 1862. He was one of the crew of the rebel privateer Petrel captured by the U. S. frigate Saint Lawrence and brought to the port of Philadelphia by the U. S. steamer Flag. Said Bryan was still in custody at Fort Lafayette February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

James A. Donnelly was arrested August 22, 1861, and committed to the Thirteenth Street Prison by order of the Secretary of State. He was charged with disloyalty to the Government and having returned from Richmond within a week before his arrest where he had gone for the purpose of assisting the present rebellion. Donnelly was afterward transferred to the Old Capitol Prison where he remained February 15, 1862, when in accordance with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to that Department. (Released February 22, 1862.)

This person [Joseph T. Ellicott] was arrested by order of General Porter, provost-marshal of Washington, and committed to the Thirteenth Street Prison August 23, 1861. There are no papers on file in the Department of State showing why or on what charges he was arrested. Urgent application having been made for his release the Secretary of State ordered his discharge on taking the oath of allegiance and stipulating not to enter or correspond with the insurrectionary States. He was accordingly released October 10, 1861.

Mrs. F. E. Hassler was arrested by order of the Assistant Secretary of War and committed to the Thirteenth Street Prison August 23, 1861, and from thence transferred to Mrs. Greenhow's. She was charged with holding a contraband correspondence with the insurrectionary States. Mrs. Hassler was released by order of the Secretary of War on oath of allegiance and parole October 30, 1861.

On the 24th of August, 1861, A. Q. Keasbey, esq., U. S. district attorney for New Jersey, wrote to the Department of State that he had caused the arrest of a man lately from Columbia, S. C., and about to return soon, on an affidavit of a soldier of Second Fire Zouaves of New York; that he offered him a pass to the Southern army and a captain's commission if he would go and join it, and stated that he had already passed several and was going to send more. August 27 the said district attorney (Keasbey) wrote again stating the name of the person arrested to be Phineas F. Frazee, and sending a copy of the affidavit of the soldier on which the arrest was made, which stated that said Frazee came to deponent and endeavored to influence him to go South and join the Southern army; that he told the deponent that he had passed men both ways to and from the South, and that if deponent would go he would give him a pass he could go with, and that when he arrived there he would have a captain's commission, and he said he had passed others South and intended to pass more. The said district attorney stated in his letter that Joseph Gabriel, the soldier who made said affidavit, had gone to Washington and there was no other testimony, and he intimated that no great reliance could be placed upon said affidavit of said Gabriel. The Acting Secretary of State therefore on the 31st day of August, 1861, wrote to the said district attorney advising the discharge of the said Frazee.

This person [Samuel H. Eakins] was arrested in Philadelphia August 24, 1861, and by order of the Secretary of State committed to Fort Lafayette. I., charged with the intention of taking his son Frank South to join the rebel army, and committed to Fort Lafayette August 26, 1861, by order of the Secretary of State dated August 24, 1861. The charge against Mr. Fisk is supported by the affidavit of James E. Stevens that he boarded with Francis Fisk, son of Francis M. Fisk, in the family of Mrs. Mary Chamberlain; that Francis M. Fisk came to the house of the said Mrs. Mary Chamberlain and told her "I am going to take my son Frank South to put [him] in the army." An order was issued from the Department of State dated September 30, 1861, for the release of Fisk on his taking the oath of allegiance and giving his parole of honor to do no hostile act, &c. He was accordingly released October 2, 1861.

The returns from Fort Lafayette set forth that Hilary B. Cenas, of the U. S. Navy, was committed to custody in that fort by order of the Secretary of the Navy on the 28th day of August, 1861; that he was transferred to Fort Warren by order of the Secretary of State on the 30th day of October, 1861. The returns from Fort Warren make no mention of this person nor is any further evidence concerning him to be found in the papers of the Department of State. (Released to be exchanged for Abbott December 19, 1861.)

These persons [John W. and Ezra E. Cornell] were taken prisoners at Fort Hatteras* and committed to Fort Columbus and from thence transferred to Fort Warren. They were held as prisoners of war. Application having been made for their release and statements made of a satisfactory character that they were compelled to join the Confederate Army and that they were willing to give their parole to do no further hostile act against the United States Government, an order was issued from the Department of State directing Colonel Dimick, commanding at Fort Warren, to release them on their engaging on oath not to leave the State of New York without permission of the Secretary of State and not to hold any treasonable correspondence or do any act hostile or injurious to the Government of the United States. They were accordingly released from confinement November 2, 1861.

This person [F. V. Hoskins] was one of the prisoners taken at Hatteras* by the expedition under General Butler and was confined in Fort Columbus. He claimed to be a chaplain in the service of the rebels. By order of the Secretary of State said F. V. Richard S. Freeman, of Macon, Ga., was arrested in New York by the superintendent of police on the 29th day of August, 1861. He was taken to Fort Lafayette and afterward transferred to Fort Warren. Freeman was charged with giving aid and assistance to the rebels by purchasing and transmitting to them necessary and useful machinery and other articles, and making efforts to do so, and with being a spy. His papers show that he left Macon on the 9th of August, 1861, with means and instructions to purchase a shoe peg machine and with introduction to parties in Louisville, Ky., who it was hoped would be able to get the machine conveyed southward through the lines of the U. S. forces. This machine was so much desired at Macon that it was represented as a public necessity. Freeman's papers also show that he had taken some steps toward fulfilling this commission before his arrest, and was engaged therein up to the day of his arrest; and also that he was on the lookout for other purchases which he might judge to be useful and profitable if made and conveyed to Georgia. Freeman had a check and letter of credit from the Bank of Middle Georgia on Messrs. Bingham & Parsons, 18 Exchange Place, New York. The said Freeman remained in custody at Fort Warren February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department. (Ordered released February 21, 1862. Released February 22, 1862.)

was made November 6, 1861, for their release by Captain Clements, one of said officers, who stated that Robinson and Brooks were free negroes; had never been in Government employ but were mere servants for himself and other officers and were anxious to return to their families. An order was issued from the Department of State dated November 29, 1861, directing Colonel Dimick to release these men on their taking the oath of allegiance. Colonel Dimick reports December 2, 1861, that said Robinson and Brooks have no objection to the oath except that having families in North Carolina if they take the oath they cannot return to them and therefore prefer not to be discharged. A subsequent order was issued from the Department of State dated January 6, 1862, directing Colonel Dimick to release Robinson and Brooks on their parole of honor to do no act hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. They were accordingly released.

Stewart was arrested in Chesapeake Bay near Dorchester County, Md., about the 29th of August, 1861, on board the sloop T. J. Evans which was seized by the U. S. schooner Dana. He was charged with being one of the crew of the sloop which was conveying contraband arms and goods to the rebels in Virginia. Stewart was taken to Washington and placed in jail. Frank E. Williams, of the Choctaw Agency west of Arkansas, was arrested by order of John S. Keyes, U. He was released September 7, 1861, by order of the Secretary of State.

The evidence upon which he was arrested consists of his own statements proved by numerous witnesses to have been reported by his family connections to the effect that he was an officer (captain) in the rebel army. An order was issued from the Department of State dated September 16, 1861, directing Lieut. Col. Martin Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to release Harrold on his taking the oath of allegiance to the United States. He was released September 18, 1861.

Hallinan, who is or was a Catholic priest, is charged by Fabre with having attempted to induce him to desert from the service of the United States (Fabre at the time being a private in Company I, Colonel Baxter's Philadelphia Fire Zouaves) and join the rebel army, offering to procure for him a commission as major in the same regiment in which he (Hallinan) was to serve as chaplain. He further represented that he had command of any amount of money and would give Fabre should he desert $3,000 for an outfit. No evidence* has been received at the Department of State showing that Hallinan was committed to prison.

He was the publisher of the paper in Hagerstown, Md., called The Hagerstown Mail, and it is presumed that he made it a disloyal sheet, though there are no charges on file in the Department of State against him. Having made application for his release and expressed a willingness to take the oath of allegiance an order was issued from the Department of State directing General Porter, provost-marshal of Washington, to release Deckart on his taking the oath of allegiance and stipulating not to enter or correspond with any of the insurrectionary States. He was charged with having in his possession letters addressed to persons in the enemy's service in Virginia with the intention of transmitting them to that State. The petition states that Mister was arrested in Chesconnessex Creek, Va., on board of his vessel, the Indiana, and was charged with having been engaged in conveying powder, balls, &c., contraband articles, to the rebels in Virginia, and was taken to and confined at Fortress Monroe. A letter also inclosed with the petition by Hon. J. W. Crisfield from E. R. Snead, of Onancock, Va., stated that Mister was confined at the Rip Raps. October 9, 1861, an order was issued from the Department of State directing Major-General Wool to release Mister on his taking the oath of allegiance and stipulating not to enter the insurrectionary States or do any act hostile to the United States Government. Major-General Wool replied by letter to the Secretary of State dated October 12, 1861, that this person was not and had not been at Fort Monroe or the Rip Raps. No information has been received at the Department of State relative to the place of confinement of said Mister other than above mentioned.

The only information received at the Department of State in regard to this person [J. A. Koenig] is contained in a letter to the Secretary of State dated October 4, 1861, from U. S. Deputy Marshal A. G. Stevens, of Buffalo, N. Y., in which Koenig is charged with purchasing arms for the use of the rebels. An order was issued from the Department of State October 7, 1861, directing Deputy Marshal Stevens to arrest and convey Koenig to Fort Lafayette. There is no evidence on file in the Department of State showing that the arrest was made.

Dr. Alexander C. Robinson, of Baltimore, was one of the highly respectable gentlemen of that city who gave consideration and power to the rebel cause by his open sympathy and support. During the period of agitation between the arrest of a portion of the Maryland legislature and the election following a military order was issued as a measure of precaution for the arrest of Doctor Robinson, but he was advised of it and eluded arrest, fleeing as was alleged to Virginia. No papers in the Department of State show at what time the order for Doctor Robinson's arrest was issued nor when if ever or on what conditions it was revoked. The correspondence in relation to him begins on the 4th and closes on the 26th of October, 1861. It is almost wholly between parties outside of the Department of State, and it does not appear that any order was made in this Department in relation to the case. There is on file an engagement on his word of honor to submit to the laws of the United States and of the State of Maryland and not in any way to assist those in arms against the authority of the United States, purporting to be signed by the said Robinson.

The first information received at the Department of State concerning this man [John S. Travis] was contained in a letter from L. C. Baker, Government agent, and dated October 10, 1861, in which he says:

On the 5th instant we arrested one John S. Travis, a resident of Great Mills Post-Office, and brought him a prisoner to this city (Washington). Travis is charged with carrying the contraband mails to and from the Great Mills Post-Office into Virginia. This morning I received a telegram from General Dix at Fort McHenry stating that the provost-marshal of Baltimore would furnish me with an abundance of proof against Travis.

No order has been issued or action taken by the Department of State in regard to the case of Travis, he having been released after remaining in Washington a few days on his parole.

Robert Renwick, of Baltimore, was arrested by order of General Dix October 6, 1861, and committed to Fort Columbus, New York Harbor, and from thence transferred to Fort Warren, Boston Harbor. There are no papers on file at the Department of State showing on what charge he was arrested. November 11, 1861, from information received from a prisoner discharged from Fort Warren the stables on Renwick's premises were searched and concealed arms found. At the request of the Secretary of War, February 6, 1862, an order was issued from the Department of State dated February 6, 1862, directing Colonel Dimick, commanding at Fort Warren, to release Renwick on a parole of thirty days. He was accordingly paroled.

Miss Ellie M. Poole was arrested October 7, 1861, in Wheeling by order of the Secretary of State but escaped from custody. She was again arrested November 7 in Louisville, Ky., and after being sent to Washington was committed to the Greenhow Prison. There was abundant evidence showing that Miss Poole was a shrewd and dangerous spy, having made several trips to Richmond since the breaking out of the rebellion. She was released by order of the Secretary of State January 16, 1862, on giving her parole of honor to keep herself from all connection with the existing troubles and not to communicate any information which would be of assistance to the so-called Confederate States or in any way to assist in any resistance to the authority or forces of the United States. Miss Poole after giving her parole was taken to Fortress Monroe and permitted to pass thence to the city of Norfolk, Va.

Alfred Da Costa, late of New Orleans, La., was arrested by an agent of Government in Detroit, Mich., October 7, 1861, and conveyed to Fort Lafayette and subsequently transferred to Fort Warren. The charges against Da Costa were as follows, as contained in a telegram to the Secretary of State received from William H. Barse, a Government agent, viz:

U. S. attorney and myself are perfectly satisfied from Da Costa's manner, conversation and circumstances connected with his account of himself that he is a rank secessionist and spy and was intending to sail from Quebec.

Seth C. Hawley, esq., of New York, having been requested to examine and report the facts connected with the arrest of and charges against Da Costa, reported to the Secretary of State under date of December 16, 1861, from which the following extract is made:

But he (Da Costa) to me declined to take the oath required, from which it is fairly to be inferred that he is not loyal in his opinions or designs and therefore I cannot recommend his release.

February 5, 1862, an order was issued from the Department of State for the release of the said A. Da Costa on his taking the oath of allegiance, &c., which he declined to do. The said Alfred Da Costa remained in custody at Fort Warren February 15, 1862, when in accordance with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department. (February 21, 1862, ordered released. February 22, 1862, released.)

This man [Benjamin J. Cross] was arrested on the 10th day of October, 1861, at or near his residence at Seneca, Md., by the Thirty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers and forwarded by General Stone to the provost-marshal at Washington. Cross was charged with having betrayed Dr. Causten, a member of a military company called the President's Mounted Guard in the service of the United States, to the rebels in May last, Causten being his brother-in-law and then at his house at Seneca. From a report of E. J. Allen* forwarded by General Porter, provost-marshal, it appears on the testimony of Lieutenant-Colonel Owen of the Kentucky [Pennsylvania] cavalry, that on the day that Causten was captured in May, 1861, Cross went over the river into Virginia and soon after the Virginia troops came over, proceeded directly to Cross' house and took Causten captive and carried him to Virginia, and that Cross did not return to his residence till about the time he was arrested. Said report also shows on the authority of Union refugees from the vicinity of Dranesville, Va., opposite Edwards Ferry, that Cross has always had the credit in that neighborhood of having betrayed his brother-in-law (Causten) into the hands of the rebels and that he has always been a great crony of the Virginia rebels till they became very urgent that he should go into military service when he returned to his home and was arrested. It is also alleged on the authority of parties from the vicinity of Seneca that at the time of the capture of Causten an ill-feeling existed against him on the part of Cross growing out of family affairs which it was thought led to the treacherous and disloyal conduct of the latter. The said Cross was confined in the Old Capitol Prison at Washington where he remained February 15, 1862, when he was transferred to the charge of the War Department pursuant to the order of that Department of the preceding day.

J. W. Packard was arrested in Philadelphia October 10, 1861, by order of the Secretary of State and committed to Fort Lafayette. He was charged with disloyalty to the United States Government. The said Packard was released by order of the Secretary of State October 21, 1861, on taking the oath of allegiance and stipulating that he would not visit any of the insurgent States or hold any correspondence with persons residing in them.

from thence transferred successively to Fort Lafayette and Fort Warren. An order was issued from the Department of State November 25, 1861, directing Colonel Dimick, commanding at Fort Warren, to release Carter on his taking the oath of allegiance to the United States Government and engaging neither to enter or correspond with the insurrectionary States. The said A. R. Carter was accordingly released November 28, 1861.

The only information received at the Department of State in regard to this person [R. Williams] is contained in a letter from Major-General Wool to the Secretary of State dated at Fortress Monroe October 12, 1861, in which General Wool states that Williams was then a prisoner confined in that fort. There has been no evidence received at the Department of State showing what were the charges upon which the prisoner was arrested nor has any action ever been taken by the Secretary of State in the case.

This person [John L. Troxell] was arrested by the military authorities in Washington October 12, 1861, and committed to the Thirteenth Street Prison. James W. Offutt was arrested October 15, 1861, at Georgetown, D. C., by order of Captain Ammon, provost-marshal of Rockville, Md., in obedience to the order of Major-General Banks. The charges against Offutt were that he had been for some months in the Confederate Army; that he was concealed during the day at a Mrs. Claggett's in Rockville about the 20th of September, and at night was in the habit of visiting Georgetown carrying letters and papers with him, and that he had frequent meetings in the night with known and violent secessionists in Rockville, and that he was engaged in treasonable practices. Application having been made for the release of Offutt on the representation that his health was fast giving way mentally and physically, and that in the opinion of Doctor Stewart he would unless released become violently insane an order was issued from the Department of State January 9, 1862, directing Brigadier-General Porter, provost-marshal of Washington, to release Offutt from the Old Capitol Prison upon his taking the oath of allegiance to the United States Government and stipulating not to visit or correspond with persons residing in the insurrectionary States and to do no act hostile to the United States.

William F. McKewen, of Baltimore, Md., was arrested in Baltimore October 15, 1861, by order of the military authorities and confined in Fort McHenry; from thence he was conveyed to Fort Lafayette and subsequently transferred to Fort Warren. At the time of his arrest he was secretary to the board of police commissioners of Baltimore and universally known to be disloyal to the United States Government and in deep sympathy with the rebellion. The arrest was made as a measure of military precaution to guard against the furtherance of the interests of the rebels in Baltimore and the State of Maryland. The said William F. McKewen remained in custody at Fort Warren February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department. Mask was detected in treasonable correspondence with persons in Virginia, giving information of expeditions in course of preparation by the Government with the avowed treasonable intent that such information should be communicated to the military and other authorities of the rebels for the benefit of their cause. His guilt was clearly established and is not denied. On the 10th of January, 1862, Mask who is a man in humble position and circumstances was released from custody on taking the oath of allegiance.

He was accordingly released November 6, 1861.

James M. P. Nolan,* an unnaturalized Irishman residing at Saint Louis, was arrested in that city by order of the State Department on the 18th day of October, 1861. His offense was treasonable correspondence. After his arrest Nolan refused to give any explanation of [his] conduct or to give any assurance that he would not take up arms against the Government or that he would remain neutral during the rebellion. The British consul satisfied of his complicity with the rebellion refused to interpose officially in his behalf, but interceded for his release on the grounds of his youth and in the hope that he [would] refrain from any further criminal acts. General Curtis also advised his release on the same grounds. On the 4th of December, 1861, the provost-marshal of Saint Louis in a written communication addressed to him tendered Nolan his release coupled with an admonition as to his future behavior. Nolan refused to be set at liberty saying that he would not accept his discharge as a favor but demanded it as a right. On the 11th of December, 1861, the State Department instructed the provost-marshal of Saint Louis to retain the said Nolan in custody until further orders. The said Nolan remained in custody in the military prison at Saint Louis February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department. The name of said Nolan is sometimes written Joseph N. P. Nolan. In the prison list it is James M. P. Nolan.

S. steamer Island Belle while in the act of crossing from the Maryland shore toward Mathias Point October 20, 1861, and was committed to the Old Capitol Prison January 3, 1862. He was released November 4, 1861.

John S. Bacon, of Laurel, Del., was arrested by order of the Secretary of State on the 21st of October, 1861, by Major Andrews, of the Second Regiment Delaware Volunteers, charged with conspiring to secrete a balloon belonging to the Government with treasonable purpose and was confined at Fort McHenry. On the 29th day of October, 1861, the said Bacon was released from confinement on taking the oath of allegiance by order of the Secretary of State.

B. L. Hayden was arrested October 22, 1861, by a Government agent at his home in Saint Mary's County, Md., and by order of the Secretary of State was taken to Fort Lafayette. Hayden was charged with disloyalty to the United States Government and strong sympathy with the rebel cause. He belonged to an organization known as the Lower Maryland Vigilance Committee whose object was to assist the insurgents and oppress the Union citizens. He was released on taking the oath of allegiance January 2, 1862, by order of the Secretary of State.

F. A. Drew was arrested at New York by order of the Secretary of State dated October 22, 1861, and committed to Fort Lafayette. He was charged with having been in the service of the rebels as master of a vessel. An order was issued from the Department of State dated October 23, 1861, directing U. S. Marshal Murray, of New York, to cause Drew to be released on his taking the oath of allegiance. He was accordingly released October 23, 1861.

Application having been made to the Secretary of State by citizens of Parkersburg, Va., for the release of this person [Wigal Young] who was represented to have been arrested by General Rosecrans and sent to Camp Chase in Ohio for confinement, the Secretary of State by letter dated October 25, 1861, requested General Rosecrans to furnish the proofs on which Young was arrested. General Rosecrans replied October 31, 1861, that an order had been issued October 26, 1861, by the provost-marshal of Western Virginia directing the return of Young to be delivered to the U. S. marshal of Virginia, and released on such terms as Judge Jackson should prescribe.

The only information received at the Department of State relative to this person [John D. Sudendorf] is contained in a report of Major-General Dix dated October 25, 1861, stating that he had sent Sudendorf with others to Fort Columbus; that he was a citizen or supposed to be so but acting in the capacity of a spy in conveying information to the rebels. The said John D. Sudendorf remained in custody at Fort Warren where he was conveyed November 1, 1861, on the 15th of February, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department. (Turned over to civil authorities to be treated for insanity March 17, 1862.)

Application having been made to the Secretary of State by citizens of Parkersburg, Va., for the release of this person [Mr. Kizer] who was represented to have been arrested by order of General Rosecrans and sent to Camp Chase, Ohio, for confinement, the Secretary of State by letter dated October 25, 1861, requested General Rosecrans to furnish the proofs on which Kizer was arrested. General Rosecrans replied October 31, 1861, that an order had been issued October 26, 1861, by the provost-marshal of Western Virginia directing that Kizer be delivered to the U. S. marshal of Virginia, to be released on such terms as Judge Jackson should prescribe.

The only information received at the Department of State relative to this person [Brazillian Morley] is contained in a telegram from Robert Murray, esq., U. S. marshal of New York, dated October 28, 1861, to the Secretary of State stating that Commodore Paulding had arrested and placed in his custody the said Morley, late of the U. S. Navy, and that he (the U. S. marshal) had committed him to Fort Lafayette. The action of the U. S. marshal was approved by the Secretary of State.

tary of State October 28, 1861, directing John A. Kennedy, superintendent of police in New York, to arrest McAuliff on his arrival and examine his papers. He was accordingly arrested November 10, 1861, but nothing found upon him. In answer to the request of Mr. Kennedy for instructions what to do with McAuliff the Secretary of State directed November 14, 1861, the former to adopt such proceedings in the matter as in his judgment was proper, and if released to compel McAuliff to stipulate on oath not to enter or correspond with any of the States in insurrection against the Government of the United States.

This man [Withers Smith] was arrested in Fairfax County, Va., where he resides, on the 28th of October, 1861, and taken to the headquarters of General Smith and soon after brought to Washington and confined in the Thirteenth Street Prison. He was charged with aiding the rebels. A report of E. J. Allen transmitted by the provost-marshal, General Porter, sets forth on the testimony of Isaac Tyson, Charles E. Johnson and William Walters that Smith was a member or agent of the rebel vigilance committee of Fairfax County and appointed to go around the county and learn who were Union men and who were secessionists and report their names to the committee; that on one occasion Smith said that every man who did not take up arms in favor of the Southern cause was a traitor to the South. On another occasion Johnson said to Smith that he should never take up arms against the Stars and Stripes, to which Smith answered that he had better not talk in that way as they had a vigilance committee into whose hands he would be given. Also that Smith went around serving notices on the members of the State militia in Fairfax County; that such a notice was served on a young man named Albert Peacock, and that Peacock left Virginia for Georgetown that same night; that the tenor of those notices was that the person upon whom one was served must be at the place of rendezvous to be drilled for the purpose of repelling the invasion of the State by Northern troops. Also that Smith has been from the beginning of the rebellion an active rebel, and that when the draft was made out for the militia of Virginia said Smith went round and served the notice on different persons, and that one of the witnesses had seen such notices with Withers Smith's name signed thereto. That on another occasion Smith told said Johnson that the Palmetto flag would be flying over the Capitol in two weeks from that time; and when said Johnson responded that if so it would be without his aid Smith replied that he would report him to the vigilance committee the next day at Fairfax Court-House, and that if he did not take up arms against the Government he should leave the State of Virginia, for he was appointed by the vigilance committee to report the name of every Union man to them; and also that said Smith did report him to said vigilance committee and said committee thereupon had Johnson before them and threatened him and forbid him from going to the District of Columbia. Said Smith was transferred from the Thirteenth Street Prison to the Old Capitol Prison where he continued in custody February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

The papers on file in the Department of State concerning this man [Edward McMurdy] do not show where or at what time he was arrested. He was charged with being a spy in the rebel service and committed to the Old Capitol Prison. The papers are for the most part letters from distinguished men for his release, testifying to the loyalty, &c., of McMurdy, his family and friends. Also a report dated Provost-Marshall's Office, Washington, D. C., October 30, 1861, signed E. J. Allen, stating that McMurdy has been released by order of the Secretary of War.

This person [Thomas White] was arrested as appears by a letter from his brother-in-law, R. W. White, forwarded to procure his release on parole, on the steamer Platte Valley in November, 1861. The said letter represents that he was confined in military prison at Saint Louis. There is no other or further information about the man in the Department of State, wherefore it is inferred that he was held by the military authorities either as a prisoner of war or for some military offense.

Edward B. Cuthbert, of Beaufort, S. C., was taken prisoner at Port Royal or Ladies Island near Port Royal, in November, 1861, and sent to Fort Lafayette. The Department of State has not received any information from the military authorities in regard to this prisoner placing him in any different light from that occupied by others captured by them. A statement made on behalf of the prisoner by his wife shows that he escaped to Charleston after the bombardment of Port Royal and returned voluntarily on his own business as she alleges when he was taken. It does not appear whether or not he entered within the lines of the Government forces before he was captured. His wife says he was unarmed, though it would seem from her statement that he made resistance as she says he was "overpowered." No allegation of criminality as a spy has been made against him nor is it known that he is in any other way culpable than as a rebel in common with all the residents of Beaufort and vicinity. The said Cuthbert remained in custody at Fort Lafayette February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

W. Oswald Dundas* was arrested November 1, 1861, on complaint of Major De Zeng, of the First Long Island Volunteers, and confined in the Thirteenth Street Prison in Washington, D. C., and was transferred to the Old Capitol Prison November 7, 1861. Dundas was in the habit of leaving his home near Bladensburg, Md., early in the evening on horseback and returning late at night. When arrested he claimed to be a gentleman of means who had a right to go where he chose; that he was not in favor of the United States Government for it oppressed his countrymen and admitted that he was a secessionist. Dundas refused to take the oath of allegiance to the Federal Government but would cheerfully swear to support the so-called Confederate States Constitution and was proud to be called a rebel under the present existing circumstances. He remained confined in the Old Capitol Prison February 15, 1862, when in accordance with an order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

He was released by order of the Secretary of State November 22, 1861, on taking the oath of allegiance to the United States Government and stipulating not to visit or correspond with persons residing in the insurrectionary States and do no act hostile to the United States.

It appears from a letter addressed to the Secretary of State dated Fort Monroe November 19, 1861, from Major-General Wool that this person [C. K. Gallagher] was arrested by General Butler at Hatteras Inlet. Gallagher writes to the Secretary of State from Fort Monroe November 17, 1861, asking to be released on parole to go South and effect an exchange for himself and states that he refused to take the oath of allegiance, being actuated in so doing by motives of conscience and duty. No action was taken by the Secretary of State in this case further than to acknowledge the receipt of the letter of Major-General Wool with its inclosure from Gallagher.

On his return home he brought not less than 800 stand of arms from Baltimore, which afterward went to Virginia. He has used his horses and wagons for hauling contraband goods from the Patuxent to the Potomac during the greater part of the summer and fall; has made his house the headquarters of secession spies passing to and from Virginia; has enlisted, equipped and forwarded a large number of men for the Confederacy; has notified Union men to leave the county, and has on all occasions cursed and abused the Government.

* See pp. 204, 205, 211, for correspondence concerning Waddell.

An order was issued from the Department of State dated December 13, 1861, directing Colonel Dimick, commanding at Fort Warren, to release Fuller on his taking the oath of allegiance stipulating to do no hostile act to the Government of the United States. Colonel Geary writes to General Dix in said letter that the prisoner's family are represented as Union-loving people and says that they assured him that Engle was anxious to take the oath of allegiance to the United States Government and to reside in Pennsylvania. William P. Converse was arrested in New York November 23, 1861, by order of the Secretary of State and committed to Fort Lafayette. The examination of intercepted letters found on the Maury Brothers, disclosed that Converse was corresponding with persons in the insurrectionary States in violation of the President's proclamation, and that the writers of letters introduced their correspondence with the remark that "Mr. Converse has informed me of an opportunity to send this to you by a party who is going to New Orleans." Letters were also found without signatures in full and traced to W. P. Converse's place of business addressed to E. K. and W. P. Converse, jr., New Orleans, dated October 28, 1861, from which the following quotations are taken:

What a thrashing they got the other day on the Upper Potomac; out of 2,400, 600 lost. * * * I hope you are all prepared for the fleet which is to take you all and box you up. * * * We have to keep quiet for the Hotel de L. is fixed up for the accommodation of such as I am. They talk of superseding McClellan; if they do you will have an easy or comparatively easy victory.

It was thus proved that Converse was aiding knowingly and became a party to the illegal, expressly prohibited and contraband intercourse with persons in the insurrectionary States by informing others and availing himself of an opportunity to send letters to New Orleans by a person or persons who were engaged in the business of smuggling correspondence through the Federal lines. An order was issued November 30, 1861, from the Department of State directing Lieut. Col. Rogers and was produced on the examination of Troutman after his arrest and was fully admitted by him yet he was discharged by the U. S. commissioner before whom he had been brought on taking the oath of allegiance to the United States. The U. S. marshal satisfied of Troutman's guilt wrote to the Department of State for advice whether to take him into custody again, and referred to Senator Garrett Davis, of Kentucky, for further particulars and an account of Troutman's character. Senator Davis on being applied to gave his views of the case, concluding by saying that Troutman "being a man of no importance at all and of rather feeble character I would advise against his rearrest." An investigation of his case failed to substantiate the charge that he had ever taken up arms against the United States Government and on the 9th of December, 1861, an order was issued from the Department of State directing his release on his taking the oath of allegiance. He declined to take oath of allegiance to United States Government stating that he was a Georgian and that his allegiance was due to his State. He professed his willingness and desire to remain a peaceful citizen of the United States and to take the oath of allegiance as such which he accordingly did on the 25th day of January, 1862, and was thereupon discharged from custody.

Tench Schley was arrested by order of General Hooker and committed to the Old Capitol Prison the 15th of December, 1861. Schley was charged with being a spy and having conveyed information to the enemy. The following extract from a report made by Major Allen to the provost-marshal of Washington and forwarded by the latter to the Secretary of State contains the best information on file in the Department of State relative to Mr. Schley, viz:

Tench Schley is a young man of considerable shrewdness and intelligence and that in my opinion if permitted to be at large even for a day could and probably would find some means of repeating the offense for which he is confined and perhaps be the means of conveying valuable information to the enemy.

The said Tench Schley remained in custody at the Old Capitol Prison in Washington February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

John Hagins, of Magoffin County, Ky., was arrested in Montgomery County in that State about the middle of December, 1861, charged with furnishing supplies of stock to the rebel army under General Williams. The Department of State was advised of the arrest by a dispatch dated Cincinnati, December 17, 1861, from E. S. Samuels, Government agent in Kentucky, and C. B. Pitts, deputy U. S. marshal of the same State, who say that he Hagins was taken while "in transit with cattle for the rebels," and also that they have "plenty of evidence to hang him." He was thereupon directed to be taken to Fort Lafayette, which was accordingly done on the 20th of December. The statements made by Hagins in letters to the Department direct from himself and through his attorney Mr. Tenney are contradictory. He states that he was taken while driving home nine head of cattle raised by himself that he had been grazing at a place in Montgomery County some sixty miles from his residence. The statement made through Mr. Tenney is that he was apprehended while on his return from Cincinnati where he had been with some hogs. The said Hagins remained in custody at Fort Lafayette February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department. (Released on parole February 22, 1862.)

The same letter embodies a quotation from a letter received by the writer from Jones as follows: "Circumstances which you well know and over which I had but little control induced me to take the step I did. I am not only willing but anxious to take the oath and return home to my business, and when I take it I expect to keep it not only in the letter but the spirit." The letter referred to was sent to the Department of State by the Hon. John W. Menzies from the House of Representatives on the 4th of February, 1862. On the 12th of February, 1862, the said Jones was ordered to be released on taking the oath of allegiance. (Released April 7, 1862.)

Apprehending arrest he fled in August, 1861, to Canada where he remained three months or more before his name was brought to the notice of the Department of State. His father and other friends then commenced importunities for some sort of safeguard for him to return home which continued till early in January, 1862, when the Secretary of War gave assurance to Stump that he would not be molested on his return home by any authority of the Government unless he should commit some offense thereafter which might make his arrest necessary. Allen through General Porter, provost-marshal, states as derived from Rea himself that he is a native of Baltimore where he resides with and is employed by his father; that he is thirty years of age; that his father has a clothing store in Baltimore and a large amount of outstanding debts in Southeastern Virginia principally in Westmoreland and King George Counties which he was sent to collect; that he came by railroad to Washington, from there to Charlotte Hall, Md., by stage; thence with a companion through the woods to the house of a person whose name he refused to give. He also refused to give any account of his movements after leaving Charlotte Hall till he embarked on the Potomac or the names of any persons who aided and abetted his attempt to cross the river or any information concerning this clandestine communication with the rebels; that he was arrested by a boat's crew from the cutter Howell Cobb at 12.30 a. m. January 11, taken on board the cutter and there searched; that he had not the accounts with him which he was going to collect; that he only carried a memorandum of them and that was in a package in the boat with his shirts; that as the package and its contents were so badly wet he threw them away; that some of the bills were fishing accounts averaging $80 to $100 each; that the next day in company with Rev. Bennett Smedes and George M. Gormley he was transferred to the Island Belle; thence to Colonel Graham's headquarters; thence successively to U. S. vessels Wyandank, Harriet Lane and Yankee on board of which latter he was taken to the U. S. Navy-Yard whence he was sent by Captain Dahlgren to the provost-marshal's office. No papers were found on him. It is otherwise shown that Smedes and Gormley were in the same boat and taken at the same time. Smedes and two companions are also shown to have been talking secession shortly before they were taken. Said English remained in custody at Fort Warren February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department. (Ordered released February 21, 1862. Released February 22, 1862.)

Gurden Pendleton was arrested February 4, 1862, by D. H. Carr, U. S. marshal of the district of Connecticut, at Stonington by order of the Secretary of State. Pendleton was a strong rebel sympathizer and did what he could to prevent the enlistment of men in the U. S. service. He made use of the following expressions in the most public manner on the 15th of January, to wit: "I hope to God that every Northern man who goes to fight the Southerners will be killed, and leave his bones to bleach there. This is a most unjust war against them. Your President Lincoln is a villain and a d——d liar," and much more to the same effect. Pendleton was taken before F. A. Palmer, notary public, where he took the oath of allegiance with stipulations that he was to hold no correspondence with persons residing in the insurgent States. He was thereupon released.

This person [Calvert Beach] was arrested by order of General Heintzelman and committed to the Old Capitol Prison February 5, 1862. No papers have been received at the Department of State showing on what charges the arrest was made. The said Calvert Beach remained in custody at the Old Capitol Prison February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

This person [E. C. Ostrander] was arrested by order of General Smith and committed to Old Capitol Prison February 5, 1862. There are no papers on file in the Department of State showing on what charges he was arrested. Said E. C. Ostrander remained in custody at Old Capitol Prison February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department. (Ordered released February 21, 1862. Released on parole February 22, 1862.)

This person [John L. Shults] was arrested by L. C. Baker, esq., an agent of Government in Washington, about the 5th of February, 1862. February 5, 1862, an order was issued from the Department of State directing L. C. Baker to deliver said Shults to the charge of the U. S. marshal of the District of Columbia which was done. He was not regarded either as a prisoner of war or a political prisoner of state.

Vance L. Trumble was arrested by order of General Heintzelman and committed to the Old Capitol Prison February 5, 1862. There are no papers on file at the Department of State showing on what charge he was arrested. Said Trumble remained in custody at the Old Capitol February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department. (Ordered released February 21, 1862. Released on parole February 22, 1862.)

B. H. Jenkins was arrested February 5, 1862, at Alexandria, Va., by an agent of the Government charged with being a spy and having recently been in the rebel army acting as sutler and contractor. By order of the Secretary of State dated February 5, 1862, Jenkins was placed in the custody of the provost-marshal of Washington. The report of L. C. Baker, a Government agent who examined the person and papers taken from Jenkins, shows that Jenkins had with him at the time of his arrest passes issued by both civil and military officers of the rebel government; also orders for cars to transport lumber. After his arrest Jenkins admitted that he voted for the ordinance of secession in Virginia, and voluntarily stated that he was interested in a sutlership in the Confederate army at Manassas Junction up to October last. The said B. H. Jenkins remained in custody at the Old Capitol Prison in Washington February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

Abraham Hornbeck was arrested by General Smith February 7, 1862, and committed to the Old Capitol Prison. There are no papers in the Department of State showing the charges against this man. He remained in the Old Capitol Prison February 15, 1862, when in accordance with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department. (Released February 22, 1862.)

Mahlon H. Janney was arrested by order of General Banks and confined in the Old Capitol Prison February 8, 1862. There are no papers on file in the Department of State showing on what charges this man was arrested. The said Janney remained in custody at the Old Capitol Prison till February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department. (Released on parole not to leave the District of Columbia February 22, 1862.)

Rev. J. R. Stewart, of Alexandria, was arrested* by S. W. Morton, a Government agent, February 9, 1862, for omitting to read the prayer for the President of the United States and for Congress and declining to do so after being twice requested. The fact of the arrest having been brought before the Secretary of State he referred the matter to General Montgomery, the military governor of Alexandria, to take such action as he deemed advisable for the public interest.

The only information received at the Department of State concerning this man [John Barneto] is contained in a letter dated February 11, 1862, from Lieut. Col. W. Hoffman, commanding at Camp Chase, Ohio, stating that he has been informed by direction of Governor Tod, of Ohio, that John Barneto, a prisoner at Camp Chase, had been released.

Warren Curtis was arrested in Virginia, February 13, 1862, by order of General F. J. Porter and committed to the Old Capitol Prison. He was charged with being a spy. Having obtained a pass to cross the Potomac to visit relatives he made his way to the outer lines of the U. S. Army without trying to accomplish his pretended object. The said Warren Curtis remained in custody in the Old Capitol February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department. (Released March 25, 1862.)

Dr. Robert Barclay arrested February 18, 1862, by Provost-Marshal-General Farrar [at Saint Louis, Mo.], for general, open and avowed disloyalty. (Specifications not on file.)

The only information had at the Department of State concerning this man [Matthew Bright] is in a letter dated February 18, 1862, from Lieut. Col. W. Hoffman, commanding at Camp Chase, stating that he has been informed by direction of Governor Tod, of Ohio, that Bright, a prisoner at Camp Chase, had been released.

George J. Jones arrested February 20, 1862, by Provost-Marshal Leighton [at Saint Louis, Mo.], for publishing for circulation in hand-bill form treasonable and libelous articles from English journals with view of aiding and assisting the rebel cause. Prisoner is a British subject. Case under examination March 3.

Ambrose McFaul arrested February 28, 1862, by Provost-Marshal Leighton [at Saint Louis, Mo.], for treasonable language publicly and in presence of soldiers.

* See pp. 212, 213, 219, 220 for correspondence relating to Stewart's arrest.

The following-named persons were arrested by the military authorities of the Department of the West. The only information relative to them on file in the Department of State is contained in a report dated March 3, 1862, of George E. Leighton, provost-marshal of Saint Louis, giving the names of the parties arrested and the charges preferred against them, viz: Charles Elliott charged with smuggling goods to Memphis, Stephen Stott* charged with bridge burning, Ambrose McFaul charged with treasonable language expressed publicly and in the presence of soldiers, E. M. Mabie charged with carrying contraband correspondence to and from the South, William H. Roberts charged with treasonable language in public, W. C. Jameson charged with conveying correspondence to insurrectionary States.

Case of Richard H. Alvey.

The first known of this person [Richard H. Alvey] at the Department of State was by a letter from him dated Fort Warren, November 5, 1861, in which he states that he was arrested in his office at Hagerstown, Md., and committed to Fort McHenry about the 18th of June last and has been detained there and at Fort Lafayette and Fort Warren ever since. He asked his release on grounds of humanity, but as he made no allegations of loyalty inquiry was made which resulted in his being offered his release on the 18th of December, 1861, upon condition of his taking the oath of allegiance. This he refused making objection to the form of the oath tendered him. Finally, however, he was released on taking an oath of allegiance in a different form and giving his parole not to commit any act of hostility against the Government nor to go into any seceded State during the war nor to communicate with any person in any such State and to report himself at any place of confinement or imprisonment when required so to do. This release was made on the 6th day of January, 1862.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

FORT LAFAYETTE, August 8, 1861.

[Hon. JOHN THOMPSON MASON.]

DEAR JUDGE: I wrote to you immediately upon my arrival here, but as all letters and correspondence written and received here are subjected to the inspection of the commanding officer and as he informed us that all our letters had been forwarded to headquarters of the Army I take it for granted you have not received it as you make no mention of it in the two favors received here from you.

I am under many obligations to you for your kind interposition and I sincerely hope that by a renewal of your efforts at Washington you will be able to accomplish my release from this place. You may be sure that nothing would conduce so much to my comfort and relief. I am greatly surprised that there should be any difficulty in getting a copy of the paper mentioned in your letters. The report was certainly made as I was informed by several parties. Nor can I see the sense or reason for the delay. I hope Doctor Wharton may be able to procure the paper or a letter from Mr. Addison, such as seems to be required at Washington. I think surely that the Government will not persist in detaining me here when it is fully assured by its own officials after an examination such as has been made that there is no case against me sustainable by the Constitution and laws of the land.

We are all well, and Messrs. Howard, Gatchell and Davis desire to be kindly remembered to you. If you have an opportunity please see Judge Bartol or Mr. Dobbin, either of whom will I am sure see Mr. Addison in regard to the matter and procure from him whatever statement he is willing to make with reference to the examination of the case. I wrote to Brent the day after my arrival here but I suppose he has not received the letter. My kindest regards to Mrs. Mason and all your family, and hoping soon to see you all,

I remain, yours, very truly,

R. H. ALVEY.

P. S.—Direct your communications to me in care of Lieutenant Wood at this fort. Colonel Burke is commanding the post including both forts, Hamilton and this, but Lieutenant Wood is in command at this fort.

WASHINGTON, September 2, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEAR SIR: I take the liberty of presenting the bearer the Hon. John Thompson Mason, of Maryland, who desires to make some explanations respecting Mr. Alvey. Mr. Alvey was arrested some time since at Frederick and Judge Mason thinks has been detained from oversight. I hope you will be able to give him a hearing.

Yours, truly,

M. BLAIR.

FORT WARREN, November 5, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have been a prisoner kept in confinement since about the 18th of June last. I was arrested in my office at Hagerstown, Md., and have been detained in the several forts of McHenry, Lafayette and this (Warren) ever since. Immediately upon my arrest I requested and urged a speedy investigation but though two several grand juries have sat in the Maryland district since the arrest no action has been had that I am aware of. The imprisonment has not only been exceedingly onerous to me personally but has in a great measure effected ruinous consequences to my family, they being entirely dependent upon my professional labors which have not only been suspended but my business itself mainly destroyed and lost. I write now simply to ask of you that you will order my release. If the Government entertaining any suspicion or apprehension of hostile purposes on my part shall exact as a condition of my release any guaranty I would be willing to give my parole to commit no act of hostility, or to enter into a recognizance to appear in the proper court to answer any accusation that may be preferred against me.

Hoping that your determination may be favorable to my request, am your obedient servant,

R. H. ALVEY.

SIR: The Secretary of State directs me to refer to your office the accompanying letter* to him of the 30th ultimo from William Schley, of Baltimore, and the letter to that gentleman from the U. S. attorney there, and to remark that as the Mr. Alvey referred to is understood to have been arrested by judicial process the expediency of his discharge is most properly a question for the decision of the Attorney-General.

Hon. SECRETARY OF STATE.

SIR: In consequence of a conversation (last Friday I think) at council about the imprisonment of Richard H. Consequently I wrote to the district attorney at Baltimore whose answer I transmit herewith for your inspection. If he is not held as a political prisoner I think he had better be discharged.

I transmit this order to John S. Keyes, esq., U. FORT WARREN, Boston Harbor, December 19, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: After an imprisonment of six months (since 18th of June last) I was yesterday offered release upon terms of taking an oath of allegiance and stipulating to observe certain other conditions. I extremely regret that the terms of the tendered release were such as I could not accept consistently with self-respect and a proper regard for the opinion of those with whom I live and am accustomed to associate. However willing and ready I may be upon all lawful occasions to take an oath of allegiance to the Government (and I hold myself ready upon all such occasions) I cannot reconcile it to my own self-respect to become the especial object of tests that are not prescribed to all others bearing the same relation to the Government as myself (that of a mere private citizen) nor justified by any law of the land. The oath of allegiance proposed has never been by any legal authority as you are aware directed or authorized to be administered to the citizen as such, but prescribed only and exclusively to a certain class of employés of the Government. This oath then when proposed to me is entirely extrajudicial and subjects me to a test to which other citizens are exempt and in my conscientious view of the matter can only tend to degrade and humiliate me in the estimation of myself and others whose good opinion I value and esteem.

If the oath were prescribed by any law of the land to the citizens generally or any occasion offered when it was lawful to administer it I should not hesitate about it or in the least object to it, but the objection now is that it was not intended to apply to me or to any other private citizen, and in submitting to its illegal administration I should humiliate myself and forfeit the good opinion of mankind. This feeling though it may not be predicated upon the same reasoning that you would suggest yet being sincerely and conscientiously entertained I hope will be appreciated. I have deemed it proper that I should thus state the reason for declining the terms of the tendered release. If conditions be exacted of me I am willing to give any proper parole such as to commit no act hostile to the Government and not to go into the seceded States or communicate with persons therein. This I feel justified in offering because of the great necessity for my being out of prison to attend to the wants of my family and the requirements of my business. I must therefore again request that you will order my release without the condition of taking the oath.

I am, your obedient servant,

R. H. ALVEY.

WASHINGTON, December 27, 1861.

F. W. SEWARD, Esq., Assistant Secretary of State.

MY DEAR SIR: It seems that Alvey has felt obliged to reject the liberty offered to him because of the oath required. It is very silly of him I think, and proceeds entirely from the sensitiveness which he has for the ridicule attached to it by still more silly people. I do not see the difference between that which I herewith inclose* and that proposed by the Department and yet he is willing to take this and not that. I would be glad if the Secretary would indulge him in his preference and let him return to his family which really needs his attention.

Yours, truly,

M. BLAIR.

Case of John S. Emerson.

John S. Emerson was arrested by Lieut. C. H. Shepard, provost-marshal of Alexandria, and committed to the city jail, Washington, by order of General Mansfield June 23, 1861. Emerson was formerly from Memphis where he was employed as steam-boat captain on the western and Mississippi rivers. He left there in May and came to Alexandria, passing himself off as Lieutenant Hill, of the Sixth Massachusetts, and claimed to have been wounded while passing through Baltimore with that regiment. He mingled with the officers and men, talking with the sentinels, and seemed desirous of ascertaining the position and strength of the Union forces in and about Alexandria. His conduct was so suspicious that he was finally arrested as a spy and committed as stated above. He was released on taking the oath of allegiance October 17, 1861, by order of the Secretary of State.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 8, 1861.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON.

SIR: I have been confined in the jail of this city by order of General Mansfield over three months and I would respectfully appeal to you in the name of law, justice and humanity to give me my discharge from this horrid place. I claim to be loyal to the Government having at no time said or done anything against the Constitution. True my residence has been in Virginia; I was born in Alexandria, Va., but have not been a resident of Virginia for twenty years. I have not been in Virginia for nearly six years up to the time of my arrest. My residence has been ever since I left Virginia South and West; my business that of steam-boat officer and merchant. I never have given nor will I ever give any aid to the enemy or the Southern rebels. My situation is truly unpleasant and I am compelled from sickness and indisposition to request your favor in my case.

Most respectfully,

J. S. EMERSON.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 11, 1861.

Brig. Gen. ANDREW PORTER,
Provost-Marshal, Washington, D. C.

GENERAL: Herewith I inclose to you a communication from J. S. Emerson, a prisoner confined in this city. Will you have the goodness to examine his case and return to me with this inclosure your opinion thereon?

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

[Inclosure.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., JAIL, October 8, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

SIR: Permit me with all due respect to call your attention to my imprisonment in this jail by order of General Mansfield under the suspicion of being a spy or political prisoner. I have been confined here some three months, have never had any examination and do not know what is to be my lot. General Mansfield promised me nearly three months since to look into my case and thought it more than possible I would soon be released. The papers and matter of my arrest were laid before General Mansfield by Lieutenant Shepard, provost-marshal of Alexandria, by whom I was arrested, and up to this time nothing has been done in my case. I would be under many obligations if I can prevail on you to take my case into consideration and give me at least my doom.

Satisfied I am that I am no secessionist or disloyalist. I never have during this crisis said or done anything against this present administration. I am no politician, having at no time in my life ever took sides with either party. I never voted at a Presidential or municipal election in my life. I was born in the town of Alexandria, Va.; my parents and relatives reside there; I have not been a resident of Virginia for twenty years; have not been in Virginia for six years or thereabouts until last June; my residence has been South and West ever since I left Virginia; my business has been that of steam-boat officer and merchant.

I would respectfully ask you in the name of justice and humanity to look or cause to be looked into my case, for this place where I am now confined is horrible; the food of the jail is more than miserable; the stench of the place is horrible; the quarters where myself and eight other political prisoners are confined are upon the same floor and in immediate connection with the quarters of the negroes, a part of whom are confined to their bed sick with various diseases. You will pardon this lengthy letter but I am compelled to seek your assistance. I claim to be loyal to the Government and would do anything in my power to crush this rebellion. My only apology for any seeming misconduct on my part subjecting me to incarceration must be that of too free use at the time of drink.

Most respectfully,

J. S. EMERSON.

HDQRS. CITY GUARD, PROVOST-MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., October 15, 1861.

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal.

DEAR SIR: In the case of John S. Emerson, a prisoner committed to the city jail about the 2d of July last by order of General Mansfield on the charge of being a spy, I have the honor to report in obedience to your request that it appears from the statement of the prisoner and the meager papers in the case that he is a native of Alexandria, Va., where the most of his family connections reside; that he is about forty years of age; that he has for several years past followed the business of a steam-boat captain on Southern and Western rivers, principally the Mississippi; that he left Memphis in April last on account of the suspension of navigation by the national troubles and came on a visit to his friends in Alexandria, and that he was arrested by the provost-marshal there on the 24th of June on the charge of being a spy and sent to this city where he was committed to the jail where he is now confined by order of General Mansfield. The following is the record in the case, as per copy furnished by Justice Donn:

ALEXANDRIA, July 2, 1861.

Prisoner John S. Emerson (alias Lieutenant Hill) was arrested by myself on the supposition that he was a spy. He has been around the camps and inside the lines and made himself familiar with the officers and men and passed himself off as Lieutenant Hill, of the Sixth Massachusetts Regiment, Company B, and that he was wounded at the fight in Baltimore at the time the regiment passed through there; and as there was no such officer in said company and he being a native of this place I arrested him June 24, and he has been in confinement since the time of his arrest. He made it a point to go around and converse with the sentinels and try to pick up all the information he could in relation to their numbers, names of regiments, &c.

C. H. SHEPARD,
Lieutenant and Provost-Marshal.

[Indorsement.]

Mr. Justice Donn will commit this man as a spy for the present.

MANSFIELD,
Brigadier-General, &c.

OCTOBER —, 1861.

The above is a true copy of papers in my possession in relation to the party now confined in Washington jail. I have written in connection with the case to Lieutenant Shepard but have heard nothing relative to the case.

THOMAS C. DONN,
Justice of the Peace for Washington County, D. C.

Mr. Emerson says in his statement that he is Union in feeling; has never cast a vote for any one, having been constantly on the river and not having any permanent place of residence and consequently taking no interest in political matters; that he will take the oath of allegiance; that he does not wish to take any part in this contest; that he has no family and doesn't care which whips; that he left Memphis fearing that he might not be able to get away if he remained longer; that upon meeting with old acquaintances in Alexandria he got on a spree and might have made some remarks in the presence of the officers who were drinking with him that were offensive, that Lieutenant Shepard was around with him considerable and that he Emerson) thinks he has suffered enough, having been in jail nearly four months without an examination. He also states that his health is suffering for the want of recreation and on account of the unhealthiness of his present quarters which latter state of affairs my operative (P. H. D.) fully certifies to.

Although a man who does not care which side whips in this contest is not exactly the man we would like to affiliate with these trying times still he has made the impression in our bureau that he would not be a dangerous man to set at large under the humanizing influence of the oath of allegiance. His palming himself off among the officers at Alexandria or being introduced by his comrades, in the language of his counsel, as a U. S. officer is represented by his counsel as a drunken joke incident to the spree that he was on.

I herewith inclose you the documents received from the State Department.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. J. ALLEN.

[Indorsement.]

I have reason to believe from the representations contained in the within report and from what other evidence I have been able to obtain that the arrest and committal of the within-named John S. Emerson grew out of indiscretions of his while in a state of intoxication without any real criminal intentions on his part, and I would respectfully recommend his discharge.

Very respectfully, &c.,

A. PORTER,

Brigadier-General and Provost-Marshal.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 16, 1861.

Brig. Gen. ANDREW PORTER,

Provost-Marshal, Washington.

SIR: Let John S. Emerson, a prisoner confined in your custody, be released on taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States stipulating that he will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State; and also that he will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. You will please make the stipulations a part of the oath.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,

Assistant Secretary.

I, John S. Emerson, late of Memphis, Tenn., solemnly swear on the Holy Evangelists of Almighty God without any mental reservation that I will at any and all times hereafter and under all circumstances yield a hearty and willing support to the Constitution of the United States and to the Government thereof; that I will not either directly or indirectly take up arms against the Government or aid those now in arms against it; that I will neither enter any of the States now in insurrection against the authority of the Federal Government nor hold any correspondence whatsoever with them or any persons in them during the present rebellion without permission from the Secretary of State; that I will do no act hostile or injurious to the Union of the States; that I will give no aid, comfort or assistance to the enemies of the Government either foreign or domestic; that I will defend the flag of the United States and the armies fighting under it from insult and injury if in my power so to do and that I will in all things deport myself as a good and loyal citizen of the United States.

JOHN S. EMERSON, JR.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 17th day of October, 1861.

THOMAS C. DONN,

Justice of the Peace for Washington County, D. C.

Case of Edward Seymour Ruggles.

June 24, 1861, Edward S. Ruggles arrived at New York on the steamer Ariel from Aspinwall and was ordered to be arrested on suspicion of treason. Amos B. Corwine, U. S. consul at Panama, by letter dated June 14, 1861, and Daniel A. Robinson, jr., U. S. consul at Aspinwall, by letter dated June 15, 1861, denounced Ruggles as an agent of the rebels in their service on the Isthmus seeking information in regard to the shipments of treasure from California and the measures if any adopted to protect it and bearing dispatches to General [A. S.] Johnston and other military officers. After his arrest a letter was found in Ruggles' possession from his father Daniel Ruggles, late a captain in the U. S. Army, now a general in the rebel service, showing that the prisoner had been at Montgomery in March and April, 1861, seeking an appointment in the marine service of the rebels; also a draft of an application for such appointment in his own handwriting. He also wrote and endeavored privately to send a letter to W. Preston Johnston, a known rebel at Louisville, Ky., speaking of his case as bad and urging that measures be taken to exchange him. On his examination Ruggles stated that his only mission to the Isthmus was to deliver a letter to the consul at Panama for General A. Sidney Johnston. On the 15th of July R. W. Shufeldt, U. S. consul-general at Havana, wrote to the Department of State stating that in May preceding Ruggles called on him with a letter of introduction from J. P. Benjamin, late Senator from Louisiana, and left with him a letter to General A. Sidney Johnston addressed and sealed by the said J. P. Benjamin; that he was afterward led to suspect that Ruggles was an agent for the rebels, and on seeing a notice of his arrest in a New York paper he opened the letter so left in his charge and now incloses it to the State Department. The letter so transmitted proved to be from William Preston Johnston to his father General A. Sidney Johnston, dated Louisville, April 26, 1861. The writer informed his father that he had just been to Montgomery and had had an interview with the President and Secretary of War of the rebel Government and had become satisfied that his father would be second only to President Davis in rebel consideration and position. He urged his father to avoid all Northern ports and endeavor to get into New Orleans, and not to trust himself in the hands of a "perfidious and merciless enemy." He informs him that he himself will probably be a major or lieutenant-colonel of volunteers in Kentucky, where he is raising men. From the evidence in the case it appears that Edward

S. Ruggles was at Montgomery in March and April, 1861, soliciting employment in the marine service of the insurgent Government; that in May following he was sent to Havana and the Isthmus of Panama to convey dispatches to General Johnston and other military officers to persuade them to enter the rebel service and to warn them against entering any port in the loyal States, and also to acquire information in relation to the shipments of treasure from California across the Isthmus and the provision if any for its protection; and that he executed this mission. The said Ruggles remained in custody at Fort Warren February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

PRIVATE.] CONSULATE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Panama, June 14, 1861.
Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State, Washington.

RESPECTED SIR: I have the honor to advise that a person styling himself Edward S. Ruggles and a midshipman in the naval service of the United States presented himself at my consulate about a week since and deposited two letters with the following superscriptions upon them with the request that I should retain them until called for by the parties to whom they are addressed, viz: "General A. Sidney Johnston, Panama, Isthmus of Panama," and "Lieut. E. P. Alexander, U. S. P[ioneers], probably in charge of company of sappers and miners enroute from San Francisco, at Havana or Aspinwall; maybe without his company." The first he said was from the wife of General Johnston, who was exceedingly anxious that her husband should receive it when he passed through this place en route for the United States. It appears that young Ruggles (he is a lad about eighteen years old) reached Aspinwall via Havana and Saint Thomas.

This fact and some expressions which he inadvertently made led to the suspicion that he was an emissary from the usurped Government of Montgomery sent to this Isthmus either to make overtures to the officers of the U. S. Army and Navy on the Pacific who were known to have resigned and were supposed to sympathize with the rebels, or else for the purpose of ascertaining what measures if any had been adopted to protect the treasure from California against seizure. He probably had both objects in view. At any rate the inquiries he made of a forward officer of the U. S. ship Saranac as to how long it would require to land a force from that vessel and dispatch it to Aspinwall in case of an emergency would seem to confirm the suspicion that one of the objects of his visit to this Isthmus was to procure information with regard to the movements of specie in transit from California to New York.

I made every effort to ascertain from him the object and nature of his visit without success. He prevaricated so much that it was impossible to elicit from him the truth. On referring to the Navy Register I found that he was among the officers who had resigned, and upon my calling his attention to the fact he said that he had tendered his resignation but that the Secretary of the Navy had refused to accept it on account of his father's strong Union proclivities. I afterwards learned that his father at last accounts was in command of the rebel forces at Petersburg or Fredericksburg, Va.

Finding that I could get no satisfactory or truthful statement from him but still suspecting that he was in the interest of the so-called Confederate States I suggested to Capt. Robert Ritchie, commanding the U. S. steamer Saranac, that he order the young man on board his ship, as he claimed to belong to the Navy, which that officer accordingly did when the fact was disclosed by the production of a letter from the Secretary of the Navy which he had about his person that his resignation had been accepted. He was then permitted to return on shore and the next day (10th instant) he proceeded to Aspinwall whence he sails for New York to-morrow as I learn from our consul at that port on board the steamship Ariel.

Since the departure for Aspinwall of Ruggles I have learned from my brother D. M. Corwine, agent of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company at this place, that General Johnston's wife is now in California, having accompanied her husband to that State some months since via Panama, consequently the letter left at this consulate to the address of that officer could not have been written by that lady as alleged by Ruggles. Mr. Robinson, the consul at Aspinwall, informs me that he has taken measures to have him arrested immediately upon the arrival of the Ariel at New York as he thinks with me that Ruggles is a secret agent of the rebellious States and that his arrest in the United States may lead to the establishment of the fact.

There can be no doubt of the intentions of the rebels to seize the treasure from California and it is not unlikely that they will attempt it should a favorable opportunity offer outside the harbor of Aspinwall. This they could do with impunity as there is no armed vessel of the United States at that port at present except the store-ship Fal-mouth which is dismantled and unfit in her present condition for sea service. There are now in Aspinwall two gun-boats, English and French, but it is questionable whether they would render any assistance in case of our steamers being attacked by privateers since Great Britain is understood to have declared its purpose to recognize the rebellious States as belligerents entitled to all the rights of war. I respectfully suggest therefore that a vessel of war be dispatched to Aspinwall with as little delay as possible. A steam vessel would be much more effective than a sailing vessel.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

AMOS B. CORWINE.

CONSULATE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Aspinwall, New Granada, June 15, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: I think it a matter of duty to inform the Department of the following facts: On or about the 7th instant a young gentleman entered this consulate and introduced himself as Mr. Ruggles, a midshipman in the U. S. Navy. He told me that he had been ordered to join the U. S. transport steamer Morgan at this port; that the Morgan was originally the Star of the West; that after her seizure by the rebels her name was changed to Sumter; that she was recaptured by the Crusader in the latter part of April and taken to Havana, Cuba, and her name was then changed to Morgan and had sailed from Havana for this port on the 5th of May; that she was to meet here General A. S. Johnston and his command from California and convey him to the United States; that he (Ruggles) had been ordered to join the Morgan here and for that purpose went to Havana, thence to Saint Thomas and thence to this port by the steamer Solent, of the Royal Mail Packet Company's line, which was certainly a very roundabout way to get here.

In conversation with citizens here Ruggles expressed himself as strongly in favor of secession. He went from here to Panama and there represented himself as a midshipman. Capt. Robert Ritchie, of the Saranac, met him when he told Captain Ritchie that he had been in the Navy but had resigned and produced a letter from the present Secretary of the Navy accepting his resignation. Ruggles made many inquiries from citizens here concerning the U. S. naval force at this port, also the amount of treasure usually carried on the California steamers. He goes to the United States in the steamer of to-day (the Ariel). His stories are not only improbable but to a great extent false. I regard him as a suspicious character, and believe the Government will be fully justified in detaining him and prevent his communicating to the secessionists the information which he has obtained here. The U. S. brig-of-war Bainbridge which I observe has been ordered here has not yet arrived. She is now twenty-five days out from Boston.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

DANL. A. ROBINSON, JR.,

U. S. Consul.

E. DELAFIELD SMITH, Esq.,

U. S. Attorney for the Southern District of New York.

SIR: I am directed to forward you the accompanying copy of two letters addressed to this Department—one bearing date the 14th instant marked private from Amos B. Corwine, U. S. consul at Panama; the other of the 15th instant from Daniel A. Robinson, jr., U. S. consul at Aspinwall. Both of these communications relate to certain proceedings of Mr. Edward S. Ruggles, late a midshipman in the Navy, which indicate that he may have been in that quarter for treasonable purposes in the service of the insurgents in this country. As he is supposed to be now in New York and may continue his practices the expediency of arresting him for examination and prosecution is submitted for your consideration.

SIR: A young man named Edward S. Ruggles, who was at the U. S. Naval Academy, but who for some cause left the service shortly before or after the 4th of March last, was recently at Panama and Aspinwall, at both of which places his conduct excited the suspicions of our consuls. They were induced to believe him to be an agent of the insurgents in this country sent thither to communicate with General Johnston, recently in command of U. S. forces on the Pacific coast. These suspicions having been made known to the police of New York Ruggles was arrested there a few days since on his return from Aspinwall and is now held in custody. Inclosed is a copy of a letter† of the 25th instant [ultimo?] addressed by Ruggles to William Preston Johnston, Louisville. I will thank you to inform me who Mr. Johnston is and of any particulars concerning him which would enable me to determine the nature of his connection with Ruggles.

cept him on his return and warn him to avoid a Northern port. Your friendly advice is solicited for him on this mission. I saw Governor Magoffin to-day (I arrived last night) and he told me of his reply communicated to you by messenger. He is satisfied that any precipitate action on the part of our friends will react and damage us. The State is unarmed with a border of 700 miles exposed to a furious foe. That such is the case is the fault neither of the governor or of our party but of those false leaders and imbeciles who preferred party advantage to the safety of our Commonwealth. Our military organizations are being perfected but we are badly armed, and I regret to say that other companies are being enrolled hostile to the South and I fear equipped with Federal gold. The governor is trying, however, to intrust our State arms only with the loyal men. The Journal and Democrat are Lincoln papers. The sentiment of the Southern States' rights men is opposed to taking action until Kentucky is armed and organized. I cannot say that my judgment disapproves of this however my heart may point. An unarmed people is a mob. Trust a little to time and be not distrustful of men who have so much at stake as the Kentucky patriots. Four hundred men left here yesterday for Virginia. I learn from Col. John S. Williams (known as Cerro Gordo Williams), lately a citizen of Southern Illinois, that he has been compelled to abandon his large estate there and that Kentuckians are no longer safe there. He has come home to excite our people to war.

The Saint Louis Arsenal has in it about 1,800 regulars, and some 8,000 Germans are armed and equipped in its immediate vicinity. Colonel Stenart (late paymaster) is the authority for this. He also informs us that Cairo has a strong body of troops stationed there who compel all boats to round-to. The roads to Saint Louis are in the hands of the Illinois (Lincoln) volunteers. In consequence of this Major Clark remains here. We hope to have his assistance in organizing our artillery and ordnance here. In Nashville he was waited on by citizens for the same purpose. Tennessee will secede immediately. If I can be of service to the cause of Southern rights you can command,

Yours, with very great respect,

WILLIAM PRESTON JOHNSTON.

Hon. L. P. WALKER, Secretary of War, Confederate States.

SIR: On or about the 1st instant according to current advices my son Edward S. Ruggles returning from California by a public steamer was treacherously pursued and on his arrival in New York arrested and detained under the instructions of Mr. William H. Seward, the Secretary of State of the Federal Government, and has been since then held in duress and cut off from all communication with his friends. My son is a youth of seventeen, of excellent repute, not in public employment and under the customs of war recognized by civilized nations could not be justly held in duress by any Government claiming to represent a free people realizing the ordinary impulses. As my son was an acting midshipman at the late Naval Academy, on political [grounds] he resigned at the time of his departure for the Southern Confederacy. I respectfully ask that he may be restored to his home and his liberty by an early exchange or by the exercise of such remedial power as the President of the Confederate States may deem just and expedient.

I respectfully request prompt action in behalf of my son with the hope of removing him at an early moment from the baneful influences by which he is surrounded under which his intellectual manhood, moral integrity and refined sense of honor as a mere youth are sensibly endangered.

SIR: In a communication of this date I inclosed a letter of General Wool to myself dated 23d instant in which General W. makes no allusion to Mr. E. S. Ruggles being a prisoner of war. Mr. Ruggles has called and shown me a copy of his parole by which it appears he is released on parole for thirty days unless within that period Capt. Edward Taylor is released. General Wool's letter was forwarded on the permit or passport of the Secretary of State in which he with his usual duplicity alludes to Mr. Ruggles as a citizen of the United States. Mr. Ruggles takes this up.

Cases of Messrs. Hitchcock, Burson and Nettleton.

Thomas Hitchcock was arrested by an officer of General Smith's brigade near the Chain Bridge in Virginia the 3d of July, 1861, and having been sent to Washington was committed by Justice Donn to the District Jail and from thence transferred November 1, 1861, by order of General Porter to the Old Capitol Prison. The charges against Hitchcock were that he had conveyed information to the rebel army; with having been guilty of shooting Federal pickets, and hunting up Union men and causing them to be driven from their homes. The testimony of various persons to the above charges against Hitchcock has been taken and is said to be on file in the office of Justice Donn, of Washington. The said Thomas Hitchcock was released November 25, 1861, by order of Brigadier-General Porter, provost-marshal of Washington, on taking the oath of allegiance.

John W. Burson was arrested in Washington September 11, 1861, and committed by Justice Donn to the District Jail and from thence was transferred November 1, 1861, to the Old Capitol Prison. The charges against Burson were that he was a spy, disloyal to the United States Government and in correspondence with persons in the rebel army. It appears from the evidence taken before Justice Donn that Burson was removed from the Navy Department where he had held a clerkship for his disloyal sentiments, and that he refused to take the oath of allegiance; also that he was writing constantly and in correspondence with the rebels. A number of letters were found upon Burson at the time of his arrest written by one B. F. Lum, formerly of Washington, who joined the rebel army. These letters prove that Burson was regarded by Lum as true to the rebel cause and that a constant communication was kept up between them. The letters and the evidence taken before Justice Donn are it is stated on file in the office of the provost-marshal of Washington. The said John W. Burson remained in custody at the Old Capitol February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.

Alfred Nettleton was arrested in Washington and September 11, 1861, was committed by Justice Donn to the District Jail and from thence was transferred November 1, 1861, by order of Brigadier-General Porter to the Old Capitol Prison. The charges against Nettleton were that he was a spy, disloyal to the United States Government and having aided and assisted one Lum to leave Washington for the purpose of joining the rebel army. It appears from the evidence taken before Justice Donn that Nettleton was removed from the Navy Department where he had been a messenger on account of his disloyal sentiments; that he was associated with one Burson, known to be in correspondence and sympathy with the secessionists and that he had been heard to say, "Damn the Union, the South will whip hell out of us." In a letter written to J. W. Burson dated at Wethersfield, Conn., August 13, 1861, Nettleton says he was glad to hear that the Yankees got defeated at Bull Run; "it would have suited me if every mother's son of them had been left dead on the battle-field;" that he is coming to Washington in the course of three weeks and perhaps may go farther South. The letter above referred to with others and other evidence against Nettleton are said to be on file in the office of the provost-marshal of Washington. The said Alfred Nettleton remained in custody in the Old Capitol Prison February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

Statement of Alfred Nettleton.

WASHINGTON, Monday, October 14, 1861.

I am thirty-nine years old; was born in Middle Haddam, Conn.; have no wife, but two children staying with my father in Hartford County. I was messenger in the Navy Department, Bureau of Construction, last Administration; resigned 20th of April fearing I would be removed and went home to my friends; remained until the fore part of September; returned here and was arrested the 11th of September charged with being in correspondence with the rebels; complaint made by one John Hammond, a huckster in Northern Liberty Market, with whom I had some difficulty but to whom I never spoke as he is a contemptible loafer. I was always a strong Democrat and Hammond claimed to be for Lincoln. I never communicated any information to the rebels and it is the furthest from my intentions. I claim to be a Union man and will take the oath. Have never had an examination; have used every exertion to ascertain before whom I could be brought for an examination.

HDQRS. CITY GUARD, PROVOST-MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., October 15, 1861.

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed I hand you reports in the cases of John S. Emerson,* Alfred Nettleton, John W. Burson and Thomas Hitchcock, now confined in the city jail on suspicion of disloyalty to the Government. Emerson and Hitchcock have been there since about the 2d and 3d of July respectively and Nettleton and Burson since the 11th of September, all being unable to obtain an examination. I submit that they are entitled to an early hearing or more properly a discharge.

From information that I have of the sanitary condition of the place in which they are confined I further deem it my duty to suggest that if it should be thought best to keep them in confinement any longer they should at least be removed to more comfortable and healthy quarters, if there are any such belonging to the Government unoccupied. I was unable to find any papers on record in the cases of Nettleton, Burson and Hitchcock.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. J. ALLEN.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to report that John W. Burson, a U. S. prisoner now confined in the city jail here, makes the following statement to an operative of mine detailed to examine him in prison. He states that he was born near Middleburg, Va.; that he is twenty-seven years of age; that he was lately a clerk in the Interior Department; that previous to getting the situation he resided at Belmont, Belmont County, Ohio; that he was in company with Mr. Nettleton and was arrested at the same time, September 11; that he has never been able to ascertain what the charge was against him; that he has never had an examination or been able to obtain one, and that he is a Union man and is perfectly willing to take the oath of allegiance.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

HDQRS. CITY GUARD, PROVOST-MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., October 21, 1861.

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to report that on the 15th of the present month I made and submitted to you a report in the case of Thomas Hitchcock, a political prisoner then and now confined in the city jail; that since the making of said report and in obedience to an order of yourself to me to execute an order of the Secretary of State dated October 16, 1861, and addressed to you I proceeded to the city jail of Washington, D. C., for the purpose of having said Hitchcock released from custody upon his taking the oath of allegiance; that upon arriving at said jail I was informed by the keeper of the jail, Mr. Wise, that according to his understanding of the evidence against Hitchcock there was good ground for holding him in custody still; that I went to the office of Justice Thomas C. Donn, the committing magistrate, and there found such evidence against Hitchcock as convinced me that he should not be discharged until I had further reported on the case to you. Accordingly I took the responsibility of leaving him still in the city jail. The following is a copy of a letter addressed to you by Justice Donn which, with the accompanying evidence, the substance of which I herewith embody, I received from said magistrate:

WASHINGTON, October 19, 1861.

Brigadier-General PORTER:

SIR: Inclosed you will find the testimony taken by me in the case of Hitchcock. There could have been other testimony adduced as I was then informed, but the country being in possession of the enemy where the scene was enacted and the man who was shot having left the Army and gone home, taking said testimony with the attending circumstances and his general character as detailed to me by others caused me to make a report to Brigadier-General Mansfield and subsequently to Colonel Hamilton that I thought he was a dangerous man and recommended his imprisonment. You can judge from the testimony whether his punishment has been sufficient or not.

Respectfully,

THOMAS C. DONN,
Justice of the Peace for Washington County, D. C.

William H. Sherman (citizen) swears that up to the time of the vote when Virginia seceded from the Union he had always believed Hitchcock to be a Union man, but that at that election he voted for secession and has been a secessionist ever since.

Lieut. William McLean, Second U. S. Cavalry, swears that he knows Hitchcock; that he was arrested charged with carrying information to the enemy; with shooting pickets and hunting up Union men and causing them to be driven from their homes. There was a rumor at the time of Hitchcock's arrest that a man named Walker was driven from home on account of his Union feeling, and as deponent was informed Hitchcock was looking for Walker with a gun in his hands and that another man was seen in his company, and that in consequence Walker had to flee to the pines for protection and shelter and that Hitchcock and his nephew were, as he (Lieutenant McLean) was informed, the principal parties; that he was ordered to arrest Hitchcock and did so, and that Hitchcock thereupon denied having a gun on that day.

Taylor Sorrell (citizen) swears that Hitchcock came with another man to his father's house [and] the other man had a double-barreled gun. They inquired for Walker (who had been driven away by the disunionists); they made particular inquiry after him. "The report is general," swears Sorrell, "that Hitchcock is running about hunting up Union men." Sorrell swears further that he saw Hitchcock on the day of his arrest with a double-barreled gun in his hands.

William H. Patton swears that he was guide for the Union pickets at night when Captain Sorrell, of Maine, commanded; that he took a man with him and waited until 12 o'clock at night. They were lying near the fence and watching after persons whom they saw. Heard a rumbling noise, told his companion to lie still but instead of doing as directed he raised up by the fence and was shot through the hand. Both of them (Patton and companion) retired about 100 yards into the orchard. Patton then placed the wounded man under a haycock. In thirty minutes after five men came along. They passed without being hailed by Patton. In one hour after they passed Hitchcock came along when Patton halted him and he gave his name. This was about 2 a. m. Hitchcock said he was going to market. Patton permitted him to pass. Shortly afterward Patton went to the fence bars and was fired at from the direction in which Hitchcock had gone and from the same direction which the ball came which wounded his companion. Patton then retreated back and took another position away from the haycock where he and his companion had been seen by Hitchcock. In about half an hour after changing positions Hitchcock came along and commenced punching the haycock apparently looking for Patton and his companion. Not finding them he (Hitchcock) after having tossed the hay about returned to the bars where he had a horse and wagon and where he remained talking with some persons for ten or fifteen minutes. He then retired and in half an hour afterward Patton went toward the bars when a man snapped a gun at him. Patton went toward the man when he ran, at which time the man was fired upon by one of our pickets. Three days after Patton was out with thirty cavalry when young Sorrell told him that he had seen Hitchcock with a double-barreled gun. They then found and arrested Hitchcock, but at that time he had no gun and denied having had one but appeared a good deal flurried.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Your obedient servant,

E. J. ALLEN.

HDQRS. CITY GUARD, PROVOST-MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., October 21, 1861.

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to report that on the 15th instant I made and submitted to you a report in each of the cases of Alfred Nettleton and John W. Burson, both political prisoners then and now confined in the city jail. That since the making of said reports and in obedience to an order of yourself to me to execute two orders of the Secretary of State both dated October 16, 1861, and each addressed to you I went to the city jail on the 18th instant for the purpose of having John W. Burson and Alfred Nettleton released from custody upon their taking the oath of allegiance. That upon arriving at the said jail I was admitted to an audience with the prisoners aforesaid whom I showed the form of oath to which they would be required to subscribe before being discharged. They both expressed themselves willing to take the oath, and they went with me to Justice Donn's, the magistrate who had committed them, for the purpose of doing so. On arriving at Justice Donn's office I learned that Burson and Nettleton had been committed to jail upon testimony which in my judgment was sufficient to justify their being held in custody until I could make a further report on their cases to you. Accordingly I took the responsibility of returning them both to the city jail and into the charge of the jailer. The following is a copy of a letter directed to you from Justice Donn, the original of which is on file in my office:

WASHINGTON, October 18, 1861.

Brigadier-General PORTER, Provost-Marshal.

SIR: The following is the testimony sent me by the chairman of the House investigating committee, Hon. John F. Potter:

Oath of John Hammond.—I reside in this city. I know one A. Nettleton. He was formerly a messenger in the Navy Department and was removed for his disloyal sentiments. After his removal he was engaged in this city in persuading men to go into the rebel army. I know this. He induced one Benjamin Lum to go into the rebel army. I saw him take Lum into his buggy and drive to the steam-boat wharf. Lum went on board and is now in the rebel army. Burson who now resides at Dorsey's Hotel in this city, corner of I and Seventh streets, receives letters from Lum. Burson was an intimate friend of Lum and has told me what Lum has written him. He said he (Lum) had written him when Jeff. Davis would be in Washington. Burson is writing all the time and I have no doubt but that he keeps up a constant correspondence with the rebels. Nettleton has been absent from this city for two or three months and Burson told me that he was at Richmond with Lum. He has recently returned here and is now with Burson at Dorsey's Hotel where I saw him.

I have summoned Hammond before me to testify in their cases. I also have summoned a man named James Cannon and shall take their testimony and forward it to you.

Respectfully,

THOS. C. DONN,
Justice of the Peace.

The following is the substance of an affidavit made October 18 before Justice Donn: John Hammond swears that he knows both Burson and Nettleton; knows them to be disloyal to the Government; has heard Nettleton say he would not live under the present Government; knows that he carried Ben Lum to the steam-boat wharf to send him South, and that Nettleton has said he was going South; has heard Lum say he was a secessionist and was going South; heard Burson say ten days before the raising of a rebel flag in Connecticut that it would be raised, and it was raised in accordance with his prediction. Burson also said that Nettleton was at Harper's Ferry; knew that Burson refused to take the oath of allegiance when in office.

The following is the substance of an affidavit made by James Cannon October 18, 1861, before Justice Donn: He swears that he knows both Nettleton and Burson from their conversation and conduct to be secessionists; heard Burson say that Davis would be here and would have been ere this if he could have got over the dead bodies at Bull Run; heard Burson say that within three weeks a secession flag would be raised in Connecticut and it was raised in accordance with his declaration; he said that Lincoln's effigy would be burned there; has heard Nettleton say, "Damn the Union; the South will whip hell out of us."

Jim Green, another witness sworn before Justice Donn, October 18, 1861, states in substance that he knows Nettleton and Burson; has heard Nettleton say that though Northern born he had Southern principles.

T. W. Dorsey swears in substance that he knows Nettleton, Burson and Lum, the latter of whom had gone South and said to be in the Southern Army; knows that Nettleton took Lum to steam-boat wharf when he started South. Burson boarded with Dorsey and Dorsey knows that Burson corresponded with Lum while the latter was in the Southern Army. Burson became alarmed when Dorsey told him that he must stop the correspondence. Burson was clerk in the Navy Department and was turned out because he refused to take the oath of allegiance.

There are two letters on file in my office obtained from Justice Donn which were written at Hartford, Conn., by Nettleton dated respectively May 26 and 30, 1861. In the former he says that he is out of money and that he hardly knows what to do to pay expenses; that he would be glad to have the money sent to him to aid him in getting back to Washington; that he would enlist in the army but does not like to fight against the South. Sends his best respects to Ham Hughes and requests that he be advised to "blow out his light," an expression which acquires significance from being repeated in the second letter verbatim, and in close connection with his stating he will not return to Washington under five weeks as he intends going to Richmond and will stop about a week in Washington. Both these letters are addressed to a lady in Washington whom he calls "Dearest Laura." One of my operatives learned that this "Dearest Laura" was a notorious courtesan residing in Washington.

A package of several letters was found at the room of John W. Burson at the time of his arrest which was handed by Justice Donn to one of my operatives on the 18th instant, a brief of which letters is herewith submitted, the originals being on file in my office.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Your obedient servant,

E. J. ALLEN.

Brief of the letters found in the room of John W. Burson at the time of his arrest.

One letter dated Montgomery, Ala., April 17, 1861, addressed to John W. Burson and signed by B. F. Lum.

No. 1.—Lum acknowledges the receipt of Burson's letter of April 10. Says that he (Lum) is out of money and wishes Burson to send him some. Says things look fine since the fall of Sumter and that the excitement has died away. He tells Burson to expect lively times soon in Florida. Tells Burson he must hold on to his place and keep still about politics. (Burson was clerk in the Interior Department under Mr. Buchanan.) Lum urges as a reason why Burson should "hold on and keep still," that "ere many days you will have Jeff. Davis to preside over your welfare; you may bet your life." He says, "Old Abe has but very few days to remain in Washington, and I expect to be there to help drive him and many of his followers from every foot of sacred soil [which] belongs to the South; you may expect to see that before very long, and that will be glory enough for me." "You may say to Goodenough that he and a good many others will not be excepted." (This Goodenough appears to have been a Union man who was boarding at the same house with Burson, Emerson and Lum while they were all in Washington, and he (Goodenough) is referred to in one of Nettleton's letters as being a man standing very much in the way of their treasonable designs.) Lum says they are hourly expecting to hear of the ordinance of secession from Virginia, and that when that takes place there will be 100 guns fired in her honor for the example she sets to other border States. He says, "Tell Uncle Pres. that he is mistaken in supposing that any other element exists at the South besides that of secession." He says all lines are abolished in favor of the single idea of Southern rights; that every man is ready at a moment's warning to shoulder his musket in defense of Southern rights and Southern honor; that he expects Maryland will be all right; that General Pillow is at Montgomery offering 5,000 troops to the Confederacy, and that he can raise 20,000 in Tennessee. He closes by sending his respects to Nettleton.

No. 2.—Dated Montgomery, Ala., April 8, 1861, addressed to John W. Burson and signed by B. F. Lum. In this Lum strongly solicits Burson and Nettleton to send him money to keep him along till he can get good employ. Wishes that Burson could only be there to see the military display. He tells Burson he will tell him facts which he must keep profoundly secret; then goes on to say that as soon as any attack is made on the South President Davis will march on Washington with a large army of men; gives Burson the strongest assurances of the Southern movement on Washington. He says it is not known to many persons, and he found it out through the Department. He closes by urging Burson to write him and tell all about Washington and what is going on there.

No. 3.—Dated Montgomery, Ala., April 29, 1861, signed by B. F. Lum and addressed to John W. Burson. Lum is very sorry to inform Burson that all his efforts to get a situation have failed; that all his ——— is spent, and that no chance will open a place for him until the volunteers leave for Virginia for there are two candidates for every vacancy; that he has about concluded to enlist in a rifle regiment; he is about as well satisfied with this as with any other position because he wants the pleasure of driving the "Goths and Vandals" from Washington; tells Burson he may rest assured in this being done ere long, and that when he (Burson) sees them he will acknowledge that they far exceed any military company in the metropolis; says he has a list of names down on his book for special attention when he gets to Washington; wants Burson and all his friends to be ready to receive the Alabama chivalry and patriotism; hopes to meet some of the wide-awakes; hopes T. W. Dorsey will not let them pass without some marks of respect and gratitude. (This Dorsey is keeper of the house where Burson, Nettleton and Lum were boarding in Washington on Seventh between I and K streets.) Says that Republicanism has come to the very end that he had always expected; tells Burson that he was badly treated by them in Washington and he intends revenge; wants to meet his old friends in Washington and see how they will look in the face of an extreme Southern army; promises Burson to drop him a line as soon as he reaches Virginia.

No. 4.—Dated Montgomery, Ala., May 1, 1861. B. F. Lum to John W. Burson. He says after writing the letter of April 29 he has changed his plan and will not start as soon for Virginia as he had before expected; says Burson must tell the boys "that we are coming to help them fight the battles of our good cause." Says tell T. W. Dorsey not to be dismayed; that he will get something good from Jeff Davis; says he will make it part of his business to see that the Southern troops do Dorsey and his property no serious damage.

No. 5.—Dated May 27, 1861. B. F. Lum to John W. Burson. Tells Burson that he is coming to see him once more. He will start to Virginia on Monday morning if God spares his life; says that on reaching Virginia he will write a note to Burson to let him know how he (Lum) likes army life; if he can get a furlough he is coming from Virginia to Washington; that he is to be a second lieutenant in a rifle company. The foregoing was postmarked at Montgomery, Ala.

No. 6.—Dated Hartford, Conn., August 27, 1861. From A. Nettleton to John W. Burson. He acknowledges receipt of Burson's letter of the 20th instant, for which he tenders him thanks; was sorry to hear of Norris' death for "he was one of us," and could be illy spared; is sorry to hear that other friends were wounded in the Bull Run battle and were taken prisoners, and hopes they may yet live to have sweet revenge for all that they have suffered; is glad to hear that Dorsey is coming to his senses, and hopes that hereafter Dorsey will see facts as they exist, and that his mind hereafter will be less changeable. He says that the action of the Administration for the last few weeks convinces him, as he has always said, that this war was one of subjugation and not restoration of the Union; that the subjugation was to abolish slavery, and this was the only object, which nobody can deny; and scoffs at the idea of this being a republican Government, and says that no crowned head in Europe would have dared to do what Lincoln had for he would lose his head in forty-eight hours; says Lincoln has committed acts that would damn him to hell; says his (Lincoln's) party will sustain him and they intend to lay aside all civil and institute military law; says that the Bridgeport (Conn.) Farmer was attacked by a mob of 500 and entirely demolished, all because it favored the rights of the South, and for favoring the close of this war by a fair and honorable compromise; says that in expectation of an attack upon the office of the Hartford Times there had been stationed in the building [men] determined to defend it while life lasted, and determined to sacrifice the three Republican offices if that of the Times was destroyed; says Burson tells him in his letter that B. F. Lum was in the battle of Bull Run, and he (Nettleton) expresses the hope that Lum enjoyed the satisfaction of knowing himself to be a good shot and that he "bagged some of the game." Sends his kindest regards to his friend Marriott, and tell him the damned abolitionists are too hard for him here. Closes in a postscript saying that he will be in Washington before long, but asks Burson not to let anybody know about it.

No. 7.—Dated Wethersfield, Conn., August 9, 1861. A. Nettleton to J. W. Burson, Thomas Dorsey, of Dorsey's Hotel, corner Seventh and I streets. Inquires if Burson is in Washington, and if not what is his address; inquires also for the post-office address of Benjamin Dorsey and James Morris; also to know where Doctor Snowden is; says if the hard times go on much longer laboring classes will revolt; inquires if Dorsey has heard of Lum lately.

No. 8.—Dated Wethersfield, Conn., August 13, 1861. A. Nettleton to John W. Burson. Acknowledges Burson's letter of the 10th; says he has done but little for three months except to drink whisky; says he was glad to hear that the "damned sons of bitches of Yankees got defeated at Bull Run." Says, "It would have suited me if every mother's son of them had been left dead on the battle-field." Thinks the Yankees as a general thing are a poor, worthless set of devils, of no use to themselves nor anybody else, and that they are worth 3 cents a pound more dead than alive; that at Bull Run they got what they justly deserved but not as much as he wished they had. Nettleton says he is coming to Washington in the course of three weeks and perhaps may go farther South.

The following is a paper found among Burson's letters and written in Burson's handwriting:

WASHINGTON, September 5, 1861.

MR. JOHN W. BURSON.

DEAR SIR: You will please call at my headquarters. I wish to see you and employ you as a guide to go with me through to Fairfax as a guide and on to the Junction.

Respectfully, yours,

MCCLELLAN,
General, Commanding.

No. 9.—A note dated August 3, 1861, signed by John W. Burson and addressed to Hon. Simon Cameron, Secretary of War, states that he has heard the friends of the late Colonel Cameron are anxious to obtain his remains and offers his services to obtain the same.

No. 10.—This is an anonymous letter written in pencil addressed without date to John W. Burson. The writer states that he is about to communicate information to Burson of the greatest importance to the South and that he knows Burson's sympathies to be all with the South. He then goes on to say that he feels a hearty conviction of duty to forewarn the South of their impending danger, and that he selects Burson because he knows the latter carries in his bosom a Southern heart whose sympathies are wholly identified with them. Says the writer:

Besides I have written to other gentlemen who have not received my letters or have deemed them unworthy of notice. I wrote a letter to Governor Wise last fall prior to the invasion by John Brown, which he heeded not. More latterly I wrote one to Governor Floyd stating that there was a plot on foot in the Northwest to invade the South in case of Lincoln's election to whip them into subjection and free the slaves. Mr. Floyd has not received my letter or he has deemed it unworthy of notice. This information I now communicate to you hoping that you will place it in the hands of some Southern gentleman of influence who will exhort the South, especially Virginia, to prepare for the worst, for I call upon high heaven to witness what I have stated is true. I have traveled over the greater portions of Illinois and Ohio and heard it intimated a thousand times. A short time since in Ashtabula County, Ohio, at a political meeting resolutions were adopted to invade the State of Virginia between now and the 4th of March or about that time.

On a part of the same sheet is a note written and signed by J. W. Burson addressed to Miss Parsons apologizing for an insulting remark made about her as she was passing by where Burson and another gentleman stood. This note is dated "Washington, D. C., Wednesday morn, 31."

Case of Richard Thomas (Zarvona).

This person, who was indicted by the name of Richard Thomas but who signs his name as Zarvona, was arrested early in July, 1861, and imprisoned at Fort McHenry from whence he was afterward removed to Fort Lafayette. He was charged with piracy and with being a spy. He was afterward indicted in the U. S. district court for the district of Maryland for treason in committing the act of piracy alleged against him, namely, the surprise and capture of the steam-boat Saint Nicholas* by taking passage on board of her disguised in female attire, with a large force or band of Confederates disguised as laborers or mechanics, and after departure on the voyage rising upon the master and crew and taking said vessel by force into their possession and into a portion of the State of Virginia then in rebellion. The evidence upon which the said indictment is founded has not been sent to the State Department. It is not known that the defendant has been arraigned on said indictment. The military authorities at Baltimore have objected to Thomas being exchanged, preferring that he be put on trial for the offenses of piracy and being a spy to treating him as a prisoner of war. The said Thomas remained in custody at Fort Lafayette February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

* The Saint Nicholas was seized June 28, 1861, but no report of the affair can be found in the War Department. But see Naval W. R., Vol. IV, p. 549 et seq.

FORT MCHENRY, MD., July 8, 1861.

The SECRETARY OF WAR:

Four men were arrested this evening on board the Mary Washington, parties to the seizure of the Saint Nicholas. The leader is a colonel in the Virginia volunteers. His commission dates July 1, and bears address to Richard Thomas Zarvona. Richard Thomas is his true name. They were identified by officers and men of the Saint Nicholas who were on board the Mary Washington. The colonel was secreted in a bureau. He was undoubtedly on another mission. He was identified here as a West Point student.

Four men, parties to the seizure of the Saint Nicholas, were arrested on board the Mary Washington this evening. The officers and sailors of the Saint Nicholas on board the Mary Washington identified the prisoners. The leader had a commission as colonel of the Virginia army dated July 1 and signed by Governor Letcher. He was secreted in a bureau when arrested. Captain Williams who arrested him identified him as a West Point student.

SIR: * * * It is my duty to represent to the Government that such prisoners as Marshal Kane* and Colonel Thomas are not entirely safe if they should contemplate the chances of escape. No such suspicions exist as to the first, but the second is a dangerous and desperate man. He is confined in a room within twenty feet of the sallyport with seven others equally desperate and so far as we can judge his companions in the piratical acts in which he was engaged. Four of these were brought in yesterday armed with weapons and ammunition sufficient for six or eight men, and moving when arrested as we suppose for the purpose of joining other parties of the same character of whose organization and purposes we have had notice from the Government at Washington, the owners of steam-boats and many private sources. With the measures we are taking the arrests of these persons will be rapidly multiplied.

GENERAL: * * * Two of these prisoners are confined for piracy. One is the celebrated Thomas or Colonel Zarvona, commonly known as the French lady. He is of one of the first families in Maryland; is rich, intelligent and resolute. His nervous system is much broken by confinement and want of active occupation and he has made earnest appeals to me for the privilege of walking about the garrison within the walls on his parole of honor not to attempt to escape. There is no doubt it would be sacredly respected. I have not thought proper to extend the indulgence to him, though I think his health requires it, without your direction. * * *

WILLIAM MEADE ADDISON, U. S. District Attorney.

SIR: We have several witnesses detained in the case of Thomas. What is the extent of our control over them? Are they entitled to pay while detained? They are restive and were disorderly and Colonel Morris in consequence put them in a cell by night and on fatigue duty by day. They are sailors and are not very well contented on dry land. If they are entitled to pay how can they get it? Some of them have families, and as they are deprived by their detention of the power of earning anything they think the Government should pay them so that their wives and children may not suffer.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General, Commanding.

Col. Thomas Zarvona, confined at Baltimore as a political prisoner, was an officer in the Confederate service when captured. If evidences of this fact are needed they will be produced. His exchange for an equivalent is asked.

SIR: There are six sailors in custody at Fort McHenry detained as witnesses in the case of Thomas alias Colonel Zarvona alias the French lady, who is indicted for piracy. These men have now been in custody for several months. Their clothes are worn out. Some of them have wives and children without the means of support. They are entitled to a per diem allowance during their detention, and the U. S. district judge would have ordered it to be paid to them if they had been in the custody of the court. Will you please to give the necessary direction for the relief of these men who are detained by the Government for its own benefit and who ought at least to receive the allowance to which they are entitled by law.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GENERAL: I have the honor to inclose herewith a memorandum* which has been submitted to me by Mr. Schleiden, the minister from Belgium, relative to John Henry Bargfried who is supposed to be in confinement at Fort McHenry. Will you please ascertain whether his testimony against Colonel Thomas is material. If it is I will thank you to see that he is provided with necessary clothing and that his confinement is made as comfortable as is consistent with his safe-keeping. If on the contrary you should come to the conclusion that his testimony is immaterial or unnecessary you may release him.

I have the honor to be, general, your obedient servant,

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a copy of a letter* of the 22d ultimo addressed by me to the Secretary of War in relation to the six sailors at Fort McHenry detained as witnesses in the case of Colonel (Zarvona) Thomas. John Henry Bargfried, referred to in your letter of the 2d instant, is one of these six persons. At my request Colonel Morris, commanding at Fort McHenry, has examined the case and makes the following report:

The within-named John Henry Bargfried is an important witness in the case of Colonel Thomas alias Zarvona. He together with the other witnesses in the same case was for a length of time after his reception at this post allowed the liberty of the public grounds and lodged and fed as comfortably as the men of the garrison. He made his escape from the post and proceeded to Baltimore where he was arrested by the police and brought back, since which he has been more closely confined but only with such restrictions as are necessary to prevent his escape. The food furnished him has been in all respects the same as that provided for the troops, but I respectfully recommend that he be furnished with suitable clothing.

In accordance with the recommendation in my letter to the Secretary of War I trust these men may receive the per diem allowance to which they are entitled as several of them have wives and children. As they are shut up and can earn nothing by their labor they ought to receive the compensation which is allowed them.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General, Commanding.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 11, 1861.

Mr. R. SCHLEIDEN, Minister Resident.

SIR: Referring to your memorandum of the 22d ultimo I have the honor to inform you that I have made inquiries of Major-General Dix concerning John Henry Bargfried and am informed that he is regarded as an important witness in the case of Colonel Thomas (Zarvona) and that after his reception at Fort McHenry he was allowed the liberty of the public grounds and was treated in every respect as the men of the garrison were until he made his escape. Since his re-arrest he has been more closely confined but only to such an extent as is deemed necessary to prevent him from again escaping. I have also to state that General Dix informs me that he has recommended the Secretary of War to allow Mr. Bargfried a per diem for the time he is necessarily held as a witness. This if allowed will be amply sufficient to provide him with any comforts he may need. He has already been provided with clothing.

I am, sir, with high consideration, your most obedient servant,
WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

HONORED SIR: The inclosed letter from a witness confined in Fort McHenry to his wife in this city is of a character to require the immediate attention of the proper authorities. The writer is a seaman, a member of my congregation. He is not accused of crime and yet appears to be treated worse than those who are traitors to our Government. Will you for the sake of his wife and three children who are now suffering for bread and for the sake of our common humanity read this letter and see that inquiry is made into the case?

FORT MCHENRY, November 26, 1861.

MY DEAR WIFE: In my last I informed you that the trial was put back until next April and that I had promise of having something done for us, but as yet nobody has been here and I am at a loss what to do. Dear Ann, knowing that you had trouble enough to contend with I have kept all my own sufferings locked in my own bosom, thinking it would be time enough for you to know all after I had been released, and the hope of having both your and my miseries ended this month has kept me in pretty good spirits although many times I have cursed the hour that brought me to this place of misery.

My dear wife, I now send you a true statement of my treatment since I have been here, and I think if you could manage to get it published in one of the daily papers it could not fail to come before the eyes of some kind person who would have both power and the will to investigate our case and have justice done us, for I do not believe that by the laws of a civilized country innocent men can be imprisoned for months without support for themselves or their families.

On the 8th day of July six of the crew of the different vessels taken by the Confederates on the 28th of June were detained as witnesses against Colonel Thomas under promise of kind treatment and $2 per day. As you know I am one of this unhappy number, and how this promise has been kept I will now state: We arrived here in very destitute condition, having lost nearly everything on our journey from Richmond here. From the outsetting we had to sleep on bare boards, but being warm weather we did not mind it much; and as we expected to be sent to Fort Lafayette we did not apply for anything until the latter part of August when our case was stated to the commanding officer, Colonel Morris. He returned us as answer that he never heard of such a thing as witnesses receiving any pay but that he would see about blankets. At the same time he told us he would have to give us something to do or we would spoil, and true to his word shortly after orders were given for one of us every day to assist in the kitchen. We at first refused, and for our pains we were locked up in dark cells for five days during the day and at night were turned out to sleep in the yard. We were then released, and had to assist in the kitchen for fear of similar treatment.

We have stated our case to General Dix repeatedly, but he says we are under Colonel Morris' charge and he has nothing to do with us. About the last of September one of our number who slept near the door was told by the sergeant of the room (we were kept among the soldiers) not to show himself again in the room because a dog belonging to the fort had dirtied the floor. The man not knowing where to go made his escape out of the fort into the city where he was arrested and brought back and handcuffed. Since then we have been kept in the prisoners' department, which is a stable in not the best condition. Every breath of wind goes right through and no sunshine can get through. After we had been there about a fortnight Colonel Morris gave orders for two of us every week to cook for the outside prisoners consisting of from twenty to forty men. We refused, not caring what would be the result. Since then we have received our rations raw and have to get them cooked ourselves the best way we can.

I would say a great deal more but I think this enough to show that a cell in a city prison would be far preferable to our present condition. I have applied by letter to both of the officers who detained us here, and the marshal of the city has been applied to, so far without success, and I give up all hope of having anything done for us.

We are almost naked, and if it were not for some old clothes that I have received from the soldiers I should have to paint my body and go naked. We have no fire or any blankets, so you may judge what a life we lead. If you could get a lawyer to take your case in hand I think the Government would have to support you. I continue to enjoy good health, and I hope this will find you all well.

I remain, your affectionate husband,

CHARLES WILSON.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have the honor to return papers inclosed to me in relation to Charles Wilson and M. J. Koldenback.* Of the latter we have no knowledge whatever. He has never been confined at Fort McHenry. May he not be at the Old Capitol Prison in Washington? Wilson is one of the witnesses detained by the Government in the case of Thomas alias Zarvona, referred to in my letter to you of December 9 and in my letter to the Secretary of War of the 22d of November last, inclosed in mine to you.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Hon. SECRETARY OF STATE, U. S. A.

SIR: I have been held as a prisoner of state as I have been unofficially informed for five months and a half. My health which for several years has been delicate now causes me great suffering. I request you to release me upon parole. I will offer you guarantees which I believe you will consider sufficient that any obligation which I enter upon will be faithfully kept.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Please excuse me, but necessity compels me to call your attention once more to the case of Charles Wilson, my husband, now in prison to wait the trial of Thomas the rebel. He is witness against him, and has been in prison at Baltimore since July last. The particulars of the case were sent to you some time in November last by Capt. Joseph O'Donoghue, of Company C, Eighty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteers, and I have been patiently waiting ever since for his release. Wilson was a hand on board of the schooner Margaret, of Boston, when taken by Thomas. Please let him come home or please let me know why not. My three children have been sick for some time and two at present lie at the point of death, and myself in a state of destitution, and have I might say no aid at all. It depends on you whether we live or die. For God's sake let my husband come home.

Hon. F. W. SEWARD, Acting Secretary of State.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of the 6th instant relating to the release of Charles Wilson, confined at Fort McHenry as a witness in the case of Zarvona, and have referred it to Colonel Morris, commanding at Fort McHenry, who has made to me the following report:

Wilson is an important witness in the case of Zarvona, and states that he is unable to give security for his appearance. He did not apply himself for his release and supposes that his wife made the application. He is willing to remain here provided some means of support are furnished his family which is in destitute circumstances.

Permit me in this connection to call your attention to my letter of the 9th of December last in which I recommended the payment to all these witnesses of the per diem allowance to which they are entitled that their wives and children might not suffer.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General.

FORT LAFAYETTE, February 3, 1862.

Hon. JAMES A. PEARCE, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I notice in the daily papers that application has been made to authorities of the South for the exchange of Colonel Corcoran, of the Federal Army; also notice his friends are exceedingly anxious to obtain the presence of Colonel Corcoran among them once more. Now in my opinion this object could be soon effected if Colonel Zarvona, of the Confederate Army, at present in confinement at Fort Lafayette, were offered in exchange for Colonel Corcoran, of the Federal Army. Colonel Zarvona has been a prisoner since July last and has been subject to illness during the whole of that time. I would have you to understand that this proposition comes from myself and not from Colonel Zarvona. I respectfully ask you to consider the above, and if you can conscientiously do so aid the cause of humanity by laying the matter before the Secretaries of War and State at Washington.

Your friend and obedient servant,

R. W. RASIN.

SIR: Herewith I have the honor to inclose a letter from William Gitting, who is detained at Fort McHenry, Baltimore, by the Government of the United States as a witness against Colonel Thomas alias Zarvona alias the French lady. There are other persons similarly detained in the same case all of whom are represented to be poor men, and some of them having families that are in a suffering condition. General Dix recommends the payment to all of these witnesses of a per diem allowance to which they are entitled. It seems to me that this recommendation is reasonable and that the payment should be promptly made. I inclose also a letter* from Captain O'Donoghue relative to the case of Charles Wilson, another witness similarly detained. Will you have the kindness to return these inclosures?

Maj. Gen. JOHN A. DIX.

HONORABLE SIR: I respectfully solicit your kind attention after a confinement of seven months, as I am entirely destitute of clothing and other necessities of life. I am held as a witness against Colonel Thomas, of the rebel army, who stands indicted for piracy. I lost a great amount of my clothing when he took possession of the vessel where I was employed, and since being detained in this fort I have not received the least piece of clothing or one cent of money. I pray that you may kindly intercede in my behalf and please let me know whether anything can be done.

FREDERICK BERNAL, Esq., &c.

DEAR SIR: I, the undersigned, most respectfully inform you that on the 8th of July, 1861, I was detained here as a witness against Colonel Thomas (the French lady). I was a seaman on board the schooner Mary Pierce, of Boston, which was captured by Colonel Thomas on the 29th of June in the Chesapeake and made a prize to the Confederates. On my return here in the steamer Mary Washington Colonel Thomas was a passenger in her likewise. He was arrested here and myself and five others were kept as witnesses against him. During all this time, now near seven months, I have not been able to receive any money or clothing although I have often made application for it and I am now in most destitute circumstances. I most humbly beg of you, sir, if it be in your power to interfere for me and if possible get me part of my pay.

* Not inclosed.

I am a British subject, born in Halifax, Nova Scotia. Hoping you will kindly take my case in hand and relieve me from suffering,

I then said I could not mention it to the colonel, but if you could do so I would answer for the colonel. I now say if Colonel Corcoran is the friend I can get the exchange if permitted to go to Richmond. I am as confident as I exist that if there is a man the colonel is that man. I write without his knowledge. Please answer as soon as possible.

Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

SIR: Your letter of the 17th instant asking whether Colonel Thomas alias Zarvona alias the French lady ought to be transferred to the list of prisoners of war is received. I think not. He went in the disguise of a woman on board the steamer Saint Nicholas, running as a passenger vessel between this city and the Potomac, and with the assistance of a number of other persons disguised as mechanics seized the vessel and carried her into Virginia as a prize. He afterward returned to Maryland with a commission as colonel in the service of Virginia and was detected and arrested on the Patuxent River in this State. These transactions took place before I was placed in command here.

It was understood that he was confined on the charge of piracy but he was indicted for treason only. I inclose a copy of the indictment. Major-General Banks never recognized these proceedings. In a letter to the General-in-Chief of the 13th of July he designates the crime of Zarvona as "piracy of the worst form." It appears to me that he should have been treated as a pirate and a spy and that he ought not to be classed with persons captured in open warfare. This course was not taken with him.

He was not indicted for piracy and he has been held under arrest like other prisoners of state. Still I see no propriety in transferring him to the list of prisoners of war.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General.

And that the said Richard Thomas, being an inhabitant of and resident within the United States of America, and under the protection of the laws of the United States of America and owing allegiance and fidelity to the United States of America, not weighing the duty of his said allegiance but wickedly devising and intending the peace and tranquillity of the United States of America to disturb, and by all the means in his power to aid and assist the aforesaid evil-disposed persons and bodies of men so as aforesaid levying war, insurrection and rebellion against the United States of America and being enemies of the United States of America in the prosecution of the said war, insurrection and rebellion against the United States of America, on the said 28th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1861, he the said Richard Thomas with force and arms at the district aforesaid maliciously and traitorously did adhere to and give aid and comfort to the said evil-disposed persons then and there being enemies of the United States of America levying war, insurrection and rebellion against the United States of America.

And that the said Richard Thomas in the prosecution, performance and execution of his, the said Richard Thomas' treason and traitorous adhering aforesaid and to fulfill, perfect and bring the same to effect, he the said Richard Thomas as such traitor as aforesaid during the said war, insurrection and rebellion, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid at the district aforesaid, and within the jurisdiction of this court and of the circuit court of the United States for the fourth circuit in and for the Maryland district, with a great multitude of persons (whose names to the jurors aforesaid are at present unknown) to the number of thirty persons and upward armed and arrayed in a warlike manner—that is to say with guns, pistols, swords, bowie knives and other warlike weapons—being then and there maliciously, unlawfully and traitorously assembled and gathered together did falsely and traitorously join and assemble themselves together against the United States of America, and then and there with force and arms did falsely and traitorously and in a hostile and warlike manner array and dispose themselves against the United States of America.

persons and bodies of men so as aforesaid levying war and exciting insurrection and rebellion against the United States of America contrary to the duty of the allegiance and fidelity of the said Richard Thomas, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided and against the peace, government and dignity of the United States of America.

[Adjt. Gen. L. THOMAS.]

DEAR SIR: I have been informed that Thomas, the French lady imprisoned at Fort Lafayette, has a cipher by which his correspondence with a Mrs. Norris and others in Baltimore passes without suspicion. For instance his quotation of a line of poetry will in some way convey a request for acids, files or anything he may desire and which will be conveyed to him under the case of a breast-pin or something apparently harmless. He is a desperate man and very restless under his confinement, and designs escaping if he can. My informant was lately released from Fort Lafayette, where he seems to have been confined under a misapprehension and where he says he became acquainted with the above fact.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Brig. Gen. L. THOMAS,

Adjutant-General of the Army, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Inclosed you will receive the report of an attempt to escape by a well-known state prisoner from Fort Lafayette. Not the slightest blame in my opinion can be imputed to my officer in command of that post. Unfortunately or fortunately one of the new soldiers instead of one of the old garrison was sent with him to the water closet by the sergeant of the guard. Had it been one of the latter he would have been shot at once. It was a stormy night, tide ebb and the wind blowing out of the harbor; a few minutes more and he must have been drowned, and it was not by any means a night suitable for lowering a boat.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

MARTIN BURKE,

Lieutenant-Colonel Third Artillery.

Lieut. Col. M. BURKE, Third Artillery, U. S. Army,

Fort Hamilton, New York Harbor.

COLONEL: I have the honor to make the following report: At half-past 9 o'clock last night Richard Thomas Zarvona, the French lady, a prisoner in close confinement at this post, informed the sergeant of the guard that he wanted to go to the water closet. The sergeant sent him out attended by a member of the guard; when he had reached the water closet (which is situated on the sea-wall) instead of entering it he jumped overboard and attempted to escape by swimming to the Long Island shore. The guard immediately gave the alarm, when the barge belonging to the post was manned and he was recaptured before he had succeeded in getting but a short distance. To prevent a recurrence of this I have had a police tub placed in his room.

Your course in not recognizing the permits given to Mrs. Thomas to visit her son was perfectly right. I had not been informed of the order issued on the 24th of June nor did it even occur to me that the prisoner in question was the French lady. The paper signed "R." and addressed to "Dear John," supposed to be his cousin, was found in a book belonging to Zarvona. The handwriting I think can be proved to be Zarvona's. MATTAPONY, April 26, 1861.

DEAR JOHN: I expected to leave for Baltimore to-morrow to join some active force, but upon my mentioning the subject to George he told me that he had already determined to go and that it was my imperative duty to remain here as mother is so disabled by the accident which she lately met with. In a word the matter was so presented to me that I who of all my family can be spared with the least loss am left here to sun myself. One argument of George's had some strength—that I could not stand the exposure. Very good; but I am told that something may be done in a week and I could last that long. To avoid the fatigues of a private's life which I admit I am little prepared for I wrote for information as to means necessary to procure a commission on the staff either as engineer or topographical engineer and for recommendations as to my capabilities to an old friend of mine, Col. Henry Washington, of Virginia. I am sure the letter did not reach him. It would not matter now if it had reached him for time is precious. Mother now tells me that as I am so uneasy and if I must go she will write to her brother to come on here with her. If that can be managed perhaps I can be put somewhere so as to be of use. I believe you are willing to help me; is it possible to get either of these,—staff, engineer or topographical corps, armed ship of Maryland or any Southern State, private armed vessel bearing the Confederate flag? If not, anything else? I probably would be better afloat. If Maryland raises no navy will not some one be willing to fit out a small, strong and swift propeller carrying two (or even one) 10 or 11 inch guns mounted upon the patent carriage—boat, guns, ammunition? As for men I believe I can get 150 in one day—seamen who will and can board; and as for working guns I can get a few who know that and the rest will soon learn. In addition to the large guns the men will require revolvers (can get them in the North), cutlasses, knives and about two dozen carbines. If we can arm in this way and the vessel is good, steams fast and draws but little water some damage will be scattered around. If it is possible to communicate please do so. To-day a steamer went down with the Constitution (I suppose) in tow. It was a tantalizing sight for I am confident that a gun-boat as above could have taken both. As the Constitution mounts forty guns and the steamer may have a few small ones this may appear visionary, but here is how it would be done: The gun-boat would steam twice as fast as the tow possibly could. The Constitution does not steam; her sails appeared to be unbent. Certainly her light yards were struck and under other circumstances she could not have acted for there was no wind. Under these circumstances if the gun-boat had ranged ahead bringing the steamer and frigate in range she could have worked her stern gun playing upon the steamer's bow exposed only to return fire from her; then about quick, board, cut tow-line and get out of the way if necessary, leaving the frigate perfectly helpless exposed as long as necessary to the rake of the gun-boat, the latter all safe except from her bow guns for a few minutes; then the gun-boat steaming away and playing upon the frigate with stern gun until beyond range; then lie too and play upon with bow gun as long as her flag was up. That down steam for her, the bow gun always ready in case of deception, bearing in mind to never let the frigate present her broadside which she could not possibly do if the gun-boat is near her and managed with ordinary skill.

Can anything be done? Mother sends love to Cousin May and Chase.

Your affectionate

R.

FORT MONROE, September 29, 1862.

General THOMAS:

* * * In regard to Zarvona please say to the Secretary of War that he is a crack-brained fellow who can do no mischief beyond his individual capacity, mental and physical, which is constitutionally small. I only make the suggestion in case there are no public considerations involved in the question of his release.

JOHN A. DIX,
Major-General.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, Richmond, Va., January 2, 1863.

His Excellency ABRAHAM LINCOLN,
President of the United States.

SIR: On the 17th of April, 1861, the convention of the Commonwealth of Virginia representing the sovereignty of the State passed "An ordinance to repeal the ratification of the Constitution of the United States of America by the State of Virginia, and to resume all the rights and powers granted under said Constitution." In this ordinance it is declared that "the union between the State of Virginia and the other States under the Constitution aforesaid is hereby dissolved, and that the State of Virginia is in the full possession and exercise of all the rights of sovereignty which belong and appertain to a free and independent State." This action of the convention was subsequently ratified by an overwhelming majority of the people of the State, and the Commonwealth was thereafter absolutely separated from the Government of the United States and became to that Government an independent and foreign power. The State subsequently by its solemn acts became a member of the Confederate States of America.

Against this Confederacy the Government of the United States declared war by levying troops to conquer and reduce them to subjection, and has been since waging with unabating fury this unnatural war. The sovereign States of this Confederacy in pursuance of conventions between themselves and the Government of the Confederacy bound themselves to make common cause in this contest, and have since prosecuted the war with all the vigor in their power, and by the help of God will continue to do so until their independence is unconditionally recognized and their ancient boundaries fully and incontestably established.

In the prosecution of this purpose Col. Richard Thomas Zarvona, an officer with others under his command with the authority and by express orders from the executive of this State, planned and executed an expedition by which the steamer Saint Nicholas and other vessels belonging to the marine of the United States were captured and brought as prizes into the waters of this State. In a subsequent expedition undertaken under the same authority, and while bearing on his person a commission from the governor of this State appointing him a colonel of volunteers and with orders of a warlike character, he was arrested by the police on board the steamer Mary Washington on her trip to Baltimore and carried a prisoner to Fort McHenry; from thence he was removed and is now confined at Fort Lafayette as a felon in a dungeon, and subjected to the greatest inhumanity. That he was under these circumstances rightfully a prisoner of war is not denied, and that he might be held as such until exchanged under some cartel for the purpose I do not controvert. He had been known to be in hostility to the Government of the United States, and was liable therefore to be captured wherever found. But he was not in any sense to be regarded as a felon, holding as he did the military commission of the State of Virginia and in the execution of her military and naval orders. If he was regarded in any other light than as a colonel in the service of the State then he was in the language of the Constitution of the United States entitled "to a speedy and a public trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime [shall have] had been committed, which district [shall] should have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation, to be confronted with the witnesses against him, to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense." Notwithstanding this express clause he has now been confined for eighteen months, and not one of the provisions contained in it has been attempted to be complied with.

The only cause that I have seen assigned for his incarceration was announced in a paper printed in the city of Baltimore on the 9th of July, 1861, immediately after his arrest, in which it is stated "that Mr. Richard Thomas and five or six other persons were arrested on board the steamer Mary Washington as she was coming up the bay yesterday. The charge against them we believe to be that they were concerned in the seizure of the Saint Nicholas a few days since. The party were coming up to the city as passengers when they were pointed out by two spies on board the boat, and as she reached the wharf at Fort McHenry the boat rounded to and they were delivered up to the officer in command." If his offense was the seizure of the Saint Nicholas that seizure was accomplished by a justifiable stratagem by naval and military officers of this State in company with Colonel Zarvona, and with a design to carry out a bolder and more daring military and naval enterprise the success of which would have been beyond doubt if Virginia's action had not been thwarted by circumstances beyond her control. When the Saint Nicholas was taken Colonel Zarvona was an officer appointed by and in the service of Virginia, and was in flagrante bello engaged in a hostile act and entitled to be considered if taken as a prisoner of war, and if taken afterward for the offense then committed he could only be so considered and so treated.

Under the cartel for the exchange of prisoners entered into between the Governments of the United States and the Confederate States all prisoners of war were to be exchanged upon certain agreed terms. Why Colonel Zarvona has not been exchanged under this agreement it is for the Government of the United States to explain. Why he has been subjected to indignities that no other prisoners have been compelled to undergo is not for me to consider. It is sufficient for the executive of this State to be apprised of the fact to induce him for the sake of humanity and for the sake of the usages of civilized nations to ask that such severity should not be practiced upon an officer in the service of this State for his obedience to orders emanating from her authority.

It is proper under all the circumstances of this case that I should inform you distinctly of the course I have taken and the policy I intend to pursue.

Independent of the forces which have been contributed by this State to the armies of the Confederate States Virginia has a force of her own operating under the command of Maj. Gen. John B. Floyd, by whom there have been captured 201 prisoners, most of whom have been brought to the city of Richmond for safe custody. From these prisoners I have taken two of the officers belonging to the Fourth Regiment of troops under the usurped government of Virginia, to wit, Capt. Thomas Damron and Lieut. Wilson Damron, and have ordered them to be imprisoned in the penitentiary of this State and to be kept in solitary confinement, and I have further ordered that the following privates, to wit, John W. Howe, Isaac Goble and David V. Auxier, who belonged to the Thirty-ninth Kentucky Regiment, and Samuel Pack, also from Kentucky, and William S. Dils, from Ohio, both of the Fifth Regiment of troops under the usurped government, to be also kept in the penitentiary in solitary confinement, all of them there to remain until Colonel Zarvona is properly exchanged under suitable agreement or discharged and permitted to return to this city.*

Respectfully,

JOHN LETCHER,
Governor of Virginia.

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF PRISONERS,
Washington, January 27, 1863.

Lient. Col. W. H. LUDLOW,

Agent for Exchange of Prisoners, Fort Monroe, Va.

COLONEL: * * * We hold at Fort Lafayette I believe Zarvona alias Mr. Thomas, who attempted to capture a steam-boat at Baltimore, who I understand is a man of note with the rebels and that they hold seven officers in close confinement as hostages for him. I don't know whether this man is for exchange, but I will inquire and let you know. * * *

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. HOFFMAN,
Colonel Third Infantry, Commissary-General of Prisoners.

Resolution adopted by the U. S. Senate January 28, 1863.

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia be instructed to inquire for the purpose of extending such relief as the circumstances may require into the case of Mr. Thomas [Zarvona], of Maryland, now a prisoner of war at Fort Lafayette, who it is represented has been confined in a dungeon of that fortress since June last and is now hopelessly insane by reason of his sufferings.†

WASHINGTON CITY, D. C., February 2, 1863.

Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

SIR: I have the honor to ask whether Zarvona alias Thomas, now in confinement at Fort Lafayette (taken in woman's clothes), is a subject for exchange. I have understood that the State Department of the Government does not propose to prosecute him for an offense against the civil law.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. A. HITCHCOCK,
Maj. Gen. of Vols., Commissioner for Exchange of Prisoners.

* Omitted portion relates to cases of prisoners held in the Albany (N. Y.) penitentiary convicted of robbing the mails.

† Introduced by Mr. Wall and unanimously adopted.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 10, 1863.

Hon. HENRY WILSON,

Chairman Committee on Military Affairs, U. S. Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit in answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 28th of January last the reports of the commanding officer and surgeon at Fort Lafayette, New York Harbor, in relation to the confinement, treatment, health and mental condition of Mr. Thomas, of Maryland.

I also [inclose] the report of the Adjutant-General giving the reasons for subjecting him to close confinement after the 3d of March last.

Very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 10, 1863.

Hon. E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

SIR: In compliance with your instructions I have the honor to report that Col. Richard Thomas alias Richard Thomas Zarvona was captured on board the steamer Mary Washington near Annapolis July 7, 1861, and confined at Fort McHenry, Baltimore, Md. He was recognized as the man who headed a party which captured the steamer Saint Nicholas plying between Baltimore and the Potomac, and was indicted by the grand jury of Maryland district for this offense and for treasonable conduct.

When search was made for him on the Mary Washington he was found dressed in female apparel and concealed in a bureau in one of the state-rooms. General Dix in his report of February 20, 1862, thinks he should have been treated as a "pirate and a spy." There are four witnesses against him as to the first crime who were at Fort McHenry the last of September. The evidence of his being a spy consists in his having been taken in disguise as a female with a commission of colonel in the active volunteer forces of Virginia upon his person at the time.

In consequence of the report made in his case he has not been placed on the list of prisoners of war but is held confined at Fort Lafayette. He was placed in close confinement for trying to make arrangements to escape and while so confined did make a desperate attempt to escape by breaking away from the guard and jumping overboard on the night of April 21, 1862.

Respectfully submitted.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

FORT LAFAYETTE, *New York Harbor, February 2, 1863.*Col. M. BURKE, Commanding, &c., Fort Hamilton.

COLONEL: In obedience to the instructions this day received from you I have the honor to report the following, viz:

Richard Thomas Zarvona was committed to this fort on the 3d day of December, 1861, and was allowed the same privileges as the other prisoners until the 3d day of March, 1862, on which date he was placed in close confinement by order of the Secretary of War dated 28th day of February, 1862; after that date he was not allowed to leave his room except to go to the water closet (which is situated on the sea-wall) in charge of a member of the guard, of which privilege he took advantage on the night of the 30th day of April, 1862, and attempted to escape by jumping overboard and swimming to the Long Island shore. Since that time he has not been out of his room except to see his mother who visited him in October last by permission of the Secretary of War.

The room he is confined in is one of those intended for quarters, twenty-five feet long and fifteen feet wide, with three windows, one of which is closed because it opens upon the court where the other prisoners exercise; the others are open. The room is the same which Senator Wall (with several others) occupied while confined here. He is not allowed communication with any one except the officers of the post and non-commissioned officers of the guard.

He is permitted to supply himself through the commanding officer of the post with anything he may wish in the way of food, in addition to the regular ration which is issued to him, and clothing. He is not permitted the use of paper or books as he has taken advantage of these privileges to communicate with parties outside.

As regards his health I have the honor to transmit herewith the report of Acting Assistant Surg. W. H. Studley who is surgeon of the post.

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. O. WOOD,
First Lieutenant, Ninth Infantry, Commanding Post.

[Sub-inclosure No. 3.]

FORT LAFAYETTE, February 2, 1863.

Col. M. BURKE:

In obedience to your orders I have this day examined Col. Richard Thomas Zarvona, U. S. Army, and find that his health is generally good; according to his own admission that it is better than when he entered the fort.

* See Senate resolution, p. 403.

In reference to his mental condition I find him social and rational, but somewhat eccentric in some of his ideas, and yet no more so than in thousands who may be said to be born with a certain turn of character.

Therefore in my opinion I should deem his peculiarities perfectly consistent with sanity of mind.

Respectfully, yours,

W. H. STUDLEY, M. D.,
Acting Assistant Surgeon, U. S. Army.

Hon. JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL.

SIR: The foregoing list,† names of prisoners captured in Wayne County, Va., and Lawrence County, Ky.; the first mentioned are confined in the penitentiary, held as hostages for prisoners confined by our Government. Captain Damron's letter from Richmond does not state for whom they are held, except the two first mentioned. I am acquainted with most of the persons named in the list and know that they have served as home guards and have been of great service to the Union cause in that vicinity by scouting and watching rebel cavalry and giving information to officers of the regular troops, and they probably can only be exchanged for guerrillas confined by our Government.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

K. V. WHALEY.

PENITENTIARY OF VIRGINIA, Richmond, February 5, 1863.

Hon. G. W. DUNLAP.

SIR: Your petitioners are prisoners of war confined in the penitentiary of this city. We are held as hostages for one Colonel Thomas, who we understand is confined in Baltimore or some other place. We have been prisoners more than three months, one and a half of which has been in this loathsome place where we have suffered extremely. We were brought to this place on the 31st of December last, since which time we have been kept in close confinement. Our rooms are very small and of course not very comfortable. Our diet is the same as the convicts. We were captured by General John B. Floyd, commanding the Virginia State Line, in consequence of which we are deprived of the cartel for the exchange of prisoners between the two Governments. There are seven of us held for the release of one man. We should think our Government ought to make the exchange without hesitation. It would certainly be to their advantage to get seven men in place of one. There are four officers among us and very gallant ones, too, at that, viz, Captain Damron, of Western Virginia State Guards; Lieutenant Damron, Western Virginia State Guards; Isaac Goble, first lieutenant Thirty-ninth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers; David V. Auxier, second lieutenant Thirty-ninth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers. The privates are Samuel Pack, Virginia State Guards; William S. Dils, Lawrence County, Ohio, and John W. Howe, Johnson County, Ky. Goble and Auxier are residents of Johnson County, Ky.

We have written several letters to Secretary Stanton upon the subject but have received no reply; we therefore concluded to write to you as our representative, imploring you to aid us in our present suffering condition. The whole matter is at the discretion of our Government. Governor Letcher has long since notified our Government of his readiness to exchange us.

Capt. Thomas Damron, W. S. Dils and S. Pack request that you show this letter to Hon. Kellian V. Whaley, of Virginia, for perusal, request that he aid you in our release. Please write to my father, and Nathaniel Auxier, Johnson County, Penceville Post-Office, Ky., and acquaint him of my situation and you will greatly oblige his son David V. Auxier. Please write us as soon as possible and let us know whether we will be exchanged or not.

Very respectfully, your obedient servants,

DAVID V. AUXIER.

JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL'S OFFICE, March 12, 1863.

WILLIAM PRICE, Esq., U. S. Attorney.

DEAR SIR: Your telegram in relation to the criminal proceedings pending against Thomas has been received. My purpose in addressing you on the subject was this: At the time of Thomas' arrest six persons supposed to have knowledge of the crimes he had committed were also arrested and placed in confinement at Fort McHenry as witnesses on behalf of the Government. One of these has escaped; another was released by order of Major-General Dix, while the remaining four are still continued in confinement. They have thus been deprived of their liberty for about twenty months and have had no allowance made them beyond the daily rations which they have consumed. Their families as is represented to me are without the means of support, and one of them at least has suffered for want of the necessaries of life, and one of the children it is alleged has actually died from the inability of her mother to procure medicines and proper medical attention. This strikes me as a case of extreme hardship and altogether without precedent. Under these circumstances as there seems to be no probability of the early trial of Thomas I would ask your opinion as to whether the purposes of public justice will not be fully subserved by an immediate discharge of these men on their personal recognizance to appear and testify in the case at the next term of the court in which the indictment is pending. If you are not already in possession of their names they can be obtained from General Schenck's office, and you could easily learn from the persons themselves the nature of the testimony they are able to give.

Should not Thomas have been indicted for piracy also? In the divided condition of public sentiment a conviction for treason no matter how clearly the crime may be proved is extremely difficult. The same prejudice might not be encountered in a prosecution for piracy, of which if the facts have been correctly reported to me the prisoner is undoubtedly guilty.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. HOLT,
Judge-Advocate-General.

JUDGE-ADVOCATE GENERAL'S OFFICE, March 18, 1863.

SECRETARY OF WAR:

Charles Wilson and three others committed as witnesses against one Col. Thomas Zarvona, charged with having committed piracy, have been in confinement at Fort McHenry since July, 1861. There were originally six of them, but one was released by General Dix and one escaped. The remaining four have been imprisoned for about twenty months without any pay or allowance except their daily rations. One of them, Charles Wilson, states that he has a wife and children in New York without support from any one, suffering all the miseries of poverty; so much so that one of his children perished the last winter for want of medical aid. In the meanwhile Thomas Zarvona, though long since indicted and still confined, has not been tried. The cause of this delay is stated to be the continued ill health of Chief Justice Taney, and in consequence there seems to be no prospect of an early trial of the case.

The imprisonment of a witness for so long a period of time and under such circumstances is without a precedent and should not be long permitted. I therefore recommend, as has been done by Brigadier-General Morris, that these four persons be at once discharged on their giving their personal recognizance to appear and testify against Thomas Zarvona when summoned on behalf of the United States to do so. I would further urge as an act of simple justice that these men be paid a reasonable compensation for the time which they have lost by the confinement to which they have been subjected. No allowance can be made by the court, as has been determined, because they have never been formally summoned, and could not be, because held in military custody, and like Thomas Zarvona himself beyond the reach of civil process. The position in which they have been placed and held they have been forced to occupy by action of the War Department and to it they must look for a fair remuneration for the time they have lost. The U. S. attorney at Baltimore should be instructed to have a subpoena issued for these witnesses and served before their discharge which will render formal and obligatory the recognizance which it is proposed they shall then execute.

J. HOLT,
Judge-Advocate-General.

viz: That he will not escape from the fort or hold communication with any one except through the authorities of the post and that there shall be no secret meaning to any communication so held. He wishes to give this that he may be released from close confinement and allowed the privileges of exercise in the parade of the post. I would respectfully recommend that his request be granted.

[Governor JOHN LETCHER.]

SIR: I was requested before leaving Baltimore on the 17th instant by John L. Thomas, esq., counsel of Col. Richard Thomas Zarvona, to make to you the following statement of the treatment he has received of the Federal officers since his capture and confinement in Fort McHenry:

He with six others is confined in a dungeon having no ventilation except through the door, and from 7 p. m. to 7 a. m. is locked up in a cell opening from the same dungeon. The only aperture to this cell by which light and air are admitted is a square of rather less than a foot in the door covered with zinc through which small holes are punched. His commission was taken from him at the time of his seizure. He declined to accept the privilege of the fort on his parole saying he desired to have a precedent established by the Federal authorities of the treatment of officers of his rank. On being remonstrated with for the unnecessary strictness of his confinement Major Morris, commandant, styled him a pirate and thought the treatment better than he deserved. His meals are served from the officers' mess.

Very respectfully,

W. C. HALL.

FORT LAFAYETTE, U. S. A., December 7, 1861.

Hon. Mr. BENJAMIN, Secretary of War, C. S. A., Richmond, Va.

SIR: I am compelled by the state of my health to call your special attention to my case. For about five months I have been in close confinement and recently with winter fast approaching have been transferred to this fort. My health for some years past delicate is failing and unless some arrangements can be made to effect my early exchange I have great cause for serious apprehensions. I was arrested while on special duty, and there is no reason why I should be treated in any way different from a prisoner of war. My services to my Government are well known and I think might reasonably entitle me to an early exchange. His excellency Governor Letcher is acquainted with the circumstances of my case and I take the liberty of referring to him as to the justice of my claims for some special effort in my behalf. I desire that my name be placed among the first on the list of prisoners to be exchanged and that I shall have the full benefit of the long time I have been already a prisoner.

I am, with great respect, your very obedient servant, the colonel,
ZARVONA.

FORT LAFAYETTE, U. S. A., December 7, 1861.

His Excellency Governor LETCHER.

DEAR SIR: I have been transferred to this fort as you may possibly have heard. My health is seriously affected and the prospect of passing the winter in this climate far from satisfactory. I have this day addressed a communication to Mr. Secretary Benjamin requesting that my name should be placed in the list of prisoners to be exchanged, and that some special effort should be made in my behalf. You know how far I am entitled to this consideration, and I would respectfully request you to see the President and the Secretary of War and endeavor to have something done for me.

With regards to my friends, I am, with just respect, yours, truly, the colonel,

ZARVONA.

CAMP MARYLAND,

Near Winchester, Va., November 18, 1862.

Lieut. Gen. T. J. JACKSON,

Commanding Second Corps, Army of Northern Virginia.

SIR: I have the honor to request for my brother, Sergt. J. William Thomas, Company A, First Maryland Battalion, such assignment to special duty or leave of absence as will enable him to visit Richmond for the purpose of seeing Mr. Davis relative to the case of our brother, Colonel Zarvona, now for more than sixteen months an inmate of a Northern prison, and subject to more of maltreatment and cruel hardship than one could deem possible as coming from a people claiming Christianity and civilization did not testimony not to be doubted proclaim it.

It may be proper for me to mention that I have seen Mr. Davis several times upon the subject but have never been able to get anything more satisfactory than a formal demand on the part of our agents under the cartel for the exchange of prisoners for the release of my brother. This demand was made about the latter part of August last. I immediately notified my friends in Maryland of the fact, requesting them to bring what influence they could to bear upon the Government at Washington. They were told through the present representative of my district in the Federal Congress (Charles B. Calvert) that "the Government had decided not to release Colonel Zarvona." I have within the past few days received letters from home giving in part an account of a visit my mother was permitted to pay her son after so long a time of painful separation. I beg to inclose you an extract from the same. I think, sir, you will feel that this matter appeals most strongly to our Government for prompt action. My brother and I both think that the presence of one or the other of us might be of avail in Richmond toward such action. I trust you will find it agreeable to your sense of duty to grant this request and I will further ask that you furnish my brother with such letters as will tend to facilitate his efforts in Richmond.

I hope I do not ask too much for I speak to you not only as to my commanding officer but as to one of influence who can do much toward relieving the unmerited sufferings of a noble-hearted man who risked very much for the cause in which we are now enlisted, and who is now and has been for a long time treated as a common felon for doing what his country applauded.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir, your obedient servant,

GEO. THOMAS,

First Lieut. and Acting Adjutant First Maryland Battalion.

[Inclosure.]

Your mother obtained last week a permit to visit Cousin Dick. They would allow no one else to see him. * * * When she got to Fort Lafayette she was taken to Wood's (the commander) office. * * * When he came in she did not recognize him at first he was so changed. He looked so tall and was very thin and emaciated and had hardly strength to speak. His hand which you know was short and plump is now long and bony. He held her hand all the time. She asked him how he was. He said he was as well as could be expected shut up without light or air, his cell partly under water, with a place about the size of a dollar to admit the light; on cloudy days he could not see to walk about his room. * * * Aunt Jane has been sending him money all the time and he would never have known it if she had not seen him. At the end of half an hour she was told that the time was out; she asked if she could not stay longer. They said no, and he was marched off to his dark and gloomy cell. Aunt Jane says if he is kept there two months longer he cannot stand it; it must kill him. * * * It is your mother's request that I write you. She is too sick to write herself. She has been sick ever since her return. * * *

SIR: The Committee on Confederate Relations of this body would feel obliged (if convenient to yourself) that you would respond to the inquiry whether in the event of the transfer of prisoners held by the State authorities to the Confederate Government a sufficient number of officers will be held as hostages for the release of Colonel Zarvona, Captain Duskey and Lieutenant Varner. An early reply will oblige the committee.

Colonel Bass will at once release the prisoners named herein and hand them over to the Confederate authorities for exchange for Zarvona.

JOHN LETCHER.

Upon this paper is indorsed the following:

C. S. MILITARY PRISON, Richmond, Va., May —, 1863.

Will Colonel Bass please deliver to bearer, Sergeant Hite, the within-named prisoners?

Respectfully,

T. P. TURNER,
Captain, Commanding.

Upon the same paper is the following:

MAY —, 1863.

Received the within-mentioned prisoners.

T. P. TURNER,
Captain, Commanding.

* Not found.

The superintendent of the penitentiary, Colonel Bass, informs me that the prisoners were delivered according to the copy of the foregoing receipt. He states that the men all answered to their names in the order in which they stand on the preceding list. The only discrepancy being that the man who is designated by you as William G. Dils answered to his name as William S. Dils. These papers show that the prisoners were turned over by order of the governor to the Confederate authorities to be exchanged. I presume therefore the exchange has been made, or if not that Captain Turner can give the necessary explanation.

Very respectfully,

GEORGE W. MUNFORD,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Case of Purcell M. Quillen.

Purcell M. Quillen was arrested in Washington by order of General Scott and forwarded to Fort Lafayette where he was committed July 22, 1861. He was charged with being a rebel spy and coming North from his home in Charleston, S. C., for the purpose of purchasing military equipments and engaging workmen to go South to manufacture knapsacks. Quillen confessed to a Government employé while en route to New York that he served for three months in the Confederate Army and participated in the bombardment of Fort Sumter, but claimed that he was pressed into the service by the vigilance committee of Charleston, and although a British subject was informed by Mr. Bunch, the British consul, that he must obey the committee. He was released August 7, 1861, by order of General Scott on the ground that he was a British subject.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

Hon. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Lord Lyons upon a letter of recommendation from Mr. Bunch, consul at Charleston, S. C. (or perhaps a pass or passport from him), has given a pass to a young man by the name of Quillen, who resides at Charleston, S. C., and is in the employ of Lambert & Howell, of that city. Mr. Quillen is here endeavoring to get a supply of military equipments to send to the South and has made arrangements with several men to go South and manufacture knapsacks, &c. There are he says many men sent here in this way under the passport of Mr. Bunch and with the indorsement of Lord Lyons. I presume they have deceived the representatives of Great Britain but it can do no harm to let them know of this abuse of their complaisance.

Your obedient servant,

S. DRAPER.

SIR: In obedience to your request I have taken the statement of Purcell M. Quillen in relation to himself and the circumstances connected with his arrest on the suspicion of his being a spy. The foregoing [following] statement is the account which he gives of himself.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. H. GODDARD,
Justice of the Peace.

[Inclosure.]

WASHINGTON COUNTY JAIL,
Washington City, June 29, 1861.

Minutes of a preliminary examination of Purcell M. Quillen, arrested on suspicion of being a spy, had before Capt. John H. Goddard, justice of the peace:

I was born in Ireland. Am not naturalized. Am twenty-four years of age; about fourteen years in America. Am employed in the carpet trade at Charleston in the house of Lambert & Howell. Received my passport from the British consul, Mr. Bunch, at Charleston, about four weeks ago. Am not married. Have been at New York City. Had a letter with me from Mr. Bunch to Lord Lyons to facilitate my progress or to help me along. Did not present that letter until I returned here yesterday. Came here Thursday night; left New York Wednesday evening; did not stop any time in Baltimore; have some relatives there and dined with them; have lived there; have lived in New York previous to my living in Charleston; have lived in Charleston about eleven months; have been engaged with the above house since I went to Charleston. In visiting New York my object was merely to visit my friends. I thought that perhaps the present troubles might be soon settled and I found I could do but little at Charleston. I still hold my situation at Charleston if I should return. I expected to get a commission in the U. S. Army through the influence of Mr. Hosea Perkins, who is acquainted with Hon. Dan. Sickles, but I got no satisfaction in that way and I determined to return to Charleston. I did not represent myself to the British consul as a married man. In speaking of my family I meant my friends. I sign my name Quillen; my brother signs his McQuillen. I have one brother in the Eighth New York Regiment. I received a package of letters (shown) from Mr. Monson, secretary of legation (British) here. In order to deliver it with another letter to Mr. Bunch, consul at Charleston, I was directed at the legation to get my passport countersigned by the Secretary of State and was desired to make an affidavit which I did and to my astonishment found myself arrested. I never made any arrangement with any parties in New York to go South to manufacture knapsacks—never. I never made arrangements to get military equipments for the South while in New York. I have never stated while in New York that several men had been sent to New York under the passports of Mr. Bunch indorsed by Lord Lyons. I knew one young man—yes I know three young Englishmen who had got passes in Richmond from Governor Letcher and a letter from the vice-consul at Richmond. I met them at Strasburg and again at Harper's Ferry on my way from Charleston. I did not come through Washington on my way from Charleston; I came through Harper's Ferry. I took the railroad from Manassas Junction to Strasburg. I did not go through the Gap. I stayed about three weeks in New York. I did nothing particular there. I had no goods to attend to there. I lived at the house No. 87 Spring street, corner of Broadway. I was acquainted with a Mr. Moore, No. 99 Bowery, clerk with Hiram Anderson; also George Reed, of the same place; also Michael or M. Noonan, nearly opposite The Herald, a bookseller. I have also been in at Julian Bros.' carpet warehouse, corner of Broadway and Canal street; they are an importing house. The memoranda in the pocket-book were made in the store at Charleston. What I have stated in the foregoing is all true. I was sick in New York for a little time. I did not state to any one that I had a stock of goods in New York. I thought when I went on that we might order our spring goods, but I found that nothing in the way of trade could be done and I thought it was better to return to Charleston where I could get something to do as I had nothing to do in New York and there was money owing to me in Charleston. I have not stated that I had a stock of goods or that I expected a stock of goods in New York and that I wanted to get them into the South to avoid paying duties, &c. I never stated that I am aware of that I had any goods to attend to or look after there. My object now is to get back to Charleston the readiest way I can go and the least expensive. I did not state that I was in business on my own account in Charleston. I did not state that I desired to get back to Charleston in order to attend to the settling up of the business of my own store or to see after my goods but I stated that I wanted to get back there to get my business settled up.

Question. Did you not state that your object in coming North was to attend to the disposition of some goods which you expected to arrive from Europe and to see if it would pay to take them to the South; or on the other hand to dispose of them in New York and thus save extra expense, freight, commission, &c., which would be incurred by taking them to the South?—Answer. I did not state that but something similar to it. I did not state that I was sick in Baltimore a considerable time with my friends but I stated that I was sick in New York. I did state that business was the entire cause of my detention. I did not state that I had two brothers in the Eighth New York Regiment. The whole of this trouble has originated with one man in New York by the name of Jefferies, No. 99 Bowery, in Hiram Anderson's carpet store. His reason for persecuting me is that he applied to the parties in Charleston who now employ me for the situation and did not get it which caused his malicious feeling toward me as I believe. He reported me to Mr. Kennedy, chief of police in New York, the night I arrived as a secessionist. My brother's name in the Eighth Regiment is Thomas McQuillen, Eighth New York City Regiment, stationed at Arlington Heights; C. McDonald, in same regiment, Engineer Corps, also has known me the last six or seven years; Thomas R. Turnbull, sergeant of engineers, same regiment, also knows me; N. P. Fitzpatrick, of same regiment, also; Hugh S. Powers, of Ellsworth Zouaves, also knows me; Charles Lambert, of Morristown, N. J., is principal partner in the house I am in at Charleston.

NEW YORK, June 29, 1861.

W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State:

The witnesses must be examined here. They are so situated that they peril much in what they may be called to do. They have learned all they know from the young man himself and there is no doubt of his complicity with the Montgomery Government. There is no doubt but he can tell you of direct acts of the British consul or his deputy at Richmond aiding and abetting by the use of British dispatch agent and messenger. The names of the witnesses will be furnished to any person on a demand being made for them.

S. DRAPER.

NEW YORK, June 29, 1861.

W. H. SEWARD:

Witness will be in Washington and report himself to you on Monday morning.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I inclose a note received from the witness in the case of Mr. Quillen. If you have the power to take him to Washington you will be forced to exercise it. His brother and also Hiram Anderson, a well-known carpet dealer in the city, can furnish the necessary information.

S. DRAPER.

SIMEON DRAPER, Esq.

DEAR SIR: My partner having gone to the country with his family on Saturday leaving important business matters for me to attend to to-day it was impossible for me to go on to Washington. When, as a patriotic merchant, I gave you a hint as to how easily men from the South got passes it was understood between us that I should not be mixed up in the matter any further, and as you know all I could communicate I should prefer not going on.

I am, dear sir, respectfully, yours,

HENRY G. JULIAN.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 2, 1861.

E. DELAFIELD SMITH,

U. S. Attorney for the Southern District of New York.

SIR: A few days since Purcell M. Quillen, a British subject, having presented here to be countersigned the inclosed passport* from Mr.

* Not found. See ante for the other inclosures referred to.

Bunch, the British consul at Charleston, was arrested at my instance by military authority and committed for examination. This step was occasioned by a note of the 17th ultimo addressed to Mr. Cameron, the Secretary of War, by Simeon Draper, esq., chairman of the Union Defense Committee of New York, a copy of which is also inclosed. I then caused an examination of Quillen to be made by Captain Goddard, the chief of the police here, a copy of which is also herewith transmitted.

Mr. Draper having been asked to send hither witnesses with a view to further proceedings against Quillen has replied that they could not leave New York, and as the offense of the prisoner appears to have been committed in that city it is deemed advisable to transfer him thither. I have accordingly directed him to be transferred and placed in the custody of the marshal of the United States. It is desirable that he should be further examined at New York and if the result of the examination should justify it that he should be held for trial. Mr. Forrest, a clerk in this Department, to whom Quillen applied to have his passport countersigned and who questioned him as to his object, takes this letter and his deposition in the matter may be important. If the proof against Quillen should not warrant his detention for trial the memorandum book found upon him with the passport which he presented to be countersigned both may be returned.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 2, 1861.

Brig. Gen. JOSEPH K. F. MANSFIELD, Washington.

GENERAL: Difficulty having been experienced in obtaining such witnesses from New York as would be necessary for further proceedings against Purcell M. Quillen it is deemed advisable that he should be transferred to that city and delivered to Robert Murray, esq., marshal of the United States there. I will thank you to cause him to be transferred accordingly. This Department will defray any expense which the transfer may occasion.

I am, general, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

P. S.—Mr. John A. Kennedy, superintendent of police, who is now here will receive Quillen and transfer him to the marshal.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 2, 1861.

ROBERT MURRAY, Esq.,

U. S. Marshal for the Southern District of New York.

SIR: Herewith you will receive Purcell M. Quillen whom you will detain as a prisoner to await the order of the attorney of the United States for your district.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

NEW YORK, July 4, 1861.

WILLIAM HUNTER, Esq., Department of State, Washington.

DEAR SIR: We arrived here early this morning and as soon as possible I reported myself to the U. S. marshal and also endeavored to see the district attorney, but he has left the city for the day. Mr. Draper is also absent. It will therefore be impossible to have Quillen's examination before to-morrow.

Whatever may be the result of this case I am more than ever convinced that he is either a spy or an agent of the rebels—perhaps both, and it seems to me it would be highly improper to permit him to go at large or at all events to communicate with the South. I have thought it proper to communicate to the Department what seems to be important admissions made by him since we left Washington not only as showing his own guilt but as impeaching the good faith of the British consul at Charleston, Mr. Bunch. He has stated to me that some time previous to the attack on Fort Sumter he was notified by the vigilance committee at Charleston to join the Confederate forces forthwith. He at once consulted the consul as to his being compelled to do so and Mr. Bunch advised him—indeed said that he must do as the committee had ordered and he accordingly he says took up arms against the United States, and was so engaged for a period of three months and three weeks and participating in the bombardment of Sumter. I asked him if he was not aware that the consul had the power to save him as a subject of Great Britain from this impressment. He replied that the consul had stated that he had not; that Lord Lyons had given him positive instructions on this point to the effect that British subjects having resided six months in the State of South Carolina were presumed to be citizens or intending to become so and were therefore liable to be compelled to perform military duty. So that the consul instead of discouraging him from engaging in hostile demonstration against the United States rather encouraged him to do so.

I have thought it proper to let the Department know these facts as early as possible. If you should desire to communicate with me to-morrow be pleased to direct to care of the U. S. marshal. I shall leave New York as soon as this case is disposed of—perhaps to-morrow night or Saturday morning.

In great haste, I remain, dear sir, faithfully, yours,

THOMAS L. FORREST.

Quillen states that he knows of several cases where the consul advised British subjects to comply with the demands of the vigilance committee.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 10, 1861.

Lieut. Gen. WINFIELD SCOTT, Washington.

GENERAL: I have the honor to inform you that Purcell M. Quillen, a British subject, offered to be countersigned some days since a passport from Mr. Bunch, the consul of his country at Charleston, in order that he might return thither. The conduct of the man being somewhat strange, leading to suspicion of his disloyalty, I caused him to be arrested and examined. The examination tended to confirm this suspicion, but as the principal witnesses in the case were at New York he was transferred thither for further examination. A copy of the deposition of Henry George Julian and Hiram Anderson at New York is herewith inclosed.* My impression is that it would not only be unadvisable to allow Quillen to return to Charleston but that for the present at least he should be detained in custody. I will consequently thank you to order him into confinement at Fort Hamilton, New York Harbor, or some other U. S. fort. He is now in the Tombs at New York but I have directed the marshal of the United States to deliver him to your order.

I have the honor to be, general, your obedient servant,
WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 10, 1861.

ROBERT MURRAY, Esq., U. S. Marshal, New York.

SIR: I have requested Lieutenant-General Scott to transfer Purcell M. Quillen now confined in the Tombs at New York to Fort Hamilton. You will consequently deliver him for that purpose on application of the proper officer.

OFFICE OF THE U. S. DISTRICT ATTORNEY,
New York, July 23, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEAR SIR: A writ of habeas corpus in the case of Purcell M. Quillen has just been granted directed to the military officer in charge at Governor's Island, returnable on Thursday at 12. Judge Shipman who granted the writ did so very reluctantly, and I say to you in confidence that rebellion and treason will obtain no aid and comfort from his action, judicial or otherwise. Courts and judges, however, cannot alter or suspend the law, and it has occurred to me that Quillen may not be of sufficient consequence to render worth while any stand by us in the matter. If you think proper please telegraph me. I will postpone action till you telegraph or write.

With great respect, gratefully and truly, yours,

E. DELAFIELD SMITH.

P. S.—I should add that if the military officer refuses to produce Quillen I believe Judge Shipman will assume the responsibility and decline to grant an attachment or order to show cause.

Respectfully,

E. D. S.

MY DEAR SIR: Of the two prisoners at New York about whose liberation we spoke confidentially last night one is Quillen, with whose case you are well acquainted. * * * I do not, however, in this private and confidential note enter into the merits of either case because your view was that it would be expedient rather to exercise your discretionary power in favor of these two countrymen of mine than to discuss legal or other questions. Case of Austin E. Smith.

On the 2d day of August, 1861, Austin E. Smith, late navy agent at San Francisco, was arrested at New York by the marshal of the southern district of New York charged with being a defaulter to the Government and having the books and papers of the naval agency in his possession and with being a secessionist and rebel, and was on the 3d day of August by order of the Department of State committed to military custody at Fort Lafayette as a political prisoner. Many persons charged Smith with disloyal and rebellious sentiments and purposes, alleging that he was a rabid and fiery rebel and that he had openly declared on board ship that had he had in his possession any considerable amount of Government funds he would have retained it for the use of the army South. He was twice tendered his release from confinement on condition of taking the oath of allegiance and giving his parole not to go to any seceded State nor correspond with any person in such State, but he declined either to take the oath or give his parole. On the 29th of October the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury informed the Department of State that on a final settlement of Smith's accounts as late naval agent and acting paymaster at San Francisco a balance was found to be due from him to the United States of $4,042.47. On the 7th day of December having made no denial of his disloyalty Smith made several propositions to obtain his release, among which was a proposal to be exchanged for some loyal citizen held as a prisoner by the rebels, thus admitting his own treason. From all the evidence in the case it appears that Austin E. Smith is a disloyal man in full sympathy with the rebellion, and from his personal and social relations shown by the active and persistent efforts of many persons of cultivation and respectability to obtain his release and serve him in his confinement possessed of dangerous influence and power for evil. The said Smith having been transferred to Fort Warren remained in custody there the 15th of February, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: J. K. Millner,* A. E. Smith, of Virginia, and Charles Kopperl,* of Mississippi, are clients of Hon. William H. Ludlow, who has pressed me diligently to report in their cases. But for this I could properly pass them as I shall all of the prisoners deemed to be disloyal now unless there is something special in their cases. * * *

The case of Mr. Austin E. Smith is I think fully known to you. He is in all respects it seems to me a disloyal man—energetic, active and determined. His tone is defiant. He demands the right to come on to Washington to settle his accounts. That might be allowed provided he was certain to be remanded to duress. * * *

I am, very respectfully, yours,

S. C. HAWLEY.

FORT WARREN, December 7, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,

Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: On the 2d of August I was arrested by your order in the city of New York when on my way to Washington City for the purpose of settling my accounts as late navy agent for the post of San Francisco. On the 5th of the same month I communicated to you the facts and circumstances. On the 14th of October and the 16th of November I was tendered my release upon terms to which I could not conscientiously subscribe. And now after an incarceration of upward of four months in accordance with the suggestions found in your two communications lately received by Colonel Dimick and read to the political prisoners here confined I propose the following parole: I pledge and bind myself upon my honor if set at liberty by the President of the United States to proceed without unnecessary delay to Washington to settle my accounts and thence if required by the President to return immediately to California.

Your obedient servant,

AUSTIN E. SMITH.

CONFEDERATE CORRESPONDENCE, ETC.

CAMP PICKENS, January 30, 1862.

President DAVIS.

DEAR SIR: Since I saw you last I have received a letter from my son, Austin E. Smith, confined in Fort Warren; had a visit from Captain Tansill who called to deliver a message from him; also a visit from Colonel Tyler for like purpose in addition to the letter he had written to me, and now a letter from Captain Tattnall (as I read the name), who was released on the 13th instant from Fort Warren, from whose letter I respectfully submit the following extract:

NORFOLK, January 25, 1862.

* * * Your son requested me to see you in Richmond and to deliver to you the following message. He begs that all efforts may be made to obtain his release but that he has no hope that such effort will be successful unless he can be exchanged for some prisoner of war in whom the U. S. Secretary of State may feel personal interest or in whose favor he may be induced to act in consequence of political influences. Your son cannot give up the hope that your representations to our Government of the service he has rendered to our cause and his desire to face the invaders of our soil may induce them to offer some such person as I have mentioned in exchange for him. * * *

In all the late communications from him the view presented by the above extract characterizes them all. I therefore yield. Property considerations I doubt not he has somewhat cared for, and at any rate they must not be weighed in the balance against liberty and duty to our country, and I most anxiously urge the carrying out of your kind suggestion to make him an officer and exchange him as a prisoner of war. My son is about thirty-one years old, has had two years at West Point and desires to enter the army. When I was in Richmond last inquiring about the officers in person as I did by his request I found a Lieutenant Parks (I think such was the name; at any rate he was an adjutant to a Massachusetts regiment and was captured I think in the fight near Leesburg), of Boston, who was represented by the officer in command to be a high-toned gentleman who would respect the parole and who commanded considerable influence in his native city. I cannot say more for fear my feelings should master me but trust in God and my country's chief for an early opportunity to clasp to my bosom my noble, gallant son.

I am, Mr. President, most respectfully and truly, yours,
WM. SMITH.

[Indorsement.]

Acknowledge. Expect soon some arrangement for exchange of prisoners will be made, and Secretary of War will please file this for attention and reply to Colonel Smith, whose feelings he will appreciate.
JEFF'N DAVIS.

HDQRS. FORTY-NINTH REGT. VIRGINIA VOLUNTEERS,
February 10, 1862.

President DAVIS.

DEAR SIR: Having just received a letter from my son and not having heard from the Secretary of War as I was advised by your private secretary I might expect to do, I have concluded to inclose the letter to you that you may see that he adheres inflexibly to his resolve in the first instance, "that the granite of his prison home would crumble into dust before he would acknowledge the slightest allegiance to the tyranny which oppressed him or have his devoted loyalty to the South to become a question." With you, my dear sir, now rests my hopes—all my hopes and his. I know not, care not how he has managed about our pecuniary interests. Money is but dust in the balance against liberty—the liberty to defy, to brave, to conquer our enemies; the liberty to fight, to bleed and if need be, to die for our country.

I am, Mr. President, very truly and sincerely, yours,
WM. SMITH.

[Indorsement.]

SECRETARY OF WAR:

One inclosure. Please answer and explain.

J. D[AVIS].

[Inclosure.]

FORT WARREN, January 26, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM SMITH, Warrenton, Va.

MY DEAR FATHER: Your favor of 12th instant came to hand yesterday, and I must say that I was greatly surprised and deeply mortified that you should have given me such advice. My feelings are somewhat soothed by the conviction that you saw from an erroneous standpoint and knew not the true character of the obligation. There are no contemplated combination of circumstances which could induce me to waver from the position I have taken. Kidnapped as I have been I will not wink at any further degradation. The fact that I was arrested because this Government thought I was on my way South to take up arms against the United States makes me at least a quasi prisoner of war. The South has adopted no policy upon the question of exchange. The South has given up her military prisoners for political prisoners held in this fort; witness Faulkner* for Ely and the resigned navy officers who were arrested as and held as prisoners of state. Every guaranteed right of this Government disregarded or denied me I now appeal with an abiding confidence to my native land.

Very affectionately, your devoted son,

AUSTIN E. SMITH.

Warmest love to all. Please carry out my views and leave the rest to me.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Richmond, March 31, 1862.

President DAVIS.

DEAR SIR: A recent capture of some citizen prisoners from the enemy afford some chances of extricating my son from his imprisonment in Fort Warren. Allow me to call your attention again to this matter, deeply interesting to me, and implore again your interference for my dear son's extrication.

Yours, most respectfully,

WM. SMITH.

[First indorsement.]

SECRETARY OF WAR:

The case is a hard one and Colonel Smith has the highest claims on our regard. His devotion and gallantry are known to you. His son has shown a spirit worthy his descent. If the request can be consistently complied with you will please avail yourself of an opportunity to grant it.

J. D[AVIS].

[Second indorsement.]

Inform Hon. William Smith, House of Representatives, that if he can suggest a suitable exchange the Department will consider the suggestion with a cordial wish to adopt it.

G. W. R[ANDOLPH].

CARY STREET CITIZENS' PRISON,
Richmond, April 10, 1862.

Ex-Governor WILLIAM SMITH.

DEAR SIR: Since the brief interview of yesterday I have revolved in my mind the subject of procuring the exchange of your son, A. E. Smith, for myself, and I will now specifically set forth some of the influences I can bring to accomplish that result.

First. My uncle, Mr. Robert Allen, of Philadelphia, is a most intimate friend of Mr. John Tucker, one of the Assistant Secretaries of

* See p. 463 for case of Faulkner, exchanged for Congressman Ely, of New York.

War. Mr. Tucker enjoys intimate relationship with Secretary Stanton, and through him and my friend I can secure a very weighty influence, as much so as any individual in the Administration. Mr. Allen is also the relative by marriage and friend of Mr. E. Cowan, one of the U. S. Senators from the State of Pennsylvania, whose influence would also be used in my behalf and whom I know would take pleasure in serving me. My brother-in-law, J. N. Criswell, of Harrisburg, Pa., has been for years on terms of greatest intimacy with Thomas A. Scott, esq., another Assistant Secretary of War, and for whom I am certain Mr. Scott would use all his influence. My brother, Col. B. Ayres (formerly superintendent of the Memphis and Charleston Railroad and a gentleman whose sympathies are with the South from long residence and acquaintance), was a former associate in business with Mr. Scott, and a person whom I think Mr. Scott would do anything for. I am also personally acquainted with Mr. Scott and will demand the favor. My brother-in-law, A. J. Jones, of Harrisburg, is a prominent politician of the party now in power and can command the services and influence of J. W. Killinger, the influential representative of his district, and others at Washington. John P. Verree, esq., and John M. Butler, the representatives of the First and Third districts of Philadelphia in Congress, will give me their aid. Isaac Newton, head of the Agricultural Bureau in Washington; James T. Hale, the brother-in-law of Secretary Welles and representative in Congress, will aid me. Myself and family are intimate with Governor Curtin and family, of Pennsylvania, whose influence I can secure with the President. My wife is a warm personal friend and acquaintance of Mrs. Secretary Welles, whom I know would use her influence to oblige her (sometimes very potent).

The fact is I am so confident of my ability to secure the desired result if I am afforded an opportunity that I am willing to risk a return to this place according to the terms of a parole should one be granted to me for that purpose. I therefore suggest to you the propriety of procuring a parole of honor say for twenty or thirty days. It has been granted by both Governments in cases where the parties stood in the position of belligerents, and your Government would in no way compromise themselves by granting it to me, a non-combatant, against whom there is no charge, taken as you are aware three weeks since while viewing the famous battle-field of Manassas. You are aware of the difficulty of attempting to command my influences by correspondence and the difference in effect where I would urge them in my proper person, and I hope you will use your influence to secure it knowing that it will result to our mutual satisfaction.

I have no personal acquaintance in Richmond, but if Mr. J. R. Anderson, of the Tredegar Works, or Col. Sam. Tate, president of the Memphis and Charleston Railroad, were in the place I could acquaint you with my social position (they knowing my brothers) and give you and the Government assurances that the terms of a parole of honor would be faithfully carried out. Should you be successful you can have the honor of a gentleman that every effort would be made for the release of your son and any influence that would procure that result would be procured. It is not that the burdens of prison life are so onerous and hard to bear but for the sake of my family who may be suffering pecuniarily from effects produced by this revolution.

With hopeful anticipations I await the result and remain, yours, very respectfully,

WM. AYRES.

Case of Louis de Bebian.

The President of the United States, by his proclamation of April 27, 1861, for the reasons set forth therein, established a blockade of the ports of the States of Virginia and North Carolina, including the port of Wilmington in said last-named State. On the 6th day of August, 1861, the schooner Adelso, of Saint John, New Brunswick, having entered the port of Wilmington a few days previously by a fraudulent evasion of said blockade, sailed thence to Halifax, Nova Scotia, with a full cargo of turpentine and rosin, again violating the said blockade in her departure. The said schooner Adelso was built at Eastport, in the State of Maine; was a vessel of ninety-eight tons, owned by John Kay, of Eastport aforesaid, and called the A. L. Hyde. Kay to save the vessel from seizure and loss, he being in trouble, put her in the hands of Henry Horton, his brother-in-law, a resident of New Brunswick; and she was then registered as Horton's property and sailed under Capt. Thomas Kimball, a naturalized American citizen of British birth, as master. Her name was also changed to the Adelso. This vessel with her doubtful ownership, equivocal hailing place, double nationality and master of twofold citizenship and allegiance was chartered expressly for the business of carrying on a trade with the said port of Wilmington in fraudulent disregard of the said blockade; and in pursuance of such intent sailed from the said port of Wilmington for Halifax, Nova Scotia, on the 6th day of August aforesaid; and was driven by stress of weather into the port of Newport, R. I., on the 13th day of the same month, when she and her cargo were immediately taken possession of by the officers of customs. Louis de Bebian, represented to be a native of the Island of Guadaloupe and claiming to be a French subject, was a passenger on the said vessel on her said voyage from Wilmington aforesaid, where he resides, bound for Halifax, and was on the said vessel when she came to Newport, constrained by stress of weather as aforesaid. The collector of the port of Newport reports that by direction of the district attorney no person was allowed to go on shore from the said vessel nor anyone to go on board except the officers of the revenue; and all the papers found on board were sealed up.

On the 17th of August De Bebian was permitted to land, and on the 19th he voluntarily made an affidavit stating that he sailed from Wilmington, N. C., on the said schooner Adelso on the 6th of the same month; that said vessel was bound for Halifax, Nova Scotia, with a full cargo of turpentine and rosin; that he understood that the said port of Wilmington was declared to be blockaded at and before the time they sailed from that port; that J. & D. McRae & Co., of Wilmington, one of whom was the British vice-consul at that port, were the consignees of said vessel when she arrived; that the said cargo was shipped for and on account of a house in Boston as he was informed by the master during the voyage; and that after he engaged his passage but before sailing the master of the schooner informed him that he should stop at Welchpool and promised to see him on board a boat there that would take him safely to Halifax. This affidavit was made by De Bebian to show that he was simply a passenger not connected with the said vessel or her voyage or her cargo; yet he wholly omitted to state anything of the contents of his own papers showing his own business or of his possession of letters from parties in an insurrectionary State for parties in other portions of the United States. The said collector of the port of Newport further reports that on inspecting his trunk the officers found concealed among his clothing letters and papers by which it appeared that he was to purchase an assorted cargo at Liverpool, England, and return with the same to Wilmington, N. C. The letters of instruction were from Messrs. O. G. Parsly & Co., of Wilmington, N. C., to Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool. The invoice or list of goods to be purchased was as follows: 5,000 to 10,000 army blankets, 1,000 bags of coffee, ——— tons of iron of various sizes, round and flat, whole amount of invoice to be $40,000; also a list of numerous articles of clothing, &c., apparently on private account. The goods were to be shipped in a British or French vessel. With these papers were also instructions how to proceed on the arrival of the vessel off the port of Wilmington, N. C. They were to make signal from the vessel which would be answered from the shore, and if proper a pilot would be sent on board by which means the blockade could be run. The said collector further reports the discovery in De Bebian's possession of a number of letters, some addressed to parties in foreign countries and some to parties in each of the States of Vermont, Maine, New York, Missouri and Connecticut. The said collector although not previously intending the detention of said De Bebian—coming as he did from a port in the power of the insurrectionists, a passenger on a vessel detected in illicit commerce—on the discovery of these evidences of his conspiring to evade the blockade and render aid and assistance to the rebels and of his agency in the unlawful forwarding of correspondence between the insurrectionary States and other portions of the Union, ordered his arrest on the said 19th day of August, 1861, for the said offenses. The said De Bebian was sent to Fort Lafayette and held in custody there until September 16, 1861, when he was discharged on his parole for two weeks; which time was subsequently enlarged, and on the 4th day of October, 1861, he was discharged from his parole. The said collector of the port of Newport, Seth W. Macy, esq., subsequently made the following affidavit.*

It thus appears that Louis de Bebian had been engaged in illicit commerce in disregard of a lawful blockade in transporting lumber from Wilmington to the West Indies, and had entered into engagements for the further prosecuting of the same business; that he had embarked on board a vessel of equivocal character then engaged in unlawful evasion of the blockade in which he participated; that he was engaged in the unlawful conveyance of clandestine correspondence between an insurgent State and other portions of the Union; that he had conspired with others to afford aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States by purchasing and importing supplies for their armies; by stealthily and fraudulently through the means of concerted reciprocal signals evading the blockade, and that he was detected on the way to carry these purposes into effect with the evidence of his criminality upon him. On the 21st of August, 1861, De Bebian addressed a paper to the French vice-consul at New York in which he alleges that his voyage "was for business purely commercial," and in giving the particulars of his mission makes the following statement:

I am going to Europe to be at hand to learn the decision of the two great powers on the subject [question] of blockades, to move to advantage at the first possible chance by investing our funds in shipments of merchandise most in demand. Our house means articles such as seem best for a future time, such as woolens, blankets, &c., for it is customary in autumn to lay in every sort of winter covering and a pair of blankets for each negro. The wants of the army having absorbed all that there was of blankets not only at Wilmington but nearly through the whole country this article of blankets is most in demand. These blankets were formerly known by the designation of negro blankets. I fear lest the house may have used in its letter the new appellation of soldiers' blankets. If such is the case that is the sole and only charge that can be made against me.

He also says that he had "some letters from individuals giving good accounts to their families and friends in the North—letters which I was to mail at Halifax—two or three loose sheets with memorandums of merchandise suitable for the market and commissions to be executed for friends; in fine, one pointing out what should be done to announce to me whether or no the port was blockaded." On the 27th of September, 1861, De Bebian wrote a statement of his case to the French minister representing that he was a partner in the house of O. G. Parsly & Co., of Wilmington; that his usual occupation was traveling abroad in the business of said house; that he returned from a voyage of that kind on the 6th of July, 1861; and proceeding to state with regard to his last voyage as follows:

My partners and myself concluded that it was opportune that I should go to England to liquidate some weighty affairs we had with various houses. That being done I was according to circumstances to remain in Europe and keep the funds in hand or else remit their equivalents in the shape of sundry merchandise in case the port of Wilmington, N. C., should have ceased to be closed to commerce.

After alleging that his detention was without cause and attended with sundry hardships he makes the following statements in relation to his papers:

The journals have spoken of heavy sums and of papers compromising me found among my baggage. That is false. The amounts I had at the time of my arrest were made up of about $250 in gold and a bill of exchange for 5,700 francs. These sums seized at that time have since been restored, but not so with my other papers, which consisted of four letters addressed to different correspondents of the house of O. G. Parsly & Co., and solely devoted to the details and settlements of accounts. A note annexed contains some instructions about the shipments of merchandise I was to make in case the blockade should have ceased to trammel commerce—not a single line that could be interpreted as implying any political mission.

The said letter of De Bebian to the French vice-consul seeks to mislead that functionary in regard to the intended investment of "funds in shipments of merchandise most in demand" by representing that the house meant "articles such as seem best for a future time," and by an attempt to confound army blankets or soldiers' clothing with negro blankets; and also to transfigure his system of reciprocal signals to facilitate the running of the blockade into a method of "pointing out what should be done to announce to him whether or no the port was blockaded." Toward his excellency the French minister De Bebian was still more disingenuous. In his letter to that personage he speaks of his intended evasion of the blockade under the disguise in the first place of a design to remit the equivalents of certain funds in the shape of sundry merchandise in case the port of Wilmington should have ceased to be closed to commerce; and in the second place of referring to some instructions about the shipments of merchandise he was to make "in case the blockade should have ceased to trammel commerce," these equivocal expressions being evidently used to cover his premeditated design fraudulently to evade the blockade, and all reference to his code of reciprocal signals to effect that object being suppressed, as was also all notice of the letters attempted to be conveyed by him from parties in the insurrectionary States to parties in other portions of the United States.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

SIR: The schooner Adelso, of Saint John, Kimbal. master, from Wilmington, N. C., put into this port on the 12th instant, said schooner having run the blockade on the 6th. I requested Captain Bennett, of the revenue cutter Henrietta (then lying in this harbor), to put a prize crew on board. Wingate Hayes, esq., district attorney, being in this city I called upon him for instructions. He directed that no person should be allowed to come on shore or any one to go on board except the officers of the revenue, and also directed all the papers found on board to be sealed up and the same to remain until further advised. There is a French gentleman, a passenger on board, who has been detained under the above instructions. Should like to be advised in the matter. Have been expecting to hear from the district attorney. I wrote the honorable Secretary of the Treasury as soon as possible; as yet have received no answer.

DISTRICT AND PORT OF NEWPORT, R. I.,
Collector's Office, August 19, 1861.

Hon. GIDEON WELLES,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I wrote you on the 16th in relation to the detention of the schooner Adelso, of Saint John, New Brunswick, from Wilmington, N. C., cargo, spirits turpentine and rosin. I telegraphed you on the same day for instructions in relation to the landing of a French passenger from on board said schooner, an answer to which by telegraph was received the next day, 17th, and he was allowed to land. My reason more particularly for his landing was that he knew from conversation with the captain of the schooner that the cargo was owned by a firm in Boston, Mass. This fact he has made oath to before a notary at the custom-house.

On inspecting his trunk the officers found concealed among his clothing letters and papers by which it appeared that he was to purchase an assorted cargo at Liverpool, England, and return with the same to Wilmington, N. C. The letters of instruction were from Messrs. O. G. Parsly & Co., of Wilmington, N. C., to Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool. The invoice* or list of goods to be purchased was as follows: 5,000 to 10,000 army blankets, 1,000 bags of coffee, blank tons of iron of various sizes, round and flat; whole amount of invoice to be $40,000. Also a list of numerous articles of clothing, &c., apparently on private account. The goods were to be shipped in a French or British vessel. With these papers were also instructions how to proceed on the arrival of the vessel off the port of Wilmington. They were to make signals from the vessel which would be answered from the shore, and if proper a pilot would be sent on board by which means the blockade would be run.

On finding these papers I telegraphed to you to know if I should detain him, partially doing so by not allowing him to leave the place although he is not under arrest. By my letter to you under date of 16th instant I mentioned that I had acted in the matter under the advice of the district attorney, but on that day I received from him a letter saying that he had no authority to act in the matter, since which I have used my best judgment under the circumstances, and hope what I have done will meet your approbation.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. W. MACY,
Collector.

P. S.—I have had the passenger's papers at the custom-house sealed up. Have had L. de Bebian, the French passenger, arrested this day.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

Louis de Bebian, of Wilmington, N. C., now at present in Newport, in the State of Rhode Island, on solemn oath doth depose and say that he was a passenger on board schooner Adelso, of Saint John, New Brunswick, now in the port of Newport, and now seized by the revenue officer of that port on charge of breaking the blockade of said Wilmington. That he left said Wilmington on the 6th day of August, 1861, and bound for Halifax, Nova Scotia, but would first touch at Welchpool, in New Brunswick. That he was on board said schooner as a passenger and was to be landed at said Halifax. That when he engaged his passage with the master of said vessel at the wharf in said Wilmington the stevedore and crew were loading said schooner with turpentine and rosin. That the schooner had a full cargo in her hold and some on her decks. That we sailed from Wilmington on the 6th of August as aforesaid and arrived at said Newport on the 13th of August, 1861. That he understood that the said port of Wilmington was declared to be blockaded at once, before the time they sailed from that port. That he is personally well acquainted with Messrs. J. & D. McRae & Co., merchants residing in said Wilmington, and that they were the consignees of said vessel when she arrived at that port, one of whom is Her Britannic Majesty's vice-consul at that port. That the said cargo was shipped for and on account of a house in Boston, as he was informed by the master of said vessel during the voyage, but cannot now recollect the name of the house as was told him by the captain of the schooner. He would say that after he engaged his passage to Halifax and just before sailing the master of the schooner informed him that he should stop at Welchpool, from which he could reach Halifax in eight or ten hours, and that he would see him on board a boat that would take him safely to Halifax.

FORT LAFAYETTE, August 21, 1861.

[COUNT MONTHOLON, Consul of France, New York:]

A Frenchman resident for nearly five years at Wilmington, N. C., I embarked on the 6th August instant on the English schooner Adelso, Capt. Thomas Kimball, cleared for Halifax, Nova Scotia. I was going to take at Halifax the English line of steamers to go to Liverpool, England, provided with a passport from the Governor of Martinique viséed by the French consular agent at Wilmington for business purely commercial. The schooner Adelso appears to have been chartered by an American house at Boston to go and take on a cargo at Wilmington. She arrived off the bar on the 30th of July and was obliged to come to anchor outside until next morning waiting for a tide and fair winds. Eight days afterward she went down the river just at the same time the English schooner Beverly which had been twenty-four hours ahead of her. These two schooners were obliged to anchor inside the bar to wait for the tide, and went out together at 4 or 5 o'clock on the afternoon of the 6th of August. I was passenger on board the Adelso. During the day on the 12th of August a heavy squall having carried away a portion of the canvas of the schooner and the gale increasing in intensity the captain judged proper to go into the nearest port. We anchored in the bay of Newport on the 13th. The custom-house officer who came to inquire whence the Adelso had arrived reported her to the revenue cutter Henrietta as from a Southern port. The schooner was very soon taken possession of by a gang of men armed to the teeth. I presented my passport to the commanding officer declaring myself to be only a passenger traveling under the double protection of my country and of a friendly flag in a friendly country. The officer remarked to me that it was nowise possible to land in the present stormy weather but that I would have the opportunity on its clearing away in the morning. My request was evaded until during the afternoon when the captain's papers as well as my trunks were placed under seals; all external communication strictly forbidden, even the courtesy of informing the consul of my country of my unlawful detention.

After four or five days of the worst treatment, deprived of the use of my trunk, the chief of the custom-house accompanied by a subordinate and by the lieutenant of the revenue cutter Henrietta came and removed the seals from my trunk; my linen examined piece by piece, the lining of my clothes tried, &c. I had voluntarily delivered the few papers I had. They were placed under a fresh seal and deposited in the Newport custom-house. Those papers are a letter of credit on Latimer & Tavall, of Mayaguez, Porto Rico, of April last, of which I had no use; of three letters from my firm demanding a settlement from a house in the island of Cuba; one to a house in England and finally of another to our correspondents at Liverpool for the settlement of balances in their hands.

I am going to Europe to be at hand to learn the decision of the two great powers on the question of blockades; to move to advantage at the first possible chance by investing our funds in shipments of merchandise most in demand; our house means articles such as seem best for a future time, such as woollens and blankets, &c., for it is customary in autumn to lay in every sort of winter covering and a pair of blankets for each negro, the wants of the army having absorbed all that there was of blankets not only at Wilmington but nearly through the whole country. This article of blankets is most in demand. These blankets were formerly known by the designation of negro blankets. I fear lest the house may have used in its letter the new appellation of soldiers' clothing; if such be the case that is the sole and only charge that can be made against me. To these papers must be added some letters from individuals giving good accounts to their families and to their friends at the North—letters which I was to mail at Halifax; two or three loose sheets with memoranda of merchandise suitable for the market and commissions to be executed for friends; and finally one pointing out what should be done to announce to me whether or no the port was blockaded.

Such, M. Consul, is the exact character of the papers found in my possession. I set at defiance the idea that the result can make in the slightest degree against me; nothing that can justify my arbitrary detention, marked by every circumstance that could render it more disagreeable. I have constantly demanded and persisted in demanding the examination of these papers by competent judges, resigning myself to all the consequences of such examination if it could inculcate me. I have in vain demanded a mitigation of my detention, my provisional liberation on bail; everything has been refused me. Set at liberty Saturday, 17th of August, on parole I was again arrested on Monday, 19th. At first my detention was caused by the need of my evidence in the matter of the schooner Adelso, but on the 17th of August instant I made before a commission the only deposition I could make; but now an accusation of treason is alleged against me. I am not naturalized. I have never taken any oath. I am not traveling in the territory of the United States. I am arbitrarily arrested on an English vessel bound to an English province accidentally driven into American waters by stress of weather at sea. M. Vice-Consul of France, this statement must have given you an idea of the arbitrary and unworthy manner in which I have been treated.

I have no need, M. Consul, to expose the consequences of these acts; you will readily infer them. In claiming your protection and that of our minister at Washington I declare positively and in the most solemn manner that I have never directly or indirectly taken any part in politics or in this actual war either at the South or at the North. My voyage is purely and entirely commercial. My detention exposes my house to immense losses and deprives my numerous family of their only support, besides which the assertion of the national honor and dignity give me the greatest confidence in the measures you will take.

I have the honor to be, M. Consul, with respect, your very humble, obedient servant,

L. DE BEBIAN.

P. S.—Mr. Lovell, of Newport, informed me that there was on board the Adelso a traveler from Wilmington, came along shore to see this voyager and seek to be of use to him. It is he who informed our consul at Providence of my detention. Returning along shore next day with Mr. Nottoway to give me a mark of their interest they were sent away, and have declared to me that they were forbidden to communicate with me. It is my express desire that the contents of this letter or any part of it will not be put in such situation as to be published in any newspaper.

EASTPORT, August 24, 1861.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS, Newport, R. I.

SIR: I am informed that the British schooner Adelso, formerly the A. L. Hyde, of this port, is now detained at your port in custody of U. S. officers for an alleged violation of the blockade. I also am informed that the owners and parties interested in that vessel plead ignorance of their knowledge of the existence of such blockade or their intention to violate it. As a loyal citizen I deem it my duty to inform the Government through you that this schooner Adelso, nominally owned by one Henry Horton, of Saint John, New Brunswick, is well known in this vicinity to be the property of one Capt. John Kay, of Indian Island, a place about two miles east of our town.

Captain Kay called on me some time last spring just previous to his chartering the Adelso (to go out South) and voluntarily stated to me the business that the vessel was to be engaged in; that he had been offered some $300 per month for the use of his vessel by parties claiming to reside in Boston; that she was to go to some Southern port and run the blockade, which it appears she has done. I advised him at the time to keep out of such business; that he was running a great risk and would lose his vessel. He said he had been referred to me to ascertain the standing and responsibility of the parties who then wished to charter the Adelso. I told him that I knew nothing about them, and if he let his vessel he had better get an indemnifying bond for the safe return of his vessel. She left here shortly after in command of Capt. Thomas Kimball, a naturalized American citizen of the United States, resident of this place, with contraband of war for a rebel port out South. The captain and crew were shipped at this port with a full knowledge and understanding of the business that they were engaged in. The vessel, freight and her destination were common subjects of conversation in our streets at the time she left this bay last spring. Our loyal citizens were rejoiced to learn of her capture, and trust that the guilty parties may be held to answer for furnishing aid and comfort to the enemy.

Respectfully, yours,

WINSLOW BATES,

Notary Public and Justice of the Peace.

NEW YORK, August 31, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

MR. SECRETARY: Our father, M. Louis de Bebian, having been shut up for a fortnight at Fort Lafayette we requested our consul through the intervention of our minister to take the necessary measures near your Government to obtain his liberation. The absence of our minister from Washington makes us apprehensive of very long delay in the decision of the matter. Under these circumstances we take the liberty, Mr. Secretary, to make a direct appeal to your kindness, praying you will be so good as to take up the case of our father whose advanced age and feeble health might suffer from too long detention.

Accept, Mr. Secretary, the assurance of our respect and of our deep gratitude.

FORT LAFAYETTE, September 3, 1861.

Lieutenant-Colonel BURKE, U. S. Army,
Commanding Fort Hamilton.

SIR: As I am a citizen of France and was arrested while on my way to that country I have addressed my communications since I have been a prisoner in this place to the consul of my country at New York and to the French minister at Washington. I have not received replies to any of my letters, and this morning a letter from my daughter in New York who goes daily to the consular office informs me that the consul tells her he has not received any letter from me. I have been a prisoner here for fourteen days and have addressed two letters to Count Montholon, the French consul in New York, and my surprise consequently was very great to learn that they had not been received by him. In addressing these letters I have endeavored to conform to the written instructions which have been furnished us in regard to correspondence and you will confer a favor by letting me know why my letters to the consul have not reached their destination and what has been done with them; also if those addressed to the French legation at Washington, one of which contained my passport, have been forwarded. In addition to the letters referred to above which were in the French language I have written two in English which I do not ask about as there has not been time to receive replies to them.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

L. DE BEBIAN,

Lieut. Col. M. BURKE, U. S. Army,

Commanding Fort Hamilton.

SIR: I had a violent diarrhœa in Martinique last May. I have not entirely recovered from it, and again I am very suffering since two days of the same disease. I wish to be permitted to go for a few days to my family in New York to receive such peculiar care as would check the evil on parole, or if preferred on bail or bond to resume my prison at the time appointed. I would consider as a great favor an early answer, because it is fearful in such case to be locked up from 7 o'clock in the evening till 6 o'clock the next morning.

I remain, sir, your obedient,

COLONEL: Lieutenant-General Scott has referred to this Department the letter of M. L. de Bebian to you requesting leave to visit his family in New York in consequence of feeble health. You may allow him this privilege for a fortnight upon his giving his word that he will be ready to return to Fort Lafayette when summoned by the police at his residence should this be necessary.

I am, colonel, your obedient servant,

I, M. L. de Bebian, do give my word that being allowed to visit New York I will return to Fort Hamilton, New York Harbor, on or before the 30th day of September instant or upon being summoned by the police at my residence should this be necessary.

NEW YORK, September 27, 1861.

His Excellency BARON MERCIER, Minister of France, Washington.

M. MINISTER: I take the liberty to place before you the facts relative to my arrest and imprisonment at Fort Lafayette by order of the Government of the United States. I believe it of advantage before all to declare that I have never for a single instant ceased to be a French subject; that I have remained out of the pale of any American naturalization; that I have taken no part in the political questions of the country and it is even with difficulty that I can be considered as having effectively a residence in it.

Connected in interest for five years past with the house of O. G. Parsly, of Wilmington, N. C., almost all my time passes in traveling abroad settling the accounts of the house, collecting its funds, watching its markets and entering into new business arrangements. In the month of May last I set out on a voyage of this kind among the French Antilles and returned the 6th of July. My partners and myself concluded that if it was opportune I should go to England to liquidate some weighty affairs we had with various houses. That being done I was according to circumstances to remain in Europe and keep the funds in hand or else remit their equivalents in the shape of sundry merchandise in case the port of Wilmington should have ceased to be closed to commerce. All this would fall within my habitual employments and in the course of our regular business. I awaited a favorable opportunity for embarking when on the 31st of July the English schooner Adelso, Capt. Thomas Kimball, entered the port of Wilmington seeking a cargo of turpentine and other like merchandise destined for Halifax, Nova Scotia. This port offering no chance for taking passage on the line of steamers to Liverpool I embarked on the Adelso and we went to sea on the 6th of August. I took care to have my passport taken out at Saint Pierre (Martinique) viséed by the French vice-consul at Wilmington.

On the seventh day of our voyage the Adelso was struck by a squall which carried away some of her canvas and the captain found himself obliged to go into Newport, R. I., in distress. He declared whence he came at the custom-house and was soon afterward boarded by a gang of armed men from the Federal cutter Henrietta under the orders of an officer called Pennington, who stated that the schooner was seized. I exhibited my passport to establish my nationality and my character of mere traveler, entirely a stranger to the cargo of the schooner and the vessel also. I requested permission to continue my journey across the United States to go and take at the nearest port a trans-Atlantic steamer. In place of acceding to my request and even without reply I was detained on board and found myself a close prisoner. All communication from without was interdicted; I was not even allowed to make my situation known to the consular agent of France at Providence. I passed five days thus confined with eight sailors in a small cabin where three persons would have difficulty in putting themselves at ease. My trunk having been put under seal I found myself deprived even of the use of my linen.

On the fifth day at evening (August 17) the seals were taken off and the contents of my trunks minutely examined. After seizing upon all the papers found there the custom-house officer told me I might land at Newport, a prisoner on parole.

The next day but one the same functionary intimated to me that I must consider myself as under formal arrest. The French vice-consul at Providence instructed by a third party was taking some steps. After having referred me to the district attorney he came to Newport announcing to me that the U. S. marshal was close at hand for the purpose of releasing me. This functionary in fact soon presented himself but in place of setting me at liberty he rested content with delivering a dispatch to the collector. This person looked at it and left the office in which we were with him. After an absence of half an hour he reappeared and the vice-consul asked for my release. He was answered that precise orders from the Government enjoined him to detain me. The vice-consul requested that I should at least be allowed to remain at Newport for further light on the matter, binding himself on his personal and official responsibility to produce me when required. This request was refused. He was not more fortunate when he wished to know what charges were specifically made against me and to obtain my passport to annex to the report he desired to address to the legation. Thus repulsed in every attempt to protect me the vice-consul was obliged to retire. A few moments after his departure the U. S. marshal came to notify me of a deposition under oath signed by a person quite unknown and who certainly knew no more of me. The deponent declared "to his best knowledge and belief" that I had given aid and comfort to the rebels and that I was consequently guilty of treason. So far as I yet know this is the only foundation on which reliance is had for depriving me of liberty, taking me from my business, obstructing my voyage and sending me as a malefactor in custody of a police officer from Newport to New York to be shut up in Fort Lafayette. There I passed twenty-seven days from August 20 to September 16 shut up—I the eighth—in an unwholesome casemate; deprived of all communication from without, unable even to address myself to the French authorities, my natural protectors, unless at the pleasure of the commandant of the fort; constrained to live at my own cost by reason of the detestable food given to me; restrained from taking more than two hours' exercise daily, and to rest shut up in a suffocating atmosphere from 6 o'clock in the afternoon till 6 in the morning without the privilege of going out of the casemate for any cause whatever. The consequence has been such serious alteration in my health that for that reason I was compelled to ask my conditional release on parole, which was granted on the 16th instant under obligation again to constitute myself a prisoner on the 30th instant.

Under these circumstances, M. Minister, I place myself under your excellency's protection as a French subject imprisoned without cause, without examination, without having had even the privilege of showing my real position to the authorities that have treated me thus arbitrarily. The journals have spoken of heavy sums and of papers compromising me found among my luggage; that is all false. The amounts I had at the time of my arrest were made up of about $250 in gold and a bill of exchange for 5,700 francs. These sums seized at that time have since then been restored, but not so with my other papers which consisted of four letters addressed to different correspondents of the house of O. G. Parsly & Co. and solely devoted to the details and settlement of accounts. A note* annexed contains some instructions about the shipments of merchandise I was to make in case the blockade should have ceased to trammel commerce. Not a single line could be interpreted as implying any political mission.

I should add one particular which is not without importance: it is that the schooner Adelso on which I had taken passage was chartered by a Boston house so that the only real offense that there can be found here—the violation of the blockade—recoils upon a Northern merchant. I hope your excellency will take my condition into your serious consideration, and begging you to excuse the length of this statement, I pray you to believe me,

Your very humble and obedient servant,

L. DE BEBIAN.

No. 828 ARCH STREET, Philadelphia, October 22, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD.

SIR: While in Wilmington, N. C., a year ago I was introduced to a Frenchman called De Bebian. M. de Bebian supported himself by teaching the French language and was in rather straitened circumstances. As I some time ago observed in the public papers an account of the arrest of a man of this name who represented himself as a merchant, and who if I remember aright was about to sail for Europe with a considerable sum of money in his possession I thought it might be the teacher and that the little item of information now furnished might be useful.

I am, sir, respectfully,

GEO. MILLIKEN.

LEGATION OF FRANCE TO THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, January 19, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: Your Department is acquainted with the details of the affair of M. L. de Bebian, imprisoned at Fort Lafayette in the month of August last—and whom at my instance you were so good as to order to be set at liberty after six weeks' detention, however—and the seizure of his papers. M. de Bebian on his arrival at Paris presented to the Imperial Government a claim based on the two points which I had the honor to indicate to you here and I have received orders to call the attention of the Government of the United States to the claim of this Frenchman.

Without wishing to enter into a discussion of the circumstances which appeared to justify in the eyes of the Federal Government the arrest of M. de Bebian I ought none the less to state that the English schooner Adelso on which he was captured with his property and papers entered the port of Wilmington and left it without difficulty, that port not being at that time blockaded, and that she went into Newport under stress; that if these acts perfectly lawful nevertheless gave the Government room to suspect that there were on board this vessel some passengers in contravention of law those passengers ought at any rate to have been subjected to a prompt investigation, the consequences of which if their innocence were established ought necessarily to fall upon the Government.

The Sieur de Bebian was engaged on a voyage of business; was deprived of his freedom for the space of five weeks; the papers of which he was the bearer and which were indispensable to him for procuring the resources which he needed and for his business enterprise not having been returned to him he finds that he has suffered considerable damages, and you will no doubt deem it proper that he should be indemnified. As to the manner in which this indemnity should be fixed upon I will request you, sir, to be so good as to let me know what shall appear to you to offer the best guaranty of perfect equity.

I embrace this occasion, sir, to renew to you the assurance of my high consideration.

HENRI MERCIER.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 23, 1862.

M. HENRI MERCIER, &c.

SIR: Your note of the 19th of January relating to a claim of Louis de Bebian for damages for his detention under suspicion of designs hostile to the United States has been received. I lose no time in informing you that an investigation of the subject has been directed to be made, and I shall communicate to you the result as soon as shall be practicable.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to you, sir, the assurance of my high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

WASHINGTON, February 11, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Having heard of the arrest and imprisonment of M. L. de Bebian, merchant of Wilmington, N. C., from on board of a vessel bound to some neutral port I would inform the Department that as has been stated M. de Bebian is a French subject only according to French jurisprudence which recognizes no alienation of native-born citizens even if such persons shall be naturalized citizens of another nation and therefore under their special protection. As to whether M. de Bebian is a naturalized citizen of the United States I am unable to state, but I am under the impression that he is. He was born in the Island of Guadeloupe, and has resided in Wilmington for ten or twelve years, and is connected with parties in the shipment of lumber, naval stores, &c., to French ports.

My acquaintance with him was formed while I had the honor to represent this Government at the Island of Guadeloupe at the several times he visited that port on business.

M. de Bebian having made certain demands against this Government for his losses and imprisonment I consider it my duty to inform the Department of my knowledge and opinions concerning him, formed while in conversation at the time he was last in this city. I consider him part owner or interested in the cargo of the vessel on board of which he was taken. He informed me that he had delivered a large cargo of lumber at Martinique as late as May last; that at this time he has two or three contracts for cargoes of lumber to be delivered as early as possible, and that he will evade the blockade if possible; also that he has been in the West Indies within the last six months for the purpose of shipping cargoes of salt and molasses to Southern ports.

I feel assured that he has no idea of leaving Wilmington; that he regards the United States as his country of adoption only on pecuniary motives, and will take every advantage to that end. He said to me that he owed no allegiance to the Federal Government, to any State or to the Confederate States, but in this connection I will state that I have no knowledge of his having been the bearer of dispatches or carried any information to the States in rebellion. He informed me that during his stay in France he had conversed with persons high in authority, and had drawn the inference that any interference the South might have expected from the French nation was hopeless. All my conversations with him were carried on in French and therefore not subject to the ear of bystanders.

I remain, sir, your obedient servant,

CHARLES W. KIMBALL,
Late U. S. Consul at Guadeloupe.

Deposition of Seth W. Macy, esq., collector of the port of Newport, R. I., who being duly sworn says:

Am acquainted with M. Louis de Bebian, and first became acquainted with him on the 16th of August, 1861, he being a passenger on board schooner Adelso, seized in Newport, R. I., for running blockade from Wilmington, N. C. Had conversation with him on that and the following days until he was taken in custody of the U. S. marshal and conveyed to New York. He stated that he was a Frenchman by birth, but had been a resident of Wilmington for a number of years; that he had a wife at that place, and that Wilmington was his home. He stated to me that his reasons for leaving Wilmington were on account of the troubled state of the nation, and was going to Europe to remain until the troubles were over. He stated also that he was in reduced circumstances, and he could not see why he was held as a prisoner on board of the vessel because he was in no business and had no reason to fear. To my surprise on going on board the vessel to liberate him I found papers and letters in his possession connecting him with business transactions for purchasing a return cargo to Wilmington, to be composed of army supplies, judiciously made out for that purpose; and also to substantiate his complicity for a return cargo I found a complete set of signals by which they might communicate or converse with parties on shore in relation to the proper time to run the blockade as well as of conversing with each other in person, and from every fact and circumstance connected with him there was no doubt he meant to give aid and comfort to the rebels by importations. When I had the first conversation with him M. de Bebian was very pleasant and courteous in his conduct and conversation and highly praised the Government and people of the United States, but afterward when he was taken in custody by the marshal of this district his language and conduct entirely changed, and he commenced abusing both the Government and people of the United States and myself and other official persons who were present at the time. He also stated that he should go to England and blow the United States Government to hell, and then he would go to France and return with fifty ships of war and have full redress, and other conversations to the same effect.

S. W. MACY,
Collector.

I, William E. Dennis, of the city and county of Newport, do solemnly swear that the foregoing deposition of Seth W. Macy was read in my presence, and that all parts thereof (excepting the conversation between M. de Bebian and the U. S. marshal and other officers) are true to the best of my knowledge and belief. The conversation was not had in my presence.

U. S. CONSULATE, Nantes, February 26, 1862.

Hon. FREDERICK W. SEWARD, Acting Secretary of State.

SIR: I see from a paragraph in the New York Weekly Herald of February 12, 1862, that M. L. de Bebian, of the firm of O. G. Parsly & Co., lumber and commission merchants of Wilmington, N. C., claims damages from Congress for losses and is likely to get them. This gentleman was with me on the City of New York which left New York for Liverpool November 16, 1861. The first day out he told me his story. Said he had been taken prisoner on a vessel bound to Halifax by Mr. Bennett's cutter. Was sent to Fort Warren, thence to Fort Lafayette. Owing to the absence of the French minister he got no hearing until after four weeks when his release came through the direct intervention of the French Government. His firm had made a first venture in cotton consigned to Brown Bros., in England. Fears as to the honesty of the consignees induced them to send De Bebian to Europe. He was greatly offended with what seemed to him the injustice of his treatment and fell into the hands of some insolent Englishmen, one of whom especially urged him to expose in the French press the villainies and tyrannies of the Lincoln Government immediately on his arrival in France, which I think he promised to do. Almost without exception the Englishmen on the ship were loud in unjust denunciations of the North and fellowship with the South.

I thought it my duty to thwart the intentions of this English clique and therefore before reaching Liverpool gained the confidence of M. de Bebian. I found he was an old soldier of the First Napoleon, whose name he revered, and had been at Waterloo. By waking memories of English injustice to the Emperor, the Waterloo defeat and Saint Helena his latent hate of England and Englishmen was aroused and he promised me not to take their advice, but to go quietly about his business in France. He said he should seek redress in a legal way. I could make no objections to that. He assured me he had been offered rank in the rebel army, but declined saying he would not fight the country which had treated him so well, "But," said he to me, "sir, if the occasion comes when I can fight with America against England although I am no longer young and have a young wife and family I would gladly fight in such a cause." As an illustration of how deeply rooted is this national antipathy he one day said, "If I could put the English nation in this ship and could reach the magazine I would blow her up and gladly perish with the hated race." Among the papers found with him was one containing the phrase, "Old Abe has not subdued us yet and I don't believe he will very soon."

He also assured me that at the commencement of the secession movement a large meeting was held in Wilmington favoring separation. A few days after the senior member of his firm called a meeting for the Union. Notice was given and the American flag hung out. With the hour appointed came only twenty-five people. The old man attempted to speak, received some hisses and broke down in the effort. The younger member of the firm tried and met with equally bad success. The old man went home and wept over the ruin of the Union. "Now," said M. de Bebian, "the junior of the firm is a major in the Confederate Army, the son of the senior partner is a captain and the father is with the son."

I give you these details in order that you may judge whether if M. de Bebian is reimbursed by Government for any losses sustained the other members of the firm ought to share his benefits after having under any circumstances so far forgotten their allegiance while so many thousand loyal men are lavishing treasure and life for the dear old honored flag. I hope you will excuse me if this letter should seem unnecessary, but I write it because it was my fortune to meet with and know somewhat of this man and I suppose I have no right to infer that you are familiar with all facts. I mentioned M. de Bebian's name to Mr. Dayton when I passed through Paris coming here.

With assurances of respect, I am, sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN DE LA MONTAGNIE,

U. S. Consul.

Before me, John S. Hollingshead, notary public in the city of Washington, D. C., personally appeared Charles W. Kimball, of Boston, under oath deposed and said that he was and had for a long period been acquainted with M. Louis de Bebian, native of the Island of Guadeloupe, West Indies, and at present resident of Wilmington, N. C.; that at the time of said De Bebian's visit to this city in the month of January last past I had at several times long conversations with him concerning his departure from Wilmington, his confinement at Fort Lafayette and his visit to Europe in which he expressed to me freely his motives in leaving Wilmington which were pecuniary, and also his designs; that he being a Frenchman should not take active part in the war; that he took passage in the schooner Adelso to go to Halifax and thence to Europe for the purpose of purchasing blankets, shoes and articles most in demand for warlike purposes, and which he thought would pay large profits as they were much needed at the South. That he had letters of credit to a large amount belonging to parties residing South. That he had carried a large cargo of hard pine lumber to the West Indies during the summer of 1861, and returned to Wilmington with several contracts for lumber which he should ship as soon as he had a good chance. That his capture and confinement had caused him severe losses.

CHARLES W. KIMBALL.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this 3d day of March, 1862.

LEGATION OF FRANCE TO THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, March 11, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: In conformity with what was agreed upon between us at our last conversation on the affair of M. de Bebian I have the honor to communicate to you six numbered papers, which have been addressed to me by this Frenchman as well as the letter ——,* begging you will please return them to me after you shall have so used them as you shall deem proper.

I seize this occasion to repeat to you, sir, the assurance of my high consideration.

HENRI MERCIER.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE Washington, March 14, 1862.

M. HENRI MERCIER, &c.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 11th instant with the six papers and the letter therein referred to in relation to the case of M. de Bebian which accompanied it.

Be pleased, sir, to accept the assurance of my high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 25, 1862.

M. HENRI MERCIER, &c.

SIR: I have already explained to you that the accidental displacement of certain documents rendered it necessary to defer my reply to your note of the 19th of January last concerning the case of Louis de Bebian.

You are but too well aware, sir, that a party of seditious persons early in the last year organized an insurrection and attempted by civil war to set up a revolutionary government under the name of the Confederate States of America upon the ruins of the constitutional government of the United States of America. You are also well aware that as early as last April this revolutionary movement was accepted by the political body of North Carolina with all its authorities and that the city of Wilmington went under the sway of that pretended government.

You hardly need to be reminded that as early as the month of March last the insurgents laid siege around this capital which siege has only been fully raised within the past month; nor are you a stranger to the fact that agents of the revolutionary authorities have for more than a year been engaged in different parts of the United States endeavoring to extend the insurrection while others being political agents were abroad, some seeking direct intervention by the European states to subvert the American Union, and still others who were commercial agents were engaged in those states in obtaining ships, ordnance, ammunition, military stores and supplies for the revolutionary army.

I beg also to recall to your recollection the fact that so early as the 27th of April the President upon the grounds of that insurrection proclaimed and set on foot a blockade of all the ports in the then insurrectionary district including the port of Wilmington, in the State of North Carolina, and that this blockade was actually established at that port on the 24th day of July last.

* Not found.

You are also aware that on the breaking out of this attempted revolution the President of the United States having issued his proclamation declaring the existence of the insurrection assumed the extraordinary powers vested in him by the Constitution for such emergencies and proceeded to suppress it by prohibiting commercial intercourse and treasonable correspondence between the then insurrectionary portion of the country and the other parts of the United States, and arresting and detaining temporarily when necessary without judicial process parties who were found or suspected on probable grounds to be engaged in contraband trade or treasonable combination and conspiracies against the Government.

On the 17th of August, 1861, the United States collector for the port of Newport, in the State of Rhode Island, by telegraph informed this Government that he had found in the possession of a French passenger letters from O. G. Parsly & Co., of Wilmington, N. C., to Brown, Shipley & Co., of Liverpool, directing this passenger to purchase 5,000 to 10,000 army blankets, 1,000 bags of coffee and —— tons of iron of various sizes, the whole amounting to $40,000 in value and to be shipped in a French or British vessel with signals how to avoid the blockade at Wilmington, N. C., on arrival, and upon this information the collector inquired whether he should detain the passenger. A second dispatch informed the Government that the passenger thus described was L. de Bebian, of Wilmington, N. C. Upon this information directions were given by the Government that De Bebian should be conveyed to Fort Lafayette for safe-keeping and that the papers found in his possession should be sent to the State Department.

Upon inquiring into the case it was found that De Bebian was a native of the Island of Guadeloupe and that he had been residing within the United States and domiciled several years at Wilmington apparently without any intention of ever removing from that place. He was a teacher of the French language, without capital or credit, and was taken into some kind of partnership or agency by the mercantile firm of O. G. Parsly & Co. established in that city. The political character of this firm was revealed by a letter signed by them and addressed to Messrs. J. C. Burnham & Co., Havana. This letter bore the treasonable date of Wilmington, N. C., C. S. A., and closed with the words: "As soon as we whip out our Yankee enemies which will not we think be long we shall again we hope have the pleasure of your correspondence." Another letter of the 5th of August addressed by the same O. G. Parsly & Co. to Barron C. Watson, Liverpool, closed with the words: "Old Abe has not whipped us yet and we hardly think he will." The fact that De Bebian was thus found in the act of carrying treasonable correspondence tending to endanger the public safety at a critical period justified the Government in detaining him until that period shall have passed by.

Subsequent inquiries resulted in the facts described by De Bebian himself, that the junior partner of the firm of O. G. Parsly & Co. was a major in the insurrectionary service and that a son of the senior partner was a captain in the same service and that the father was with the son. Such being the political relations of O. G. Parsly & Co. in whose service or connection De Bebian was attention was next directed to the nature of the business which he was transacting for them. This was learned in part from the circumstances of his arrest and in part from the letters and instructions he carried. He was found on board the schooner Adelso, a vessel of ninety-eight tons, which had been built at Eastport, in the State of Maine, and was then owned by John Kay of that place and was called the O. L. Hyde. Kay as is understood nominally transferred the vessel to a brother-in-law named Harry Horton who changed her name to the Adelso, and she was then dispatched from a British province to Wilmington under the command of Thomas Kimball as master, who claimed to be a British subject, although he had been naturalized as an American citizen. The vessel entered Wilmington by running the blockade, and she left it in the same way on the 6th of August freighted with resin and turpentine bound for Halifax.

The letters and papers which he was conveying were found hidden among his clothing, and these papers showed that he was to purchase for O. G. Parsly & Co., at Liverpool, an assorted cargo and return therewith to Wilmington, N. C. Among the papers thus found were instructions from O. G. Parsly & Co. to Brown, Shipley & Co., Liverpool, giving the invoices for purchases, namely, 5,000 to 10,000 army blankets, 1,000 bags of coffee, ——— tons of iron, round and flat (notoriously needed for military purposes). The whole sum to be thus expended was $40,000. The goods were to be shipped in a French or a British vessel. With these instructions were directions how to give notice by concerted signals of his return and arrival off the coast and to receive in the same way warning of the presence and movement of the blockading forces.

The two letters of O. G. Parsly & Co., which I have already mentioned, directed the foreign mercantile correspondents to whom they were addressed to pay over to Brown, Shipley & Co. certain assets belonging to the former firm, and the last letter asked aid to M. de Bebian in the business with which he was charged. Brown, Shipley & Co. are well-known commercial and political agents of the insurgents and actually engaged in fitting out vessels for them in violation of the blockade and with contraband of war.

Besides the papers mentioned others full of disloyal and treasonable matter written by persons who confessed they were engaged in treasonable occupation were found in possession of De Bebian. One of these letters condemned the Government of the United States and avowed the opinion that it must pretty soon acknowledge the Southern Confederacy.

In view of these circumstances this Government considered that it would be incompatible with the public safety to permit Louis de Bebian to proceed at that moment with his $40,000 to Europe and he was retained under military custody at Fort Lafayette merely as a measure of precaution. As soon as it was supposed that his health might suffer by reason of close confinement he was enlarged, but held under surveillance and shortly thereafter when it was supposed that the treasonable purposes in which he was believed to be engaged were practically defeated this surveillance was removed and he was left at liberty to go to France. After remaining there until he grew weary of exile in his native country this Government at your request made in his behalf permitted him to return to his disloyal associations at Wilmington, in North Carolina.

You will perceive, sir, that De Bebian is not regarded by us as having been an innocent passenger on board the Adelso nor is the Adelso regarded as having been a neutral vessel. Moreover the examination in his case was made with all the promptness that was possible and his discharge from confinement was granted as soon as a prudent regard for the public safety then deeply imperiled would permit.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to you, sir, the assurance of my high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

SIR:

* * * * *

P. S.—Monday, 3d of February.—Last evening General Wool sent up by a flag of truce M. de Bebian, a subject of France living in Wilmington, N. C., and Mrs. Kerr, of Savannah. M. de B. informs me the commissioners arrived at Fort Monroe yesterday.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF NORFOLK,
Norfolk, Va., February 3, 1862.

Hon. J. P. BENJAMIN, Secretary of War.

SIR: I have had an interview with M. de Bebian, the gentleman mentioned in my postscript to letter of yesterday. He was arrested by the Lincoln Government last summer while on his way to Europe and confined in Fort Lafayette. He was released at the instance of the French minister, but his papers were retained and he was refused permission to return to Wilmington, N. C. He asked for and obtained a passport to go to Europe, and Mr. Seward indorsed on it "It is understood M. de B. is not to enter into any of the insurrectionary States." On his arrival at Paris he had an interview with the Emperor who on seeing this indorsement said he should be allowed to return to his place of business, and directed him to call next day on the minister of foreign affairs who would give him the necessary papers. He called accordingly and was furnished with letters to the French minister at Washington. On his arrival in Washington he called on Mr. Seward and asked for a permit to come to Wilmington, which was refused. Next day the French minister called and obtained the permit on which he has come here. He states to me he has made his claim for damages, and he heard it was taken before a committee of Congress. M. de B. proceeds to Wilmington to-day, and I thought his case of sufficient interest to send you an account of it.

I remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

BENJ. HUGER,
Major-General, Commanding.

Case of John Williams, jr.

John Williams, jr., of Norfolk, Va., was arrested by the U. S. marshal in Boston on the 9th day of August, 1861, who reported that the prisoner had held a major's commission in the Confederate Army, and had been arrested on suspicion of treasonable purposes in his visit to Boston. He was confined in Fort Lafayette by direction of the Secretary of State and afterward transferred to Fort Warren. Williams did not conceal the fact of his disloyalty. On the 16th of September, 1861, he was offered his release on condition of taking the oath of allegiance, which he declined to do. On the 26th of the same month he recalled his refusal and offered to take the oath. He having declined to take the oath he was ordered to give security in the sum of $10,000 besides taking the oath, and was ordered to be released on such terms October 4, 1861. It appears that the information upon which Williams was arrested came to Major-General Butler from Fortress Monroe, and that he was arrested by direction of that officer. There was some delay on Williams' part in furnishing the bond required, but he was finally released on the terms before mentioned on the 14th day of November, 1861.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

W. H. SEWARD.

U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE, DISTRICT OF MASSACHUSETTS,
Boston, August 12, 1861.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State of the United States.

SIR: I have the honor to report that in pursuance of the directions contained in your telegram of the 9th instant I have delivered John Williams to Lieut. Col. Martin Burke, at Fort Lafayette, N. Y.

I also desire to report to the Department that I am informed by a reliable source that a Captain Vincent, an old ship master of North Carolina familiar with that entire coast, in company with a wealthy citizen of South Carolina of a French name not remembered correctly, were met on the steamer from this port to Saint John week before last, and from their conversation my informant had no question that their errand was to fit out privateers from some of the ports of British America if they could be obtained either by purchase or fraud or force. The fact has also come to my knowledge that two Southerners were conversed with in the Province of Canada East last week who avowed their business to be to procure vessels for that business, and to the question of where they would get their letters of marque, &c., replied that they were to receive them when they were ready to sail in Boston. Whether these were the same Captain Vincent and friend I do not know.

These taken in connection with the report of a plan on foot in the British Provinces for an organized party to take passage on board some of the steamers plying to this port or New York as passengers and putting on board as freight such armament as they desired, rise on the passage and capture the steamer and take her on a privateering cruise which has been circulated here for some days have led me to believe that there was need of great vigilance on the part of our consuls and agents in Canada to guard against such practices. I have therefore taken the liberty of communicating these facts to the Department that if of any value or materiality they may be acted on. In the matter of the ship Alliance at Saint John reported to be engaged in shipping munitions of war with a design of running the blockade, I have already communicated to the American consul there and at Halifax through Mr. Amory, the U. S. dispatch agent at this port. I should have transmitted this through the same hands but he is absent from the city and I therefore send this direct, and am,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN S. KEYES,

U. S. Marshal.

OFFICE OF U. S. ATTORNEY, Boston, September 10, 1861.

Maj. Gen. BENJAMIN F. BUTLER.

DEAR SIR: The wife and father of John Williams, arrested here and now confined in Fort Lafayette, have been to see me on his behalf, and at their request I have read their papers and heard their statements. The case is wholly out of my power, but I have examined the documents because I understood you desired it. The statements of Mrs. Williams and of the letters seem to show that so long as there were any Union men in Norfolk he was one of them, and that his errand North was a legitimate one. The order for his removal to Fort Lafayette was received from the Secretary of State; and probably the authorities in Baltimore and Washington, the provost-marshal and head of police in these cities, have more information about him than I have, and inquiries should be made of them. There are some circumstances which may entitle his case to favorable consideration. He is a young man with a wife and several little children dependent on him, and if he had any illegal errand here his confinement must have broken up his plans and rendered his visit fruitless.

Very respectfully, yours,

THORNTON K. LOTHROP,

Acting U. S. Attorney.

The story of his having a commission which was in circulation here seems to have sprung in part at least from what is now said to be a joke of his, which is alluded to in one of the letters.*

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Colonel Burke informed me this morning that he had your order for my release on condition of my taking a certain oath a copy of which he handed me. As far as I have been able to ascertain no charge made against me has been sustained and I am unable to understand why I should be compelled to take the oath required. Please inform me if you will accept my parole of honor not to take up arms against the United States or to engage in any treasonable practices. It is my intention to reside in the United States, and you will still have the opportunity of watching my conduct.

By attending to this request at your earliest convenience, you will much oblige,

Lieut. Col. MARTIN BURKE, Fort Lafayette, N. Y.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter containing the communication from John Williams dated September 26, 1861. Having heretofore declined to take the oath of allegiance and being induced to do so now only by "serious matters connected with his family" he must besides taking the oath give good and sufficient bonds in the sum of $10,000 approved by the U. S. district attorney to do no act hostile or injurious to the United States, and that he will neither enter nor hold any correspondence whatever with the insurrectionary States during the present rebellion without permission from the Secretary of State.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 7, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: An order was received from the State Department about two weeks [ago] authorizing Colonel Burke to release me upon taking the oath of allegiance. I declined doing so at the time because I expected to return to my home in Norfolk, Va., and did not know what effect it would have upon me there. Since that time, however, I have made arrangements to remain in the North (Baltimore), and if permitted will now take the necessary obligation. My case was examined by you at the solicitation of my wife and father, and so far as they were able to ascertain no charge against me was sustained and my release was ordered by you. The situation of my wife and family urge me to ask a speedy reply to this communication.

Yours, respectfully,

JNO. WILLIAMS.

GENERAL: Your telegram of the 21st instant relative to the case of John Williams has been received. In reply I have to inform you that on the 4th day of October, 1861, instructions were issued to Lieut. Col. Martin Burke, the commanding officer at Fort Lafayette, to discharge that person on his giving in addition to the oath, &c., a bond in the sum of $10,000 that he would faithfully observe the obligations imposed. Colonel Burke is very prompt in the execution of the orders of this Department. It is inferred that the prisoner has not yet complied with the terms upon which his release was granted.

HIS EXCELLENCY ABRAHAM LINCOLN,

Fully aware as I am that your mind is now overtaxed almost beyond endurance and the very early hour at which I call being unusual, still long, tedious suffering and privation from his want of occupation may apologize for the promptings of a wife to plead in behalf of her great trouble and distress an interview with Your Excellency for but a few moments previous to the press at business hours.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 30, 1861.

W. M. ADDISON, Esq., U. S. District Attorney, Baltimore, Md.

SIR: Application has been made to this Department for instructions to you to draw the bond in the case of John Williams, a prisoner in Fort Lafayette, so as to make the sureties liable severally instead of jointly. If you see no grave objection to such procedure and if the sureties severally are responsible for the amounts pledged you are at liberty to accept the bond in that form.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 31, 1861.

Maj. Gen. JOHN A. DIX, Baltimore, Md.

GENERAL: In answer to your note of the 29th instant which was handed to me by Mrs. Williams I have to state that the U. S. district attorney, William M. Addison, esq., has been authorized to accept the sureties in the case of John Williams severally instead of jointly as you suggest.

I have the honor to be, general, your obedient servant,

OFFICE OF U. S. ATTORNEY, Baltimore, October 31, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 30th instant in reference to the bond of John Williams, a prisoner in Fort Lafayette. In it you state that if I see no grave objection to making the sureties therein liable severally instead of jointly I am at liberty to accept a bond in that form. I presume the object of your letter was to gratify the application of Mrs. Williams that the $10,000 bond might be drawn in such form that each security (four in number) should only be responsible for his proportion of the obligation, to wit, $2,500. She has caused to be prepared the bond so as to obtain that end and presented it to me for my approval. It is herewith inclosed* and I have appended my certificate that the several sureties are worth $2,500 each.

I deem it quite unnecessary to remind the Department that a bond for $10,000 wherein the sureties are severally responsible is a very different one in substance and effect. I have therefore thought it best to transmit the instrument to you in the form in which it is presented to me so that if it has your approval you may send it immediately to the district attorney of New York on whom the father is now in attendance (John Williams, sr.) waiting to add his signature. I will take the liberty to add that Mrs. Williams has requested me to beg the favor of you to dispatch the bond should it meet your approval as soon as possible to New York as the father is detained there at great inconvenience.

I am, sir, your very obedient servant,

WM. MEADE ADDISON,
U. S. Attorney.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: The marshal of the district of Massachusetts having informed me that the district attorney had John Williams' bond for $10,000 duly executed I discharged him yesterday in obedience to your letter to Lieut. Col. Martin Burke, commanding Fort Lafayette, of October 4, 1861. I have the honor to inclose herewith Mr. John Williams' oath.

I am, sir, with the highest respect, your obedient servant,

I, John Williams, do solemnly swear that I will support, protect and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States against all enemies whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, loyalty and allegiance to the same, any ordinance, resolution or law of any State convention or legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and further that I do this with a full determination, pledge and purpose, without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever; and further that I will well and faithfully perform all the duties which may be required of me by law, hereby stipulating that I will neither enter into any of the States in insurrection against the Government of the United States nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States nor transmit any correspondence between disloyal persons with-

Case of Charles J. Faulkner.

Charles J. Faulkner, of Martinsburg, Va., late minister of the United States to France, was arrested at Washington on or about the 12th day of August, 1861, by order of the War Department, and was soon after taken to Fort Lafayette for safe-keeping and was subsequently transferred to Fort Warren. Faulkner himself alleges in a letter to the Secretary of State that he was taken as a hostage for Mr. Magraw, of Pennsylvania, who was held in custody by the rebels, but whether he has any warrant for such assumption or whether any such motive had any influence in prompting his arrest there was deemed to be sufficient cause for his detention in his disloyalty and in the hopes built upon his expected services by the rebels; the Department of State had reliable information that as early as February, 1861, Faulkner had advices from the rebel Mason, of Winchester, Va., that he must hold on and not quit Paris on any consideration; that Virginia would certainly secede on the 20th of February, and on the night of the 3d of March Virginia would take possession of the city of Washington; that the whole Southern Government was perfectly organized to go into operation immediately; also that Faulkner's son distributed secession cockades in Paris in the office of the legation. The Department also had like information that a regiment near Winchester was waiting for Faulkner to be their colonel, and that it was currently reported there that he had sent arms from France to the Southern Confederacy. But a more conclusive proof of the disloyalty of Faulkner was furnished by himself on the 1st of December, 1861, in a proposition to effect an exchange of himself for a loyal citizen of the United States held in captivity by the rebels. In pursuance of that suggestion Faulkner was released on his parole to proceed to Richmond and in a certain time restore the Hon. Alfred Ely, of New York, to his seat in Congress or deliver himself to the order of the Government in Washington. He proceeded to Richmond accordingly and having effected the proposed exchange, and Mr. Ely having been restored to his seat in Congress, Faulkner remained at liberty and in the portion of the country controlled by the rebels.—Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

The commanding general will rescind the pass given to the Hon. Charles J. Faulkner permitting him to cross the lines of the armed forces of the United States, and will detain him in custody unless on being arrested he shall take an oath of allegiance to the United States.*

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF WASHINGTON,
Washington, D. C., August 12, 1861.

Hon. SECRETARY OF STATE:

A lady came to my office to inquire for her husband, Addison T. Munsel, a schoolmaster, who was pressed into the service near Winchester, Va. He is supposed to have made his escape to our lines or have been murdered. This lady was introduced to me by the Rev. B. N. Benton, pastor of the Second Baptist Church, near the navy-yard. He resides 563 Fourth street east, a sound Union man. This lady said to me a regiment near Winchester was waiting for Charles J. Faulkner, our minister to France, to be their colonel, and that it was currently reported there that he had sent arms from France to the Southern Confederacy.

Brigadier-General.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF WASHINGTON,
Washington, D. C., August 12, 1861.

On the 15th of February Faulkner read a letter from Senator Mason, of Virginia, dated U. S. Senate Chamber, that he must hold on and not quit Paris on any consideration; that Virginia would certainly secede on the 20th of February, and on the night of the 3d of March Virginia would take possession of the city of Washington; that the whole Southern Government was perfectly organized to go into operation immediately. Faulkner's son distributed secession cockades in Paris at the legation in the office. This was read and done in the presence of William C. Barney, now in this city.

Personally appeared before me William Chase Barney, a citizen of the United States, and being duly sworn says that on the 28th day of April, 1861, he the said Barney told the Hon. William H. Seward, Secretary of State, that on the 13th day of February, 1861, Charles J. Faulkner, then U. S. minister at Paris, read to him the said Barney a letter from Senator James M. Mason, of Virginia, dated U. S. Senate Chamber, directed to said Faulkner, advising said Faulkner to hold on and not to quit Paris on any consideration; that Virginia would certainly secede the 20th of February, 1861, and in the night of the 3d of March following Virginia would take possession of the city of Washington; that the whole Southern Government was properly organized to go into operation immediately; that said Faulkner's son called Boyd Faulkner distributed secession cockades in the office of the U. S. legation at Paris. The said Barney says that the above statement made to the Secretary of State is true to the best of his knowledge and belief.

ASTOR HOUSE, NEW YORK, August 19, 1861.

SECRETARY OF STATE.

SIR: In conversing with Major Townsend, of Albany, this afternoon he urged me to write you my strong convictions in reference to our late minister to France, now under arrest. Whatever my own conclusions may be—formed from a residence in Europe during the whole time of Mr. Faulkner's official position there and an intimate acquaintance with the opinions of my countrymen abroad—I do not think I possess actual facts which you will consider important.

I only know that Mr. Faulkner is a secessionist—known and acknowledged to be so by all who have come in contact with him during the last two years; that his family are secessionists of the most violent character; that the French ministers with whom he was on terms of intimacy and the members of the Senate all knew his strong feelings of sympathy with the rebels, and that the embassy in Paris was the rendezvous of all the most violent of the traitors so long as he stayed. My wife returned to this country on the same ship with the ladies and children of Mr. Faulkner's family. This was early in May. At that time Virginia was supposed to be hesitating. The son was most bitter and violent in his denunciations of the United States Government, and outspoken in his wishes that his father's State should cast in her lot with South Carolina.

I have no doubt that numberless facts bearing directly upon Mr. Faulkner's treasonable complicity with the rebellion while he was the resident minister of the United States at Paris could be gathered now, but until he was arrested so accustomed had I been in the presence of our late consuls at Liverpool and London to hear rebellion approved that I never thought of obtaining accurate information upon a subject of common fame. There is, however, not a shadow of doubt that the sympathies of the French ministry were enlisted by the most constant efforts of Mr. Faulkner in favor of the seceding States. In fact it is not yet four weeks since the minister of foreign affairs recommended my friend Col. Enrico Fardilla, who was coming to this country, to enlist at the South.

If I can be of any service to the Government in this matter a letter addressed to me at Copake Iron Works, Columbia County, N. Y., will reach me. I beg you will pardon the liberty I have taken, and believe me to be,

With great respect, sir, your obedient servant,

N. S. DODGE.

MILITARY PRISON, MASSACHUSETTS AVENUE,
Washington City, August 29, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Some days ago I addressed to you a communication * apprising you of the fact of my arrest by order of the Secretary of War, and of the reasons which he assigned to me in justification of that act. I endeavored in that letter to show that my arrest was in every point of view unsustainable upon any of the grounds upon which it was placed by that high functionary. I concluded by asking that my letter embracing a protest against the justice and legality of my imprisonment might be laid before the President for his consideration and action. I have received from you no reply to that communication, not even an acknowledgment of its receipt. Since that time I wrote a note to the Secretary of War* informing him that my health was suffering from the unnecessarily close confinement to which I was subjected and requesting an extension of my prison limits with a view to some exercise in the open air. To this I received a reply in which declining to grant my request he informed me that I was no longer his prisoner, and that I was now transferred to the custody of the Secretary of State. No reason was assigned by him for my transfer from his charge to your safe keeping.

Being thus left to conjecture as to its motive I can imagine but one explanation of the fact. It is that you have laid my letter before the President; that he has given just weight to its facts and reasoning, and that he has disapproved the grounds upon which the Secretary of War ordered my arrest and made me his prisoner. If I am correct in this inference I see no reason why I should not have been promptly remitted to my liberty and placed where I stood on the 9th of this month when I received from you a safe conduct and pass to my family in Virginia, unless indeed some facts have been brought to your notice since that day to give a new aspect to my case. Be that as it may I cannot but express my gratification at the assurance that I am once more relieved from the grasp of military power—a power in its nature always irresponsible, which in every age submits to no maxim but sic jubeo stat pro ratione voluntas, and that I am placed in relations, hostile even should they be, with one who has been trained to respect the legal rights of his fellow-men; to acknowledge the paramount importance of justice and law in national as well as individual affairs, and who must feel some regard for the judgment which impartial history will one day pronounce upon his acts.

I have already in my first communication to which I again invite your attention submitted my conduct while abroad to the highest standard by which it could in the nature of things be judged. If any allegations have since been made to impugn the declarations there made it is right and just that I should be apprised of them. Up to this moment I have not heard from any official source nor indeed from any source entitled to the least respect that the Government of the United States has any complaint of any kind against me. If there be one I desire to meet it promptly. You cannot be insensible to the fact that this recent movement of the Secretary of War has already done me much injury here and in Europe.

The public is but little enlightened as to the avowed cause of my arrest, and even if the true explanation of it had been earlier and more generally announced it would be difficult to satisfy those whose good opinion I value especially in Europe that a public minister of the

* Not found.

United States returning to the capital of his country to report himself to his Government and to close the affairs of his mission could have been arrested and imprisoned upon such grounds as the Secretary of War has assigned as the motive of his action. Such a proceeding for such a cause would strike them as incredible. In their conception of the proprieties and probabilities of governmental action nothing could justify such a measure but gross and treasonable infidelity to the diplomatic trust with which I was honored. That deduction I have no doubt even those most inclined to a favorable judgment of me have felt constrained to draw from the fact and circumstances of my arrest; and even in this country where the public judgment has become so deplorably inflamed by the extraordinary state of our affairs the brief editorial in the National Intelligencer giving quasi officially the reason of my arrest is passed by unnoticed and the papers are still filled as they were before with speculations upon the enormous crimes which I must have committed whilst abroad to be thus so long the subject of such close and vigilant governmental detention.

Now, sir, having been transferred to your custody as a prisoner of state and the responsibility of my further detention resting entirely with you I respectfully inquire of you as I did of the Secretary of War why am I thus held in confinement? Of what infidelity to my Government—of what offense against the country am I accused that I should be thus deprived of my liberty? What object suggested by public policy or touching the public safety demands my imprisonment? Dark and unexplained as the whole course of procedure has been it has become to me a subject of painful and embarrassing mystery. In periods of great public danger and excitement like the present individual wrong is often done. The true defense of any government under such circumstances is the reparation of that wrong at the earliest moment that it is made sensible of its error. I trust I shall be favored with a reply to my earnest and respectful inquiries.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. J. FAULKNER.

SEPTEMBER —, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State:

I heard some weeks since of Mr. Faulkner's arrest but hoped by this time that he would be released as he had taken no part in the present contest. Why is he detained in Washington when he went there upon business with the Government feeling it his duty to give an account of his ministerial duties while at the court of France? I am sure Mr. Seward cannot refuse to give me information if my husband will be released or detained until the war is over. If he be detained, will Mr. Seward send me a pass to go from Martinsburg to Washington City? In order for me to receive this pass the letter must be addressed to the care of my daughter, Mrs. G. V. Lott, Everett House, Union Square, New York.

I remain, with respect,

MRS. C. J. FAULKNER.

Memorandum for Captain Willard.

SEPTEMBER 8, 1861.

Captain Willard will oblige me by calling on the Secretary of State, the provost-marshal, or whoever has the right to determine the point, and ascertain if some relaxation of the severe rigor of my confinement cannot be obtained so as to enable me to have the benefit of some exercise. I have already stated to Captain Willard frequently within the last two weeks the injury which I have sustained in my health from my unnecessarily close confinement, and I have explained the parts of my system which have been most painfully and injuriously affected by this long deprivation of exercise. I can hardly presume that the Government has resorted to my imprisonment as a measure of punishment, and yet it has signally operated so in fact. Neither can I for a moment suppose that it has any aims against my life, and yet if the present system be continued much longer it is very certain that my life will soon cease to be a source of dread to my enemies or of value to myself or friends. I am not young as I once was, and naturally of a weak and delicate condition it has only been by the most assiduous attention to my health and amongst other remedies of the resort to regular and systematic exercise that I have been enabled to check the progress of disease and to retain the health which I possessed when I was arrested and first imprisoned.

As a lawyer for many years in full practice I have had an opportunity of knowing something of prison discipline in the State of my birth and I will say that I have never, except in one extraordinary instance, known a malefactor after conviction for a capital or penitentiary offense subjected to a more rigid and vigilant surveillance than I have been since my arrest. The unceasing tread of armed sentinels around my door and windows leaves me not a moment in the twenty-four hours to indulge the delusion that I was born in a land of freedom, and this surveillance is observed toward a man who although imprisoned one month and the Government repeatedly called upon has not avowed to him or to the public that it has against him the shadow of a ground of accusation or complaint.

He can procure his release at present as he could have done at any time hitherto by taking and subscribing an explicit oath of allegiance to the United States excluding all express or implied reservations.

I am, colonel, with respect, your obedient servant,

CHAS. O. WOOD,
Second Lieutenant, Ninth Infantry, Commanding Post.

FORT LAFAYETTE, September 13, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Lieutenant Wood, commandant of this fort, delivered to me last evening a certified copy of a letter addressed by you to Colonel Burke, dated Washington City, September 11, 1861, in which you say that my release from imprisonment can be procured at any moment by taking and subscribing an explicit oath of allegiance to the United States. Before I reply to this proposition I am justified in recurring to a few facts connected with my arrest and in asking some information which may serve for my future guidance.

Near five weeks ago I was arrested by an order from the Secretary of War in the city of Washington to which place I had gone to close the affairs of my mission and where I was resting as I supposed under the protection of a safe conduct and pass inclosed to me in a letter or dispatch from you. On the fourth day after my arrest (15th of August) in reply to an inquiry addressed to the Secretary of War as to the ground of my arrest I was officially informed that I had been arrested and was then held as a hostage for the safe return of Henry S. Magraw, of Pennsylvania, and that I should not be released until Mr. Magraw's return. On Saturday morning, 17th of the same month, the National Intelligencer, a journal well known for its discretion and accuracy of information and which is believed to occupy confidential relations with the Administration, announced substantially the same motive as the cause of my arrest. The records of that portion of the Eighth Infantry under the command of Captain Willard, in whose charge I was placed for the first month of my imprisonment and which was used as a military police under the immediate control of the Secretary of War, show that such alone was the cause assigned for my arrest and that my detention was to continue until Mr. Magraw's return. After my arrest I was assigned quarters in the city of Washington separate both from prisoners of war and political prisoners. There was at least a seeming fitness in that arrangement, for as I had not been captured whilst engaged in any military enterprise against the authority of the United States and as I had been arrested without a charge or accusation of any kind against my fidelity and was held in the anomalous condition of a hostage, of which so far as I am informed I was the only example North or South, it was not proper that I should be confounded with those against whom the Government had or supposed it had grave charges of complaint.

On Monday last I was by an order from the Secretary of War removed to this place. A small casemate of this somber and isolated fortification accommodates eight persons including myself. Through three small apertures a dim and imperfect light is admitted—not sufficient to enable the occupants to read or write unless when the door is open, which can only be when allowed by the state of the weather and the regulations of the fort. From the limited character of the accommodations the opportunities for lighting can only be enjoyed by each prisoner in turn. In another casemate near me are twenty-four prisoners in chains. I pretend not to know for what crime these men are incarcerated and ironed, but I must be allowed to say that I think the Government is acting with extraordinary hardship toward me, when without its ability to allege any matter of offense of any kind against me it nevertheless places me in the same prison and under many of the same regulations with those whom it feels justified in treating as the worst and most dangerous of malefactors.

I have myself written to no person in Virginia or in any other place informing them of the ground of my arrest as avowed by the Secretary of War, and consequently I have not directly or indirectly solicited the interposition of any person to effectuate the release of Mr. Magraw that I might thereby acquire my own freedom. I could not consistently have done so, as must be very obvious to those who have read the protests against my imprisonment addressed to yourself and the Attorney-General. Nevertheless I have strong reason for believing that the seemingly authoritative annunciation of the cause of my arrest contained in the National Intelligencer has reached my family in Virginia, and that their influence has been exerted to accomplish the liberation of Mr. Magraw in the hope thereby of conferring a benefit upon me. Such a course was quite natural with females, who always act more under the influence of their affections than in conformity to any standard of political principle. To what extent this influence has operated I do not know, but I observe the public journals announce the probability of the speedy return of Mr. Magraw. How far I should feel at liberty myself to submit to such an exchange should the contingency occur it is not necessary for me at this time to say.

In view of these facts I respectfully desire to know whether the proposition which you now submit authorizing my release upon taking the prescribed oath is designed to anticipate the condition originally annexed to my arrest or whether the Government now disavows that cause for my arrest with the condition necessarily implied in it, and means to hold me a prisoner in disregard of that condition whether Mr. Magraw shall be hereafter released by those at Richmond who now have the control of his liberty or not. You will oblige me by a reply to these inquiries.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. J. FAULKNER.

I thought it an unusual hour but of course ordered the boat for him to go over. I called his attention to your letter which strictly speaking only admitted him on one visit but I have taken upon myself to admit on your letters of similar kind and upon other high authority at Washington the persons named to two and sometimes three interviews. I understand that Mr. Faulkner's friends consider your permit as permanent, entitling them to other visits. Please inform me if I am so to understand it and also other letters of similar nature.

FORT LAFAYETTE, September 25, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: A severe indisposition for some days past has prevented an earlier response to your letter to Colonel Burke of the 11th of the present month. Discouraged by the neglect with which all my previous communications have been treated, nothing but a sense of duty has prompted this additional trespass on your time, and as this will in all probability be the last letter which I shall address to you during the period of my imprisonment, be that long or short, I must express the hope that you will at least do me the favor to read it. On the 13th instant I addressed to you some inquiries which I deemed pertinent and proper. To these inquiries I have as usual received no reply. I now avail myself of the earliest moment of my convalescence to respond to the views which you take of my case in your letter to Colonel Burke.

There are two conclusions which flow necessarily from your letter. First, that the Government now disavows the ground upon which I was arrested on the 12th of August by order of the Secretary of War and that henceforth it does not hold me as a hostage for the safe return of Mr. Magraw, of Pennsylvania. Second, that after an imprisonment of upward of six weeks, during which time every opportunity has been afforded for the fullest inquiry into my conduct and relations whilst in Europe, the Government is forced to the admission that no act has been done by me upon which it can found even an accusation of infidelity or disloyalty.

In the absence then of all proof or even allegation that I have done anything inconsistent with the high and responsible trust with which I have been honored by the Government your letter which is somewhat in the nature of an indictment charges, first, that I am understood to acknowledge and obey the authorities acting in the State of Virginia, by which of course you mean the authorities of what is called the Confederate States; second, that the Government is informed and believes that my sympathies are with those authorities; third, that it is expected that my services as well as influence will be employed in behalf of the cause which those authorities are sustaining.

Assuming that the Government has repudiated the original and real cause of my arrest it is then upon these vague understandings, beliefs and expectations of what my personal opinions are and of what my future conduct may be that I have for more than six weeks been robbed of my liberty, torn from all association with my family and friends, now lodged in a distant and isolated fortress, exposed to the permanent injury of my health, treated as a common malefactor and subjected to irreparable pecuniary loss. I do no more than justice to the intelligence and virtue of every judicial tribunal from the Aroostook to the Potomac when I assert that there is not one of them which would not dismiss such a complaint against a citizen upon its own showing without defense or examination. But I will reply to your series of conjectures.

First, I deny that I have ever by act, word or correspondence acknowledged or obeyed the authorities now acting in Virginia; second, what may be my sympathies (if it be allowable for man for such a purpose to penetrate the human heart) may I admit present a subject for argument, inference and conjecture founded upon evidence, past party associations and opinions expressed prior to the late fatal rupture of the peace of the country, although every day's experience of the conduct of men now on the stage of action shows how fallacious would be the conclusions drawn from such premises, but since the present rupture, having been absent from the country and in no way connected with its interior movements, my sympathies whether for or against the Union are known only to myself and I defy the production of any credible testimony as to their expression by words or deeds since the present unhappy struggle commenced; third, the expectation that my services and influence will be employed in behalf of the authorities acting in Virginia rests upon no foundation or evidence of any kind whatever, and is one of those intangible surmises alike incapable of proof or refutation and which should not be made the basis of any action against the liberty of a citizen. It is impossible that one as familiar as you are with the principles of constitutional law can for one moment believe that you are justified in the eyes of God or man in depriving me of my liberty upon such unsubstantial pretenses. This is virtually conceded by your letter. It in effect admits that there is no just ground for my detention and you suppose that you open a very easy door for my escape by instructing Colonel Burke that I can release myself at any moment from imprisonment by taking an oath of allegiance to the United States.

I have often taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States when tendered to me in accordance with that Constitution and the laws of the land, and I should do so again if ever placed in a position where that requirement should legally and properly be demanded of me. The condition which you impose may thus at first sight not seem very formidable and yet when I present, as I shall in the most perfect spirit of candor, my objections to your proposal, I think you will concur with me that if persisted in by the Government it will be equivalent to a sentence of indefinite imprisonment against me.

My objections to the oath which you prescribe are:

First. That it is without sanction or authority of law. As a Christian I cannot take an oath which in my conscience I believe to be unauthorized by law, and as a citizen I cannot make myself a party to so manifest an usurpation of executive power. It can scarcely be necessary for me to say to a jurist of your intelligence and high legal reputation that an oath is one of those solemn appeals to the Divinity prescribed by the interests and necessities of society, and held to be so important in its consequences to the State and to the individual concerned that no power short of the supreme authority of a community is competent to authorize its administration and to provide the penalties for its violation. The tender and enforcement of an oath by an officer of the Federal Government where not prescribed by some existing law is in my judgment a grave misdemeanor for which he should be held judicially responsible. I might safely challenge the production in a single instance in any State of this confederacy where an oath is ever sought to be enforced except in pursuance of some statute emanating from the legislative power of that State. Congress did at its last session authorize the administration of an oath of allegiance to all persons holding civil and military appointments under the Government and the penalty prescribed for noncompliance with the law is not imprisonment but simply dismissal from office. So in like manner Congress has required an oath of allegiance from every foreigner seeking to become a citizen of the United States. But I know of no law of Congress which authorizes the President or any of his subordinate agents to administer the oath of allegiance to a native-born citizen of the United States holding no office or employment under the Federal Government. To take the oath therefore which you prescribe to me would make me in my opinion a party to a clear violation of law and to a manifest usurpation and abuse of executive power.

Second. The condition which you seek to impose establishes an invidious and offensive discrimination against my rights as a citizen to which I could not submit without dishonor. To concede your right to single me out of the great mass of my fellow-citizens and to impose upon me a political test, which is neither authorized by law nor exacted as a general rule of policy, would be to concede that my political rights in the community are inferior to others, a concession which I will never make so long as I adhere to those great principles of political equality upon which our institutions are founded. In addition to this general view it is within my own personal knowledge that two individuals who were confined in the same casemate with myself in the fort and who were arrested upon allegations of disloyalty far more specific than any attributed to me have been discharged without the requirement of the oath and upon their simple parole of honor not to do any act hostile to the United States during the existing troubles.

Third. The letter in which you submit this condition to me cannot be otherwise regarded than as a personal indignity. You assume without a particle of evidence that I am an enemy to the Government of the United States; that my heart is filled with sympathy with rebellion and with treason to the Union, and yet you present to me an oath which if I took holding the sentiments which you so gratuitously ascribe to me and which you make the justification for tendering it to me would make me guilty of moral if not of legal perjury in the eyes of God and man.

Fourth. Of all the foreign ministers accredited by the United States to the Governments of Europe and America I am the only one who has been selected for the imposition of this illegal test, and yet I have only to invite you to the testimony of my fellow-citizens abroad and to the records of your own Department to show that in maintaining the national honor and the national flag and in a faithful and zealous discharge of my duties to the Government I need not shrink from comparison with any man in the foreign service of the country.

Fifth. To take the oath which you prescribe would under existing circumstances furnish no evidence of my loyalty. It might be proof of my subserviency and cowardice. It could afford no guarantee of heart-felt devotion to the Union. To say to a prisoner that the bars of his dungeon shall be forever closed upon him unless he swears to be true to the Government may make a hypocrite and a knave. It cannot make a good citizen or a true patriot. Loyalty springs from the heart; it cannot be manufactured by thumbscrews, political tests or prisons.

Sixth. From the day of my arrest up to the present moment my tongue has been silenced and my hands paralyzed in my defense. In the meantime calumny has been unceasing in its assaults upon me.

In not one leading paper deserving patronage and support from the Government have I been represented otherwise than as a traitor. There is scarcely an act of official perfidy of which a minister could have been guilty that has not been falsely ascribed to me. Before I had even received a copy of your letter of the 11th of September writers having access to the bureaus of the Government were familiar with its contents and announced the test that was to be applied to me, and they accompanied it with the statement that although I was clearly and unquestionably guilty of treason and could upon the clearest evidence be convicted of it before a jury yet as an act of clemency I would be allowed to escape if I complied with this requirement of the Secretary of State. I cannot accept your clemency on such terms. I cannot rest under imputations which a submission to your requirements would only fortify and confirm. If I am guilty of any official infidelity or of treason let me be tried and punished. If I am innocent of all such charges I should be unconditionally released. It is not becoming a great Government thus to palter with the interests of human liberty. Neither would it be just to my own character to accept of any such equivocal order of release.

Seventh and lastly. During the period which led to the existing difficulties I was not only absent in Europe but I was there the accredited representative of the Government of the United States, and if a love and veneration for that system of government founded by the fathers of the Republic had been without their proper influence on my conduct my official position at least utterly forbade my having any participation directly or indirectly in any movement for the overthrow of the Federal Union. I have ever made it not less a matter of pride than of duty to punctiliously and scrupulously [be] faithful to every trust public or private with which I have been honored. Of this you have satisfactory proof in my correspondence and relations with your Department, and I have no doubt in the correspondence and testimony of my successor in office. As I have already informed you I returned to the United States under all the moral responsibilities of that trust although the legal tenure of my appointment had previously ceased. I came back to perform my duties as a citizen and a patriot. I came here as a free man to survey the field of action and to determine by the light of my own judgment the part which duty and patriotism required me to pursue in the present crisis. No one has ever heard from me in conversation or has ever learned from me by correspondence what that decision would be. Indeed ignorant of much that had transpired in the country during my absence I felt it due to my own character and position to reserve the decision of my course until after my return and until I had an opportunity of learning much that it was not possible for me to acquire satisfactorily abroad. I arrived here then without a single committal as to the future that could swerve my judgment as to my course. I cherished the hope, probably an idle and presumptuous one, that the position of total noncomplicity with all the events that then embarrassed the country might furnish, especially if I concluded to reside in Virginia, an opportunity of some signal service to the country. My purpose therefore was to retire upon my estate and there await the progress of events to determine what extent this position which absence and accident gave me might be made useful to the country. It is manifest that such a position which I allude to required free and unconstrained action. It is a freeman alone who can confer with freemen about their rights and interests. They would not take counsel from a slave. But you prefer a course that would rob me of all the merit of my position if my conclusions led me to support the cause of the Union. It deprives me of all deliberation and free will. It proposes to rivet patriotism upon me by fetters and to grind loyalty into me by the horrors of the prison. It seeks to anticipate the regular conclusions of my own reason and judgment and to make me a patriot by the potent process of the dungeon. I cannot accept your prescription. Arbitrary power and brute force have given you control over my body but you can exercise none over the mind. I cannot be forced by any threat or menace of the Government to throw away all my chances and capacities for public service in the future and to permit myself to be presented before the country as one who has taken his position on the present eventful crisis of the country not by the light of his own reason and patriotism but under a threat of perpetual imprisonment by the Government. Such submission on my part would consign me to deserved contempt and to perpetual inactivity. Even the Union men of Virginia would spurn my counsel and turn their backs upon my recommendations.

I need not trouble you with further remarks. The facts of my case are fully before the Government. It has power to prolong my imprisonment. It will have to use that power under a just responsibility to the country and to the civilized world.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. J. FAULKNER.

WASHINGTON, September 26, 1861.

Hon. JUDAH P. BENJAMIN, Richmond, Va.

DEAR BENJAMIN: I suppose that I may abandon all hope of having you with me at the argument of the Alexander case in the Supreme Court. The continuance or dismissal as I suppose will be determined upon all of the cases from the seceded States, making certain the hearing of ours at the next term. As you will not be able to be present and I am anxious that you save your fee cannot you send a full brief?

Differ as we may—and do totally—on the questions growing out of the deplorable crisis in which we are I shall ever remember with great pleasure the many pleasant hours I have spent with you and lament our separation, which I fear is to be forever.

Among the sad consequences growing out of the present strife is the arrest of gentlemen on both sides in whom I am sure you feel with me a friendly interest. Here my and your friend, Mr. Faulkner, is under arrest and has been for many weeks. He is now in Fort Lafayette, N. Y. You have I am told Mr. Harry Magraw. Now I have no doubt that if Magraw was discharged I could at once procure the discharge of Faulkner. Mr. Davis knows me well enough to be satisfied that I would endeavor in good faith to carry out such a purpose, and my relation to the Administration here is such that I am as certain as I can be of any future event that the endeavor would be successful. Mr. Faulkner I have long known intimately, and I am most anxious to relieve him from his present condition and restore him to his family, deeply distressed, as they cannot but be, at his imprisonment. Magraw's motive in visiting your camp was a humane one and however technically considered he may have rendered himself liable to arrest his is not a case for extreme rigor.

Hoping that you will find an opportunity to write me and that my suggestion as to Faulkner and Magraw may be carried out, I am sincerely and will continue, happen what will, to be your friend,

REVERDY JOHNSON.

RICHMOND, September 30, 1861.

Hon. REVERDY JOHNSON, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JOHNSON: Colonel Phillips has delivered to me your letter of the 26th instant, and I am much gratified to learn that separated as we are toto cælo in our principles and convictions upon the subject of this contest now raging in the country you still remember with the same pleasure that I do our past intercourse. I beg you will present my best and kindest regards to Mrs. Johnson, who seemed with a woman's true instincts to feel the approach of the calamitous war now devastating our land. In relation to the fee I can do nothing. If that is lost it will be but one of the numerous sacrifices that I have cheerfully made for what I believe to be man's highest duty to his country.

I much regret that your letters did not reach me a week or two later. I had already with the President's consent determined on the release of Mr. Harry Magraw and Mr. Arnold Harris,* after a full examination and report on their case by a commissioner specially appointed for that purpose. The object of the imprisonment in vindicating the rights of this Government as a belligerent had been attained, and it would have been equally useless and cruel to have continued it any longer. I beg you therefore distinctly to understand that the liberation of Mr. Magraw is made without the slightest reference to your kind proposal to intercede for the liberation of Mr. Faulkner. He would have been liberated if your letter had not reached me. He would be liberated now if I had the fullest assurance that Faulkner would be detained in confinement till the close of the war. Forgive me for being so persistent on this point.

You write without the clogs of official position. I am in a different position, and am compelled to have it distinctly understood that I am no party to any exchange of prisoners. I would never consent to any other than the usual, open, indiscriminate exchange known to the laws of war. I could be no party to any favoritism in selecting particular persons for the benefits of this humane provision of the laws of war and excluding others. I repeat then that without wishing to do the least injury to poor Faulkner, but on the contrary anxious to do him service in any proper way I hold you totally absolved from all promise of exertion in his favor, and that his release from prison if he is released must rest on the ground of his being unjustly detained. At least that is the only footing on which I can consent to regard it.

Renewing my kindest memories to your whole family, I remain, truly, yours,

J. P. BENJAMIN.

P. S.—If you are in correspondence with our friends Barron don't fail to mention me to them with the most friendly regard.

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 13, 1861.

Col. MARTIN BURKE.

SIR: The sad and distressing intelligence which I receive of the condition of my family in Virginia, my inability whilst confined here as a prisoner to offer to them any consolation in their afflictions or even to make any provision for their necessities, my solicitude for my children who are at an age to demand imperiously the care and restraining influence of a parent, all combine to induce me to inquire if you have any authority to extend to me a release from my present imprisonment upon a parole of honor similar to that which has already been extended to several prisoners at this fort. I confess my extreme reluctance in making this application. I believe the honor, the good faith and the true policy of the Government would dictate my unconditional release, and I believe that my usefulness as a citizen of the United States will be materially impaired by any restraint upon my perfect freedom of deliberation and action. Nevertheless if the Government shall determine otherwise I must of course submit to its terms. I am a prisoner absolutely in its power, and there is no other Government to which I have any right to appeal to take an interest in my defense. I am here without a charge or an accusation of any kind against me, and from a simple apprehension of the Government that if at liberty as expressed in the letter of the Secretary of State to you I might contribute my "influence and services" to the cause of the Confederate States. I will not discuss the grounds upon which Mr. Seward has reached this conclusion, but I presume a parole of honor given by me that I will do no act hostile to the United States during the existing troubles would be a guaranty which the Secretary of State, who has some knowledge of my character, would promptly recognize as an ample guaranty against any such action on my part. I have now been in close confinement as a prisoner upward of two months. If I could perceive that my suffering and privations here could in any manner be made instrumental to the good of the country I could easily reconcile myself to any protracted term of imprisonment; but I see no benefit from it to the country, but utter ruin and impoverishment to my family. I therefore respectfully make this inquiry of you trusting that you will with your characteristic promptitude and urbanity give me an early answer.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. J. FAULKNER.

BURLINGTON, November 22, 1861.

HON. W. H. SEWARD.

MY DEAR SIR: Will you permit me to intrude upon your valuable time with one word in behalf of Mr. Faulkner, now confined at Fort Warren? I am fully aware that the oath of allegiance has been tendered him as a condition of his release but this with him is an impossibility. It would forfeit his entire property and leave himself and family beggars. I think I can promise that he will give his parole not in any way to serve against this Government in future. I know from frequent conversations with him that his views in reference to the present struggle are of the most moderate kind, and I am satisfied that had his voice been potential at the South this country to-day would not be agonized with the fearful throes of civil war. Can his release not be had upon giving his parole? His case is a peculiarly distressing one. For seven months he has not seen his family and for four months he has had no communication with them.

Will you favor me with reply to this and oblige, your obedient servant,

JAMES W. WALL.

FORT WARREN, Boston Harbor, December 1, 1861.

Hon. REUBEN E. FENTON.

DEAR SIR: I perceive from the papers that the constituents of the Hon. Alfred Ely* are forwarding to President Lincoln memorials urging his exchange for some one now held by the Federal Government in confinement. Permit me through you and the New York delegation in Congress to submit the following proposition to President Lincoln or Secretary Seward: I will give my parole of honor with any other security deemed necessary by the Secretary of State, if permitted to proceed on to Richmond, that I will in a time to be prescribed by the Secretary of State restore Mr. Ely to his seat in Congress or deliver myself to the order of the Government in Washington City.

I am, truly and respectfully, yours,

CHAS. J. FAULKNER.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 5, 1861.

Colonel DIMICK, Fort Warren, Boston.

COLONEL: You are hereby directed to release from custody Charles J. Faulkner, a prisoner confined in Fort Warren, on his giving his parole of honor that he will return and surrender himself to you within thirty days unless within twenty days the Hon. Alfred Ely shall be immediately released from the confinement in which he is now held at Richmond by the insurgents and sent within the lines of the U. S. forces, and that meanwhile Mr. Faulkner will not do any act hostile to the Government of the United States or give any information calculated to aid the insurgents. You will at the same time deliver to him the inclosed passport enabling him to pass through the lines of the U. S. Army.

Case of Thomas S. Serrill.

Thomas S. Serrill was arrested at New York upon a warrant obtained against him by U. S. District Attorney Smith about August 16, 1861, and committed to Fort Lafayette by order of the Secretary of State. He was charged with treason; having been to England and there made arrangements with leading bankers to secure a loan for the Southern Confederacy and with bringing £20,000 of such loan with him for the use of said Confederacy. An order was issued from the Department of State dated September 3, 1861, directing Colonel Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to release Serrill on his taking the oath of allegiance. He was accordingly released September 5, 1861.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

OFFICE OF THE U. S. DISTRICT ATTORNEY,
New York, August 16, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

SIR: I have obtained a warrant of arrest against Thomas Steele Serrill charging him with treason. We can prove that on his passage on the steamer Persia which has just arrived here he stated that he had seen all the bankers in England; that he could get as much money for the Southern Confederacy as he wanted; that he had in his possession £20,000 sterling which he should carry down there; that he had been presented a set of silver by the bankers in England for his own use. We found on his person £40,000 in Bank of England notes. This is all the testimony I have been able to gather to-day. He is committed for examination before a commissioner upon whom I can rely. He has employed good counsel. Perhaps you will deem it best to transfer him to the military authorities.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. DELAFIELD SMITH,
U. S. District Attorney.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: In reply to your communication of the 22d instant* I beg leave to state that as represented to the custom-house officers by the witnesses whose names are given below Mr. Serrill on his passage to this country on the steamer Persia repeatedly stated that he had been to England and had had interviews with the leading bankers and had made arrangements to secure a loan for the Southern Confederacy; that he had £20,000 of such loan with him, which was to be used by the Confederate States for the benefit of their army; that he expressed himself strongly in favor of the rebellion and as determined to aid them by all means in his power. He also stated that he was en route for New Orleans with the funds in his possession. This statement is made to me by Rufus F. Andrews, esq., surveyor of this port. The witnesses are as follows: John H. Wray, with A. T. Stewart & Co.; George A. Jackson, 647 Broadway, New York; John Morrison, 278 Washington street; J. C. Bernhard, 41 Warren street; Thomas J. Brown, Alexander

E. DELAFIELD SMITH, Esq.,

U. S. Attorney for the Southern District of New York.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Your letter of the 24th instant in relation to the testimony in the Serrill case was this morning received. I wrote on the 23d instant as requested by your favor of the 22d and received on the day when I answered it. I inclose a copy of my communication of the 23d instant which will place in your hands all the information under my control. Should you desire any inquiries instituted in this city my services will be cheerfully at your disposal.

I am, sir, very truly, your obedient servant,

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, August 27, 1861.

E. DELAFIELD SMITH, Esq.,

U. S. Attorney for the Southern District of New York.

SIR: Your letter of the 23d instant relative to the case of Serrill, a prisoner at Fort Lafayette, has been received. The facts and the references mentioned in your communication go far toward making out a strong prima facie case against Serrill. On the other hand a letter* to the Department of the 22d instant from Clarkson N. Potter, of New York, and other papers* tending to exculpate the prisoner are herewith inclosed. It must be confessed that these in a measure at least must be allowed to counteract the adverse testimony. With a view, however, to throw further light on the case the Secretary wishes that you would yourself or that you would request Mr. Evarts to proceed to Fort Lafayette, examine Serrill in connection with the proof on both sides, take down the examination in writing and forward it hither with the papers, in order that the expediency of further detaining him may be determined.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

Assistant Secretary.

SIR: Your communication of the 27th instant in relation to the case of Mr. Serrill with the accompanying book and letters was this day received. Mr. Smith is absent from this city but is daily expected to return, and Mr. Evarts is in Vermont. I learn from his law partner that he is not to return for several weeks. Col. MARTIN BURKE, Fort Hamilton, N. Y.

COLONEL: From trustworthy representations which have been made to this Department it is thought that the discharge of Thomas S. Serrill now confined in Fort Lafayette may compatibly with the public interest be granted upon the condition of his swearing and subscribing before a magistrate the accompanying oath of allegiance. You will inform him of the condition, and if it be accepted the form of oath when executed must be returned to this Department for file.

I am, colonel, your very obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

OFFICE OF THE U. S. DISTRICT ATTORNEY,
New York, September 4, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

SIR: On reaching home Monday last after a short absence I found your letter directing an examination of Serrill by myself personally or by Mr. Evarts. As the examination may be quite likely to require his discharge I thought it wise to have our action sustained by the opinion of a lawyer of Mr. Evarts' position having no official connection with the Government. Mr. Evarts has come from the country in response to a telegraphic dispatch from me. We are now engaged in the examination and shall proceed to Fort Lafayette to-morrow. I will transmit minutes of the examination and Mr. Evarts' opinion to you.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

OFFICE OF THE U. S. DISTRICT ATTORNEY,
New York, September 6, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

SIR: In the matter of Thomas Steele Serrill Mr. Evarts and myself took sundry depositions and were about to proceed to Fort Lafayette when Mr. Blatchford showed us your letter in which you state that you have directed his discharge. I agree with Mr. Evarts, a copy of whose letter to me follows below, that as a condition of the release of his property Serrill should be required under the circumstances to pay the expenses of his arrest and examination. From a conversation with his counsel, Mr. Potter, I infer that he regards this suggestion as proper and that I should have no difficulty in so arranging in relation to a redelivery to him of the bank notes and accounts taken from his person. The bank notes are in the hands of the officers of the customs but I presume they would deliver them upon my request.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. DELAFIELD SMITH,

E. DELAFIELD SMITH, Esq., U. S. Attorney.

DEAR SIR: The decision of the Government to release Serrill upon his taking the oath of allegiance renders any further prosecution of the examination I had commenced unnecessary. I had made, however, a sufficient examination in the matter to satisfy myself that the arrest of the prisoner was not only fully justified by his own statements made on shipboard but that the Government would have been inattentive to its duty if he had been suffered to escape arrest. As Mr. S. has brought upon himself this intervention of the Government it strikes me as very proper that as a condition to the release of his property he should be required to reimburse the expenses which his detention and examination have occasioned.

Yours, very truly,

WM. M. EVARTS.

PHILADELPHIA, September 16, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: On Thursday last I again presented to Mr. Secretary Chase your order and accompanying lines for the delivery of the package of post notes in the Treasurer's possession and it was a second time refused, but I left Washington with Mr. Chase's promise that they should be sent by Friday's mail to my address here. They have not yet come. Without your personal interference I doubt their coming. The letter, credits, &c., taken from my trunk have not reached me.

Believe me, sir, your obedient servant,

THOMAS S. SERRILL.

Case of Charles Kopperl.

Charles Kopperl, of Carroll County, Miss., was arrested in New York August 17, 1861, and by direction of the Secretary of State was conveyed to Fort Lafayette. Kopperl was charged with having been in the military service of the so-called Confederate States. The affidavit of J. M. Wardwell, of New York, who was in Mississippi in April, 1861, states that in conversation with Kopperl he learned that he was then engaged in raising a cavalry company, and that he was captain thereof. The company was for the Confederate service. He made no secret of the business he was engaged upon. November 1, 1861, Kopperl with others was transferred to Fort Warren, Boston, Mass. January 30, 1862, an order was issued from the Department of State directing Colonel Dimick to release Kopperl on his parole of honor to return into custody at Fort Warren within thirty days unless within twenty days Hugh Watson, who was captured at Pamlico Sound, should be released by the insurrectionary government and sent within the lines of the U. S. forces. Kopperl was accordingly released February 4, 1862.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

SIR: Having been informed that efforts are being renewed to obtain the release of Charles Kopperl, of Carroll County, Miss., who is now detained at Fort Lafayette I take occasion to inclose to you the affidavit of Mr. Jeremiah M. METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT, City of New York, ss:

I, Jeremiah M. Wardwell, being duly sworn, do depose and say as follows: I was at Vaiden, Carroll County, Miss., in April last, where I saw Charles Kopperl, who is now as I am informed detained in Fort Lafayette. In conversation with him I learned that he was then engaged in raising a cavalry company and that he was captain thereof. The company was for the Confederate service. He made no secret of the business he was engaged upon.

JEREMIAH M. WARDWELL.

Sworn before me this 18th day of October, 1861.

S. C. HAWLEY,
Chief Clerk.

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 24, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD.

SIR: I respectfully and earnestly apply to you for my release. I am an Austrian by birth, a naturalized citizen of the United States and as such have taken the oath of allegiance and have never taken any other. I have been for many years a resident and merchant of Carroll County, Miss., and have been in the habit of spending my summers at the North with my family. My daughter has been for some time in New York under the medical charge of Doctor Agnew. After direct communication was cut off between the United States and the Confederate States, being very anxious to hear from my daughter I went to Louisville for the purpose of communicating with her. I did so by telegraph and upon the receipt of the telegraph* herewith annexed I proceeded at once to New York where I arrived on the 13th of August and was soon after arrested. I assure you I am a Union man, always opposed to secession. I had no other object in coming North than to see my daughter. I have never carried on any political correspondence detrimental to the Government of the United States. I have never taken up arms against the Government and hold no commission and no position in the Army of the Confederate States. I have a large property at the South which would certainly be confiscated and converted to the use of the Confederate States did I again take the oath of allegiance. Upon this ground and this alone I must decline to take such oath, but will gladly give my parole on the same terms as given by Mr. Chapin, of Mississippi, who has been released. I have been confined nearly ten weeks.

Yours, respectfully,

CHAS. KOPPERL.

F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: * * * Mr. Charles Kopperl, of Mississippi, no doubt came North to look after his daughter—perhaps with no evil political designs. But if I am not misinformed you have in your Department evidence that he was connected with a military corps at home, and is, whatever may be the pretenses urged in his behalf, a secessionist only moderated in tone by the latitude of his present location. * * *

I am, very respectfully, yours,

S. C. HAWLEY.

WEEDSPORT, CAYUGA COUNTY, N. Y.,
November 25, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEAR SIR: Prompted by those feelings which naturally arise when our friends are in trouble I take the liberty of addressing you in behalf of my brother-in-law, Charles Kopperl, of Carroll County, Miss., who is now confined at Fort Warren, Boston Harbor. In the early part of August last he was summoned from his home to the city of New York to visit and attend to the wants of a sick, blind and motherless daughter of fifteen. After having administered to her necessities his arrangements were made for his annual visit to the grave of his wife who was buried in this village some years since. But on the eve of his intended departure he was arrested and sent to Fort Lafayette, and as he assures me knew not the precise charges preferred against him except as he saw the newspaper reports which he declares to be false. The story of his being a major in the Confederate Army and engaged in the battle at Bull Run I know to be untrue. Since his arrest I have been in New York and can learn of no act of his that should brand him with treason or treachery. My brother having no friends at court appeals to me for that assistance which he has a right to demand. While I am not in sympathy with treason and traitors I am also confident that his release would work no injury to our cause but only serve the ends of justice and humanity. I therefore earnestly solicit his freedom.

* Not found.

I am, sir, your friend and obedient servant,

JAMES HENDERSON.

NEWAYGO, MICH., November 30, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: From my long and intimate acquaintance with Mr. James Henderson and Mr. Julius Henderson, of Weedsport, merchants, I take pleasure in saying that implicit confidence can be placed in any statement they or either of them may make of any matter within their personal knowledge, and that their loyalty and desire to see rebellion suppressed is beyond suspicion.

From my limited but agreeable acquaintance with their brother-in-law, Mr. Charles Kopperl, I deeply sympathize with them and him in his unfortunate position as a prisoner of state at Fort Warren, Boston, and earnestly desire that it may be found consistent to release him from confinement upon his taking the oath of fealty to the Government. I am knowing to his having an adopted daughter at or near New York, sadly afflicted, that should cause him to come there. In August last I saw papers sent by him from Richmond giving information to his brothers-in-law of affairs there when he was on his way North from Mississippi. Beyond this and the loss of his wife about a year since while on a visit to her relatives (father and sisters) in Weedsport I have no personal knowledge of anything bearing on his case, unless it be that when excited by drinking as sometimes occurs he is voluble and boastful.

Commending an application for his release to favorable consideration,

I have the honor to remain, faithfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM J. CORNWELL.

FORT WARREN, MASS., January 18, 1862.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I beg leave to state that I have been a prisoner ever since the 17th of August, 1861 (now over five months), without having violated any law of the United States or of the State of New York, where I was arrested. My brother-in-law, Mr. James Henderson, of Weedsport, N. Y., also Mr. Cornwell, wrote you in my behalf some two months ago without apparent result. So many prisoners residents of Southern States have been released on their parole that I knowing my innocence daily anticipated my own release. I would therefore respectfully beg to call your attention to my case believing that it would result in my enlargement.

If you cannot grant this unconditionally I would give my parole for forty-five days for the purpose of visiting the Confederate States and endeavor to effect an exchange for some one Federal prisoner held there, and if unsuccessful to return. I have never held either military or civil position in the Confederate States nor been in any way or manner engaged or participated in the present unfortunate strife, any report to the contrary notwithstanding. Surely my longer confinement cannot benefit the Government nor serve the ends of justice, although it is greatly detrimental to my private interests. I therefore trust you will do me the justice to grant my case your favorable consideration, and much oblige, with high consideration,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. KOPPERL,
Of Mississippi.

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS,
Washington City, January 30, 1862.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

MY DEAR SIR: I think it proper that I should inclose to you a letter addressed to me by Charles Kopperl, esq., of Mississippi, now a prisoner at Fort Warren, in the harbor of Boston. Also a letter from the same gentleman to A. T. C. Pearson, esq., of Minnesota, which Mr. Kopperl asks me to read if Mr. Pearson is not in the city, and as he is not I have read it.

I am greatly at a loss as to my duty. Mr. Kopperl I know to be a secessionist because I had it from his own lips in December last, I think. He is my personal friend, and I would do him any favor that I could consistent with my duty as a loyal citizen, and one ready at any moment to lay down my life for my country. Mr. Kopperl avers that he has committed no act which will justify his arrest and imprisonment. I do not know that he has, but doubtless you had good reasons for his arrest and you have good reasons also for holding him.

By reading his letters inclosed you will know what his wishes are, and if anything can consistently be done for him I shall be happy to have it done. I have but little patience with secessionists and would hold them to a strict account, but if I believed an honest man had been misled by the arch fiends who plotted and are leading this rebellion I would not oppress him further than to tie his hands against open action. If proper I should be glad to know whether anything can be done.

With high respect, your obedient servant,

B. B. FRENCH.

[Inclosure.]

FORT WARREN, MASS., January 28, 1862.

Hon. B. B. FRENCH, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Not knowing whether Mr. Pearson is now in your city I take the liberty of inclosing the within letter to you which you will oblige me by delivering to him should he be in Washington. If not please open and read it, and if you have the disposition and the power to assist me as therein requested I shall gratefully appreciate it.

Very respectfully, yours, truly,

CHAS. KOPPERL.

[Sub-inclosure.]

FORT WARREN, MASS., January 27, 1862.

A. T. C. PEARSON, Esq., Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I last had the pleasure of seeing you at Washington in December, 1860. I little thought then that the next December I would be a prisoner at this place. I write this at a venture that you are as above addressed, and therefore concluded to drop you a few lines. I took the liberty of addressing a letter to Mr. Rice some days ago, and should this reach you I hope you will do me the favor to do all you can and with all whom you can for the purpose of obtaining for me an investigation, a trial or a release with a permit to return home. It would be a rather singular trial though without the first particle of a violation of law to base a charge upon.

But to the point. In December, 1860, my daughter who was at a school in Pennsylvania near Norristown lost her eye-sight. Hearing of it I immediately proceeded there and placed her under proper medical treatment. On my return home then I met you in W. Owing to the interruption of the mails last spring or summer I at one time received no intelligence from my daughter for about three months, when becoming uneasy I went to Louisville, telegraphed to two parties in New York and received a reply from one that Emma had left the place I [had] left her owing to some misunderstanding and for me to come on at once. I was also informed by several acquaintances that there was not the least difficulty or danger of arrest for me in visiting the North, &c. So I did at once proceed, leaving Louisville Sunday, 11th of August, arriving in New York on the 13th. I found my daughter much improved and with a kind family. I made my arrangements to place her at a school near New York (where she now is) and should have left Friday but was persuaded to remain over Sunday by friends. On Saturday morning I was arrested by the police and Sunday morning I was by telegraph order of Mr. Seward conveyed to Fort Lafayette—and here I am now.

I know not the charges against me except the nonsensical newspaper reports that I was or had said I was an officer in the Confederate Army, &c., all of which I need not tell you has not the least foundation in truth. I held no office of any kind in the Confederate States nor took any part in the present unfortunate difficulties and strife. My arrest was I feel confident the result of malice of an individual whom you perhaps know, and having no friends at court to exercise the influence which effected the release of others from the South I was overlooked and my case forgotten or at least uncared for. 'Tis true my brother-in-law of Cayuga County, N. Y., and another gentleman there well acquainted with and a political friend of Mr. Seward, addressed him in my behalf some two months ago, and besides the Hon. Mr. Ludlow, of New York, who visited Fort Lafayette several times, promised to obtain my release (upon parole not to return South without a permit, &c.) as soon as he visited Washington as he confessed there was no case against me (all for a consideration). But Mr. Seward soon after disowning Mr. L. I am minus my release as well as consideration.

I need not say what my ideas are that all those who actually bore arms against the United States, &c., are released and civilians from the Confederate States, bearers of dispatches, &c., are also released through the exertions of friends or counsel, yet I who committed no wrong, violated no law, have been imprisoned now nearly six months and still there seems to be no remedy.

I will not dilate or extend my remarks or ideas of such a policy. Presuming upon an introduction by you to Mr. Rice I took the liberty of requesting his services in my behalf. As yet I have received no reply. I requested him to obtain my release, and if it cannot be granted unconditionally to obtain it on my parole for forty-five or fifty days for the purpose of visiting the Confederate States and endeavor to obtain an exchange for some one held there as a prisoner and if unsuccessful to return, &c. I have not heard from home since I left there which renders me quite uneasy. The day of my arrest I telegraphed to B. B. French, esq., asking his assistance. I received a reply as follows: "Your dispatch received. I can do nothing for you."

Still you may if you think best speak to him about this. Please write me on receipt of this, and if you can render me any aid I need not tell you that it will be duly appreciated. I am more than willing to have a trial on any charges that can be brought against me. I hope you will pardon the trouble I thus give you which I claim on the score of my situation, &c.

Hoping soon to hear from you, I am, with best wishes and regard,
your friend,

CHAS. KOPPERL.

WASHINGTON, January 29, 1862.

Hon. ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE.

SIR: I wish to procure an exchange for my brother, Hugh Watson. He was captured on the Fanny in Pamlico Sound, N. C., near four months ago. He was acting as sutler to the Twentieth Indiana Regiment Foot Volunteers. I simply want the release of a state (Confederate) prisoner on a parole to exchange himself for my brother, a prisoner of like position, if one can be found, or a non-combatant that you will release.

Very respectfully, yours,

W. S. WATSON.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 30, 1862.

Col. JUSTIN DIMICK, Fort Warren, Boston.

COLONEL: If you believe that Mr. Charles Kopperl, a prisoner confined at Fort Warren, would observe his obligations you may release him from custody on his giving his parole of honor that he will return and surrender himself to you within twenty days from the date of his release unless within the period of twenty days Mr. Hugh Watson, who was captured on the Fanny in Pamlico Sound about October 1, 1861, shall be unconditionally released from the confinement in which he is now held by the insurgents and sent within the lines of the U. S. forces, and that meanwhile he (Kopperl) will not do any act hostile to the Government of the United States or give any information calculated to aid the insurgents. You will please fill up the inclosed passport giving as accurate a description of Mr. Kopperl as possible and after he shall have signed it deliver it to him and send a copy of the description to this Department.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 30, 1862.

W. S. WATSON, Esq.,

Twentieth Regiment Indiana Volunteers.

SIR: Your letter of the 29th instant has been received. In reply I have to inform you that an order of this date has been issued to Col. Justin Dimick at Fort Warren, Boston, directing him to release Mr. Charles Kopperl upon his parole of honor to return and surrender himself within twenty days from the date of his release [unless] your brother, Mr. Hugh Watson, shall be unconditionally released by the insurgents.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,

Assistant Secretary.

SENATE CHAMBER, Washington, February 3, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I respectfully refer the infolded letters. I have no recollection of ever having met the writer.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

HENRY M. RICE.

[Inclosure.]

FORT WARREN, MASS., January 18, 1862.

Hon. H. M. RICE, Washington.

DEAR SIR: Presuming upon an introduction to you in December, 1860, by my friend Mr. Pearson, of Minnesota, and appreciating your character as a gentleman and a statesman I take the liberty of addressing you for the purpose of requesting your kind offices in my behalf, which cannot be I feel sure inconsistent with your duties as a Senator and a citizen but the contrary.

I will briefly state that I visited New York on the 13th of August last to see my daughter who had been under medical treatment there for over eight months and from whom I had not heard in three months. On the 17th of August I was arrested, and on the 18th conveyed to Fort Lafayette by order of Mr. Seward, Secretary of State, since which time (now over five months) I have been a prisoner. I know not the charges against me except the newspaper reports of that day that I was an officer in the rebel army and had been at the battle of Bull Run, &c. I will simply state that I have in no way or shape borne arms or held office civil or military in said Confederate States; never saw a battle, nor have I in any way taken part in this unfortunate civil strife. Had I been as alleged I would probably have been ere now discharged on parole or exchanged as so many other prisoners (officers) have been.

It does seem strange that those who were taken in arms are more favored than one like myself who committed no act in violation of any law of the United States. Other prisoners from the Southern States were released long since on parole. Among those were Mr. Mure, of South Carolina, Mr. Chapin, of Mississippi, and others, none certainly more innocent than myself but probably their friends had more influence than mine or their counsel effected their enlargement. None were ever tried upon any charges but were released by order of Mr. Seward. Will you do me the favor to obtain for me that justice which is due and aid me in obtaining an investigation and my enlargement, and if it cannot be granted unconditionally (as it ought to be) I am willing to give my parole for forty-five or fifty days to visit the Confederate States to endeavor to obtain the release of some one Federal prisoner held there, and if unsuccessful I will return. That I have not the position Mr. Faulkner has or the status the released officers had who have been thus released should not work to my injury and deprive me of the same privileges. It certainly cannot be that I am retained a prisoner for so long a period (greatly to the detriment of my private interests and personal comfort) simply because I am a resident of the State of Mississippi. This I take would be inconsistent with the bearing and position assumed by the Government. My continued imprisonment cannot benefit the Government nor serve the ends of justice nor can my release inflict an injury.

I pray you to excuse the liberty I take in thus troubling you and hope you will grant my request on the score of justice and humanity if on no other. I also take the liberty of inclosing a letter* which you will oblige me by delivering to Mr. Secretary Seward as I doubt his seeing all sent him. This is the first I have addressed to any one in authority. My brother-in-law and others, neighbors and old political friends of Mr. Seward, have written him in my behalf, and without as far as I know any result. I hope you will favor me also with a reply.

I am, with high consideration, most respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. KOPPERL.

Released† February 4, 1862, to be exchanged for Hugh Watson.

FORT WARREN, Boston Harbor, February 4, 1862.

I, Charles Kopperl, a prisoner at Fort Warren, do pledge my word of honor that I will proceed without any unreasonable delay to Fort Monroe, Va., and thence by flag of truce to Norfolk, and that I will do no act hostile to the United States or convey any correspondence or information beneficial to the insurgents, and that I will return and surrender myself to the commanding officer at Fort Warren at the expiration of thirty days unless within twenty days Mr. Hugh Watson, who was captured in the Fanny in Pamlico Sound, shall be unconditionally released and sent within the lines of the U. S. forces, in which event I may consider myself discharged from my parole.

Case of the National Zeitung Newspaper.

NO. 8 SIXTH STREET, NEW YORK, August 17, 1861.

His Excellency the SECRETARY OF STATE, Washington:

The undersigned, adopted citizen of the United States, feels himself called upon to guard German honor and to call to the attention of your excellency that for three weeks there has been in this city a German newspaper called the National Zeitung which is in its tendencies absolutely secessionist, and handles the President, Abraham Lincoln, and generally all Union interests in the most accursed manner. It is high time we should make an end of such a nuisance, and I hope your excellency will have leisure to look over these lines and be convinced of their justice.

With most respectful esteem,

JOHN B. RAEFLE.

F. W. SEWARD, Esq.

SIR: Your favor of the 6th instant is received, and in answer have only to say that my attention has already been called to the Staats Zeitung and its editor, but do not think it necessary to arrest the parties in question. Should anything appear in the paper hereafter to warrant the editor's arrest and confinement at Fort Lafayette I will do it and telegraph you immediately.

OFFICE OF THE SUPT. OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, September 10, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I inclose you two more copies of the National Zeitung, Nos. 6 and 7. I am informed they contain matter more objectionable than either of their predecessors. Any order you desire to have executed I am ready to attend to. This paper I informed you before is published by an association and edited by a committee. I think I furnished you* the names of the editors before.

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

NEW YORK, September 10, 1861.

Hon. SECRETARY OF STATE.

SIR: Yesterday morning the mail facilities were withdrawn from the New York Staats Zeitung. The undersigned thereupon solicited an interview with the postmaster, in the course of which he was apprised that such course against his paper had been recommended by your honor the Secretary of State, and on further inquiry the undersigned learned that a certain G. H. Paulsen, jr., recently a resident of Westchester County, an unknown and irresponsible individual, had taken it upon himself to act the denunciator of the Staats Zeitung before the Department of State, and it is to be presumed that the same individual being used no doubt as a tool in the hands of others has been instrumental in performing the same dirty office before the grand jury of Westchester County which has proscribed among other papers the Staats Zeitung as a print that gives aid and comfort to the enemy.

Before proceeding to convince you conclusively of the utter baselessness of the charges against the Staats Zeitung and of the injustice of the persecution leveled at it, inadvertently as I trust, I must state that we at once ascertained that the incriminating slips contained in Mr. Paulsen's letter and said by him to have appeared in my paper and forming the basis of the denunciation against me had been taken from the National Zeitung, a German weekly started some three months ago in opposition to the Staats Zeitung to counteract our influence, and falsely substituted as the product of the Staats Zeitung, should at once dispel every possible cause for the course adopted against my establishment so far as the evidence of the said Paulsen is concerned.

* See Kennedy to Seward, September 14, p. 496, for the names of the editors of the National Zeitung newspaper.

As to the position of the Staats Zeitung I take leave further to refer to the annexed copy from my to-day's issue which will furnish your honor a general outline of the policy and course maintained in my paper. Far from encouraging the enemy of the National Government or from opposing the most vigorous prosecution of the war or from dissuading of the enlistment of volunteers or doing anything likely to embarrass or to paralyze the action of the Government, the very contrary has been the aim of the Staats Zeitung; for even among its warmest adherents the Government has not had a more upright and candid supporter, disagreeing though we were from the political principles maintained by the party which placed the present Administration in power.

The prosecution of the Staats Zeitung is the more mortifying to its proprietor and his assistants and friends as it emanates from a Department the head of which has on many occasions since the commencement of our national troubles been the special object of a vigorous and impartial defense against the unceasing and virulent attacks of those who labored to embark the Government in an abolition war, and have consistently denounced the conservative policy of the Secretary of State. What the character of the opposition of the Staats Zeitung has been, and how far the legitimate and as I presume under all circumstances judicial use of the right to oppose distinct measures of the Administration went, can be easily made apparent from a more just position of the seemingly most obnoxious expressions of the Staats Zeitung with others from the Tribune, Democrat, Abendzeitung and a host of other Republican papers in all parts of the country. If the honorable Secretary of State wants to be enlightened on that subject we are ready to furnish the proof. I dare say that we have yielded everything, have sacrificed opinions and convictions for the sake of the support and maintenance of the Government. We can do no more. If it had happened that we had been on the Republican side in the last election we are certain of having been accused by prints as those before named of sycophancy and sneakingness toward the Government.

There has never been a more wanton and more malicious denunciation than that of which I am the victim, and do complain before your honor. If any further proof of the truth of my representations should be required by your Department I hope your honor will have the goodness to advise me of such fact. The maintenance of the Union, of the Constitution, of the Government, at any and every price and sacrifice—that is my aim and my end.

I am, sir, with high regard, respectfully, yours,
OSWALD OTTENDORFER.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 12, 1861.

JOHN A. KENNEDY, Esq.,
Superintendent of Police, New York.

SIR: I have your note of the 10th respecting the National Zeitung. In reply I have to state that Mr. Murray, the marshal, and other friends are of opinion that at present proceedings against that paper would not be advisable. If, however, upon consultation with Mr. Murray you both should reach a different conclusion your report upon the subject would be duly considered.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, September 14, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your notes of the 12th and 14th instant and to inform you that on the day of the receipt of your first note an order was made excluding the National Zeitung from the mails and the postmaster of New York instructed to execute the order. The circulation through the mails of the Staats Zeitung has not been prohibited.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. KASSON,
Acting Postmaster-General.

OFFICE OF THE SUPT. OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, September 14, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEAR SIR: I think you either have misunderstood me or Marshal Murray in relation to the proper way of dealing with newspapers. We entirely concur in the opinion that the seizure of a printing office or of the papers printed is not the best way of correcting the evil; that under present circumstances the only sure way is to put the editors and publishers out of harm's way. I have consulted with Mr. Murray to-day and these continue to be his views.

The only paper here now that continues rabid is the National Zeitung. The Journal of Commerce is hardly respectable in its opposition. The Daily News has been every day becoming more and more insipid and this morning it closed doors with a notice posted up that the publication of the paper was suspended until the freedom of the press was restored. I clip from the paper Mr. Wood's formal announcement of the suspension lest you may not otherwise get it. The Staats Zeitung is not so fierce since the action of the grand jury of Westchester County. But the National Zeitung is reported to me as having increased its virulence. In mine of August 19* and 10th instant I have referred to the manner in which this paper is gotten up; that there is an association nominally of German Democrats of which George Keuster is president, Rittig secretary and Joseph Fickler is treasurer. They meet weekly or oftener and have a committee to manage the paper. O. Bengue is chief editor assisted by numerous writers of whom A. Eichhoff, Dr. William Schirmer (coroner) and M. Gross are a part. The business of the concern is managed by two persons named Hepke and Korn. Now the arrest of one of the most active of these men would lead to a modification in its tone or to a suspension after the manner of the News. If you think it best to try I will notify you of the one whom it would be most useful to take.

Very truly, yours, &c.,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: On returning on Thursday I found yours of 17th on my table. I have already sent you the number of the National Zeitung of the Saturday previous which was forwarded to me in Baltimore, and by it you may perceive that no change has taken place in its character. The number issued yesterday has not yet reached me, but I will have it to-day and forward it. The chief editor of the National Zeitung is O. Bengue, and probably his arrest would be sufficient for the whole; if it would not I will give you the names of some of the committee of management who are most active in furnishing editorial matter for it. The other German papers are now nearly right. The Staats Zeitung has turned over since the Westchester presentment and is advocating Mr. Lincoln on the point at issue with General Frémont. The other German papers sustain Frémont's side.

Truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

SIR: Your letter of the 22d relative to the National Zeitung has been received and I will wait for the receipt of the additional paper mentioned by you before taking further steps in the matter.

OFFICE OF THE SUPT. OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE,

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: In relation to the National Zeitung I have to say that I posted a copy of the issue of 21st instant at the same time my letter of 22d was posted. Yesterday I sent you a copy of that day's issue. I find it in no manner disposed to slacken its virulence. The number of yesterday is in some respects more hurtful than any of its predecessors. But you can judge of that by a perusal better than I can inform you, receiving as I do the translation from highly excited Germans who desire the whole committee of publication to be hanged. It appears to me, however, that the arrest is called for of O. Bengue, the editor in chief, and Hepke or Korn, the business men of the concern, and one other man whose name I am not sure I have correctly but who goes around Brooklyn with a copy of the paper in his hand extolling the articles in it and confidentially informing those he supposes sympathize with him that such and such an article in it is from his pen. He is a physician in Brooklyn. The arrest of three such men would satisfy to some extent the wishes of the loyal German population and may lead to an immediate suspension of publication.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

OFFICE OF THE SUPT. OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, October 6, 1861.

F. W. SEWARD, Esq.

DEAR SIR: I send by mail to-day the eleventh number of the National Zeitung. It does not flag in its course. I also send you an old number (July 20) of the London Standard * containing a letter of Manhattan dated July 6, and which has a dialogue in it that may amuse you if you have any time just now for a quiet smile. Independent of the converse between you and the captain the article is not calculated to do harm. On the contrary, in reference to the slavery question it is very well calculated to inform the world in advance what this war is coming to. His reference to Frémont is prophetic, especially so when you look at the date of his letter. I don't think Frémont had then arrived from Europe. I know he did not go West until after the Bull Run affair for I saw him in Philadelphia on July 22, and there is no personal acquaintanceship between him and Manhattan.

Want of health has kept me from my office for a day or two, so that I could not until to-day send for Mr. Scoville to let him have the benefit of the explanation in the letter of your father relative to his letter. He tells me he sent the letter on Spanish affairs to you. While conversing with him to-day he showed me a letter from the committee of publication of the Herald and Standard which I regard of some importance. It announced to him that the committee had determined to allow him £2 for each of the letters they had received, and would allow him £3 each for all in future. It also requests him to furnish them with leaders on American affairs, for which they are ready to pay liberally. Is it not worth while for him to have help in preparing leaders? At any rate would it not be well to take some trouble and assume some expense in order to have control of such articles in two London papers? Mr. Weed is not in town to-day or I would lay the subject before him. Therefore I write you that something may be done early.

In case the National Zeitung contains anything worthy of making it an object worthy of being struck at the two principal parties are O. Bengue and William Arming. The latter is the Brooklyn man alluded to in my last to your father relative to this paper.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

[Translation of parts of the National Zeitung, October 19.]

THE CONFEDERATE STATES AND ENGLAND AND FRANCE.

Various circumstances assure that the recognition of the Confederate States by England and France is already as good as settled. The freeing of Missouri from the Northern force, or anything favorable to the Confederates indicating power to sustain themselves, would without question cause the blow to be struck. All ready for the occasion are Young, Ross, Butler, &c., and two regular envoys, Slidell and Mason, gone to Europe. * * * They have run the (paper) blockade. * * * Some Lincolnite war vessels have been sent after them from New York. * * * Their capture would not alter things at all. * * * France and England and the Confederate States are doubtless agreed that the latter should send properly authorized envoys. * * * It happens that about the same time Sir J. Ferguson, of the English Parliament, appears at Richmond with letters to Jeff. Davis, &c., and indicates him to be the bearer of important dispatches. * * * The cabinet shares the suspicion (of this understanding) and in its wavering malignity or blindness believes it should make preparation for war with those powers. Seward's sudden circular * * * enlightens us on this point. It is possible many simple-minded citizens would ask, Would the Government undertake at the same time war with England, France and the Confederates? Is it possible a Government chosen by the people would plunge that people into utter and absolute ruin? It can only be answered, The Government we now have is capable of anything.

A DREADFUL ILLUSTRATION.

The London Times sets forth the condition of Mexico: "The Republic in fact no longer exists." The Zeitung remarks: "The whole course and declared purposes of the abolitionists indicate that they, if their rebellion succeeds, intend a like fate for this people. Is it yet too late to put a stop to this?"

BUT HOW?

Taking a distinction as to quarrels in the German and Swiss Confederacies as quarrels of princes and not of the people, the Zeitung remarks:

"Who has eyes must see that our calamity, this satanic civil war, springs from the unholy intermeddling of the Northern abolitionists with the relations of slavery which pertain exclusively to the South, and which they cannot forego but with which the North has no more to do than with Russian Laplanders. The Government in the North instead of setting a limit and term in place and time to this infamous spontaneous assumption has much the more inclined to the abolition movement and increased the difficulty and stirred the people to carry this assumption with the sword into the Southern States. This must lead to permanent separation—at least make a thorough reunion more difficult. * * * (Here comes another contrast with Germany.) “How is it here? The abolitionist whether plain citizen or office-holder, priest or soldier follows the party movement, its intrigues and gains. Beyond that he takes no interest; for that he raves against the South and tries to carry out his party’s schemes. * * * No counter movement is got up at the North against this abolitionism to quiet its ravings, therefore it is folly to think of the preservation of the Confederation (Union). The Union admits no separate independent State government interests, or in other words is not made by the States but by the people, and even therefore must fall to pieces when the people will. This is done by war. To coerce a confederacy of free States by force of arms—impossible!” Suggests, “The President should gather a general convention at Indianapolis, but the Northern abolition element must be shut out. The South will never endure it and will not endure the Northern people until they stand aloof from it.”

WITHOUT DISTINCTION OF PARTY.

The Union organization of New York called by its right name would be nothing more than an association for obtaining votes under false pretenses. The false pretense is that no party distinction will be recognized in future.

ONE OR THE OTHER, OR—

The demoralizing influx of lukewarmness, the corrupting influence of indecision upon political affairs shows nowhere more plainly than in the present course of North American entanglements. The final solution thereof would have occurred long since had not the flocks of political hybrids everywhere interposed objections. The abolition terrorism would long since have reached the height to which it tended and from which it must have fallen back if the deserters from the National party which had joined it had not hung on with leaden weight. The National party would long since have worked out a reconstruction if the hybrids who rendered its measures nugatory had been got rid of.

NEW YORK, January 24, 1862.
His Excellency W. H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State, Washington.

EXCELLENCE: I take the favor to inform you that in the city of New York is published a paper—under the name New-Yorker Journal, a paper which has much circulation and in consequence of it a great influence as it is published every day, Sundays excepted. This New-Yorker Journal is a thorough-paced secession paper, and unloyal to the highest degree to this present Government, in witness whereof I inclose an exemplar of it for the better information of [your] excellence.

With consideration of the highest regard, I have the honor to be, respectfully, your excellency's obedient servant,

C. F. SPINA.

[Inclosure.—Translation of extracts from New-Yorker Journal, January 24, 1862.]

[No. 1.]

We live in a period of the highest political excitement. Opinion, the holy living fire to which man owes his God-like qualities, is again degraded to a dumb idol to be used for human sacrifice, and the position for the freest development of civilized culture is trampled by political cannibalism.

[No. 2.]

No compromise with the negro party. This alone can be the basis of a successful effort to bring about a reconstruction of the Union. No compromise with a party which under any circumstances would tread the white man's rights under foot. Away with a party which would offer these rights to the imaginary claims of the negro.

[No. 3.]

The great delusion of the moment consists in this that we of the North idly think we have nothing more important to do than to bring back the seceding Confederates into the Union, whilst in truth we have to watch over, first, personal liberty; second, the supremacy of our own race throughout the continent; third, the welfare of millions of all races.

[No. 4.]

The question lies between civilization and barbarism—growth—flourishing prosperity—happiness through upholding the laws of nature or degradation, and chaotic desolation through contending against them.

[No. 5.]

That such contest is no child's play is shown by the gigantic dimensions which such conflicts have assumed in earlier centuries. Those who take part therein on the side of civilization must be ready with steady decision and moral courage to appear on the field of conflict.

[No. 6.]

The melancholy condition of public affairs arises from this, in the North these matters are looked at on one side only and that the wrong (unright) side.

[No. 7.]

The cause of right which has its representative in this paper we shall endeavor to maintain in entire fulfillment of the promises above stated.

[No. 8.]

The thoroughly false principle that sovereign States can "rebel" is that which solely and alone now as for eighty years leads us into a most pernicious war. The misery springing therefrom will alone teach us the only true political wisdom by which the Government confined to the realization of just principles would successfully avoid all that management of matters which especially leads to corruption.

[No. 9.]

Can a State rebel or be at the same time sovereign and subject? As little as a father can be his own son, a king his own vassal. Our States exist absolutely, not under Congress; they are not subject to Congress, and yet the war is waged by us solely in the idea that they are.

[No. 10.]

The abolitionists first speechified and quarreled and platformed the Southern States out of the Union and now draw the sword to fight them again into it. Astonishingly wise people.

[No. 11.]

The abolitionists want to force the Southern negroes to work for wages against their own and their owner's will. Astonishingly sagacious people.

[No. 12.]

The Albany Argus says that the great Republican party had failed to attain its purpose. This is not true. The purpose was to get the Government into its hands so as to fill its pockets as full as the Democratic party if not fuller. This purpose it had attained superbly. That the confederation should thereby get to land don't trouble that party.

[No. 13.]

Virginia has not sent funds to England to pay up the State indebtedness. This may give opportunity to the English Government to intervene to the satisfaction of their subjects, as Spain, France and England are now doing in Mexico.

[No. 14.]

It is under consideration to abolish the tariff in the Confederate States. It will not be long ere the North must follow. Good again; thanks to competition. Everything has its two sides in this wonderful world.

[No. 15.]

The Albany Evening Journal assures the Argus that the Republican party will not let go their purpose of sustaining the Union, on which the City News observes that neither of the existing parties can save the Union and least of all the Republican. Well who is to do it? The opposition party; to which we devote our time and strength so long as it is the party of the future, of the Constitution, of moral force and operates in that spirit in which the grand and beautiful confederation was framed.

BROOKLYN, February 11, 1862.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: The undersigned on behalf of a number of citizens of German birth begs leave to call your attention to a paper published in the city of New York in the German language, a copy* of which is herewith inclosed, which ought not to be tolerated. Its articles are filled with gross abuse of the Government, and in fact the paper if published in the South could not be worse. It is circulated gratis among the Germans of New York and Brooklyn, and the undersigned feels greatly mortified that such a pest is allowed to fulminate its treason among the Germans who give their blood and treasure for the Union. The undersigned has no private malice in this matter not even knowing the editors, but as a loyal citizen he feels it his duty to call your attention to it, and the undersigned hopes that you will not only order the paper to be suppressed but also to send the editors to Fort Lafayette. The undersigned has marked some of the most violent articles.

Hoping that this letter will meet your approval, I have the honor to remain, your obedient servant,

JACOB ROSENGARDEN.

F. W. SEWARD, Esq., Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: Yours of the 12th with the inclosures of the letter of Jacob Rosengarden and a copy of the New-Yorker Journal is this moment received. The New-Yorker Journal is a daily which has grown out of the National Zeitung, numerous copies of which I have forwarded to your Department. I have preserved all the numbers of the Journal, as I did of the Zeitung while it was published. The object and course of both papers are the same, viz, to bring the Union cause into disfavor with our German population. I have so informed you repeatedly in regard to the Zeitung, as you will find on reference to my letters to the Secretary of August 19,* September 10, 14, 22 and 29, and to yourself of October 6 and January 13.

I am informed that the same committee that managed the Zeitung manages the Journal and that the same agents and editors (with some additions) are employed on it. In a day or two I will send you a full file of the paper. I have it now in the hands of translators for my own information. During the time the Journal has been published I am continually called on by disgusted Germans anxious to have the active parties arrested. Since I have been writing this letter two have called on me in relation to it, one of whom tells me he wrote to the Secretary of War in relation to the paper two weeks ago and feels greatly disappointed in nothing having been done to abate the nuisance. I herewith return you Mr. Rosengarden's letter.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 24, 1862.

MY DEAR JUDGE: Will you have the kindness to read these papers† and tell me whether the tone is of a character so treasonable as to call for any action on the part of the Government, such for instance as prohibiting its circulation through the mails?

Mr. WEBSTER.

MY DEAR SIR: In ready compliance with your request I have given all the time I could from employment more imperative to a review of the German papers returned herewith, and have added the substance of some paragraphs to what had already been done by another pen, as an indication of the general tone of such papers. It is certainly such as to stir one's gall; but yet the thing is managed so adroitly that it would be very difficult to hold them to any penalty as they could almost always shield themselves behind the example of the papers they quote, the freedom of speech in Congress and at public meetings, and the publication of the Southern arguments under the sanction even of Congress. Besides unlimited abuse of public men has always been the first resource of papers of small circulation edited by hot-brained partisans with more zeal than discretion or integrity of purpose, and this seems to have passed from the times of the Aurora and the Citizen down to the present as a species of editorial heirloom.

This German quotes freely from the Tribune, Times, Journal of Commerce and Evening Post whenever an article in either of them can subserve his purposes and sustain him in expressing his opinions more obtrusively and obnoxiously without additional risk of Fort Warren; but perhaps nothing can have worse effect than the republication of Jefferson's letter to Giles; yet under the circumstances that can scarcely be objected to, but is so much the worse that he is regarded by the Germans as the soundest teacher of American liberty, &c., and surest exponent of American democracy.

You invite my opinion whether the tone of these papers is of character so treasonable as to call for prohibition of circulation through the mails. My fingers itch to write yes, but yet second thought suggests that the result would probably only increase circulation and influence. The surest counteraction would come from the columns of an ably conducted German paper from the now very gratifying progress of events, and of the earliest possible inoculation of our German citizens with a passable knowledge of our language.

Yours, very truly,

W. HOGAN.

Case of Pierce Butler.

Pierce Butler, a citizen of Philadelphia, was arrested by order of the Secretary of War, but at what time or on what charge the Department of State has no information. He was sent to Fort Lafayette and there confined August 20, 1861. On the 24th day of September, 1861, he was released from confinement on his solemn pledge that during the present troubles he would do no act hostile to the United States and would not visit South Carolina without a passport from the Secretary of State.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

TO THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

[Inclosure No. 1.]

PHILADELPHIA, April 16, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: By the directions of General Simon Cameron I send you a summons issued by the supreme court of this State at the suit of Pierce Butler v. Simon Cameron, July 1–November 17, 1861. The writ is returnable the first Monday of May, 1862, and is for trespass, vi et armis, assault and battery and false imprisonment. The cause of action is no doubt founded upon the supposed misconduct of General Cameron in causing the arrest of the plaintiff, Mr. Pierce Butler, and placing him in Fort Warren or some other public fortification without authority of law while he, General Cameron, was Secretary of War. As I am instructed the act was not the act of General Cameron, and was done by those who commanded it be done for just reasons and for the public good.

You will please communicate the fact of this suit to the President and such other official persons as should properly be advised of it and have such action taken as shall relieve the defendant Simon Cameron from the burden, cost and responsibility of defending this suit.

By the directions of General Cameron I have as his private counsel ordered my appearance for him, while I also invite and request the intervention of the proper authorities in his behalf and for his protection.

I am, sir, truly, &c.,

BENJAMIN H. BREWSTER.

[Sub-inclosure.]

EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA, ss.

The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to the Sheriff of Philadelphia County, greeting:

We command you that you summon Simon Cameron, late of your county, so that he be and appear before the justices of our supreme court, at our same court to be holden at Philadelphia in and for the eastern district of the State of Pennsylvania on the first Monday of May next to answer Pierce Butler of a plea of trespass, vi et armis, assault and battery and false imprisonment, and have you then and there this writ.

Witness the Hon. Walter H. Lowrie, chief justice of our said supreme court, at Philadelphia, the 15th day of April, A. D. 1862.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 18, 1862.

Hon. BENJAMIN H. BREWSTER, Philadelphia.

SIR: I have received your letter of yesterday stating that by directions of Mr. Simon Cameron you transmit to me a summons issued out of the supreme court of the State of Pennsylvania at the suit of Pierce Butler against Mr. Cameron for trespass, vi et armis, assault and battery and false imprisonment in causing the arrest of the plaintiff without authority of law.

This communication has been submitted to the President, and I am directed by him to say in reply that he avows the proceeding of Mr. Cameron referred to as one taken by him when Secretary of War under the President's directions and deemed necessary for the prompt suppression of the existing insurrection.

The President will at once communicate this correspondence to the Attorney-General of the United States and also to Congress.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 18, 1862.

Hon. EDWARD BATES, Attorney-General.

SIR: I transmit for your information a copy of a correspondence between this Department and Benjamin H. Brewster, of Philadelphia, relative to the arrest of Simon Cameron, late Secretary of War, at the suit of Pierce Butler.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S OFFICE, May 5, 1862.

GEORGE A. COFFEY, Esq.,

U. S. District Attorney, Philadelphia.

SIR: Of course you have unofficial information of an action brought in the supreme court of Pennsylvania for the eastern district by Pierce Butler v. Simon Cameron, "in a plea of trespass, vi et armis, assault and battery and false imprisonment." The copy of the writ sent to me does not disclose the fact that the action is founded upon any official act of the ex-Secretary of War; but it is well understood here that the action arises out of the arrest of Mr. Butler upon political grounds and his supposed complicity in the existing rebellion. Upon this supposition the President adopts the act of the Secretary of War in restraining Mr. Butler temporarily from his liberty, and desires that the suit shall be fully defended as a matter which deeply concerns the public welfare as well as the safety of the individual officers of the Government.

Mr. Cameron has retained private counsel for his defense, Mr. Benjamin H. Brewster, 706 Walnut street, Philadelphia. Mr. Brewster's letter to Mr. Seward is before me wherein he says:

I have as his (Cameron's) private counsel ordered my appearance for him, while I also invite and request the intervention of the proper authorities in his behalf and for his protection.

By authority of the President therefore I request that you will give attention to the case and render whatever aid the full defense of the action may in your good judgment require. There are other actions pending of a somewhat similar character—especially one against Secretary Welles in this District—and no doubt they will greatly multiply unless met vigorously and carefully in limine. Of course Mr. Brewster will see that there is no judgment by default, but to bar accidents please see to it. There is a bill pending in Congress which if passed will facilitate defenses in such cases.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

EDWARD BATES.

OFFICE OF U. S. ATTORNEY FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA,
Philadelphia, May 7, 1862.

Hon. EDWARD BATES,
Attorney-General of the United States.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th instant instructing me to give my professional and official attention to the suit recently instituted against Hon. Simon Cameron by one Pierce Butler, of this city, and to render whatever aid the full defense of the action may require. It is my pleasure to say in reply that I will be most happy to co-operate with Mr. Benjamin H. Brewster, Mr. Cameron's private counsel, in defending the case, and to contribute whatever assistance it is within my power to render throughout the progress of the cause.

I have the honor to be, with sentiments of high esteem and respect,

Assistant U. S. Attorney.

Order made by the U. S. Senate, July 11, 1862.

Ordered, That the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of the message of the President of the United States relative to the arrest of Simon Cameron, late Secretary of War, at the suit of Pierce Butler, for false imprisonment.

Case of John Garnett Guthrey.

John Garnett Guthrey, of Petersburg, Va., was arrested* at New York on or about the 21st day of August, 1861, and taken to Fort Lafayette and there confined. He was charged on the information of some members of the detective police with holding unlawful intercourse with persons in the insurrectionary States. On his arrest there was found in Guthrey's possession a large amount of State bonds of several of the insurrectionary States with evidence of their having been then recently purchased in New York for account of parties residing in Petersburg, Va., and a number of letters addressed to persons in the State of Virginia which he said he had received with the purpose of carrying them to Virginia. On the 3d day of October, 1861, the said Guthrey was released on his parole to do no act hostile or injurious to the United States and not to go to or correspond with any rebellious State. The said Guthrey was again arrested on the 24th day of December, 1861, charged on the oaths of Samuel Hyman and Thomas P. Wood with breaking his parole by corresponding with persons in the seceded States and laying plans to return to Virginia himself by way of England and Cuba as soon as he could get possession of his bonds. The said Guthrey remained in custody at Fort Lafayette February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

* See affidavit of Robert Murray, September 28, 1861, in case of Millner, post, for important reference to Guthrey's arrest.

NEW YORK, August 21, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State:

I now have John Garnett Guthrey, of Petersburg, Va., in custody with State bonds, drafts and money belonging to Southern owners amounting to a very large sum. Let me have an order for the disposition of his person. I will write particulars by mail.

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent of Police.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, August 22, 1861.

What am I to do with John Garnett Guthrey, of Petersburg, concerning whom I telegraphed you last night?

New York, August 23, 1861.

Lieut. Col. M. BURKE, Commanding at Fort Hamilton.

SIR: By direction of the Secretary of State I send to your custody Mr. John Garnett Guthrey, of Petersburg, Va. He will be delivered to you by Mr. Inspector Leonard.

OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT OF POLICE,
New York, August 24, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: On 21st instant, when Mr. John Garnett Guthrey, of Petersburg, Va., was arrested by Sergeant Young and Detective King, of my force, there was found on his person and among his effects 61 bonds of the State of Tennessee of the par value of $1,000 each; 22 bonds of the State of North Carolina each $1,000; 35 bonds of the State of Virginia each $1,000; 4 bonds of the State of Virginia each $500; 6 bonds of the State of Georgia each $500; 10 Northern Indiana Railroad bonds each $1,000; 16 Atlantic and Gulf Railroad bonds each $500; 3 Peoria and Oquawka Railroad bonds each $1,000, and money to the amount of $1,114.45, the principal part of which he admitted was the property of sundry persons and institutions located at Petersburg. A part he claimed as his individual property.

I have directed $200 of the amount to be placed in the hands of Lieut. Col. M. Burke for the personal use of Guthrey while he may remain in confinement. The balance is held subject to seizure by the U. S. marshal under the act of August 6, 1861, whenever he is prepared to act in the case: I deem it proper for me to adopt this course in order that the interest of my officers in the prize may be properly protected. I herewith forward to you an inventory of the property found in the possession of Guthrey.*

Very respectfully,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, August 27, 1861.

JOHN A. KENNEDY, Esq.,
Superintendent of Police, New York.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your two communications† of the 24th instant, and to state in reply that your course with regard to the cases of Guthrey and Miles is approved.

I am, sir, respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, August 28, 1861.

Lieut. Gen. WINFIELD SCOTT.

GENERAL: I have the honor herewith to return the papers‡ in the case of Miles and Guthrey which you yesterday referred to this Department, and to state in reply that John A. Kennedy, esq., superintendent of police at New York, has represented to this Department that he has caused to be deposited with Colonel Burke at Fort Hamilton the sum of $200 to defray the personal expenses of Miles, and also a like sum to defray those of Guthrey, which seems to supersede the necessity of making any further provision at this time for those objects.

I have the honor to be, general, your obedient servant,

FREDERICK W. SEWARD,
Acting Secretary.

NEW YORK, August 28, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: The inclosed letter has been addressed to me by a friend of Mr. Guthrey who has been for several years and still is a resident of Brooklyn. His name does not appear because being a Southerner he does not wish through his sympathy for the unfortunate to become in time an object of suspicion. It will perhaps be sufficient for me to say that the writer is a gentleman and that I put implicit faith in the accuracy of his statements.

I do not know under what charges Mr. Guthrey has been arrested but can well understand that in particular cases injustice may be done unwillingly by those who are connected with the administration of the Government. In any examination that may be had of the case of Mr. Guthrey I would therefore respectfully submit the inclosed statement for confirmation or rejection according to the light that may be shed upon it by such investigations as it may suit your honor to direct in the premises. I would fain hope that the result of such investigation will be the acquittal of the gentleman in whose behalf I venture to address these lines to you.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, your obedient servant,

[Inclosure.]

NEW YORK, August —, 1861.

A. A. Low, Esq.

DEAR SIR: Your kind consideration is asked to the following statement of facts relating to Mr. John Garnett Guthrey, of Petersburg, Va., now confined at Fort Lafayette by order of the honorable Secretary of State at Washington. The writer has known Mr. Guthrey many years and regards him as he is regarded by all who know him best as a most peaceable, quiet, orderly citizen and modest, dignified, high-toned gentleman and Christian. In politics he has been a Henry Clay Whig though never a partisan, and not many days ago told the writer he had not been to a political meeting in several (the writer thinks thirteen) years.

His late mission to this city was a purely unselfish one—most positively undertaken on his part for the sole benefit of the church in Petersburg, of which he has long been a vestryman and liberal supporter. The facts fully are these: About a year ago the congregation of the above church determined and took steps to erect a new and larger place of worship. Mr. Guthrey, though a man of moderate means, headed the subscription list with a donation of $500. About $5,000 are yet to be raised to complete this church, and recently when a party of gentlemen sought Mr. Guthrey as a suitable person to come here and buy for them as an investment some stocks of the Southern States the conditions he named and to which they assented were that these gentlemen should pay to him only his actual expenses of the trip and donate $500 to Grace Church.

In furtherance of this agreement Mr. Guthrey came to this city bringing with him over $55,000 furnished by the gentlemen in question. Other funds were sent on to him, making over $60,000, with which he bought $118,000 in Southern State bonds. It is certain that neither Mr. Guthrey nor those whom he represents are directly or indirectly agents of the Confederate Government for the leaders in this movement are known to be hostile to the investment of Southern funds in this way.

The needles and cotton found on Mr. Guthrey which cost about $15 were not for sale but for family use—for the wives of the gentlemen who sent him on and for the wife of his pastor, all of whom own sewing machines made in the Northern States and bought here or of Southern agents. The needles were all sewing-machine needles, bought chiefly as was the cotton of a sewing-machine establishment that made all the machines but one owned by these ladies. Mr. Guthrey did not suppose he was violating the spirit or intent of any law by carrying these supplies.

Some sealed letters directed to sundry persons in the Southern States were in Mr. Guthrey's possession when arrested but up to that time there had been no prohibition of letter writing to the South. Mr. Guthrey, however, was totally ignorant of the contents of these letters, and his invariable reply to parties who asked him to take such was in substance, "Yes I will take them and put them in my trunk; but if I am examined on my way back in either Kentucky or Tennessee I shall most likely be required to show any letters I may have about me and shall not hesitate to do so." This he supposed as did others would be regarded as unobjectionable by all authorities and it further demonstrates his repeatedly expressed determination to do nothing to make trouble.

It is believed that John Garnett Guthrey has been arrested and is now confined by orders of the honorable Secretary of State under the misapprehension that he is an agent of the Confederate States, and this plain statement of facts is submitted in the hope that if substantiated to your satisfaction the Secretary will order Mr. Guthrey to be at once released and the bonds restored to him.

With many thanks for the kind attention already extended to the writer he begs leave to subscribe himself, sir,

Your obedient servant,

H. C. HARDY.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK, ss :

Henry C. Hardy, of the city of New York, being duly sworn deposes and says that the foregoing is a copy of a letter addressed by him to A. A. Low, of said city, and the same contains a true statement of all the facts and circumstances within deponent's knowledge respecting John G. Guthrey. Deponent is a loyal Union man and would not seek the release of said Guthrey if deponent believed that he was acting or intending to act in any manner in aid of the rebellion. Deponent further says that he saw said Guthrey when he first came on here for his last visit to this city; that he presented himself to this deponent, showed his papers to him and stated his object to be to make investments for certain persons in Petersburg, to wit: Reuben Ragland, John M. Wyche, Thomas Wallace, William T. Joynes and perhaps others, having reference to the private interests of the gentlemen for whom he acted and with no public object whatever.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 20, 1861.

SETH C. HAWLEY, Esq., Metropolitan Police, New York.

SIR: I inclose all the papers in the Department relative to the case of John Garnett Guthrey, now a prisoner at Fort Lafayette. His friends ask for his release on the ground that his visit to New York was solely on business connected with a church at Petersburg, Va., and that the property found upon him was to be invested for the benefit of that church. If the investigation of the case, which I will thank you to make, should lead to a confirmation of these statements his discharge will be ordered as there is no disposition to arrest or detain any person engaged in business of that character.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

NEW YORK, *September 28, 1861.*WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have taken such testimony as has been presented for and against John G. Guthrey, now confined in Fort Lafayette, and examined his case as desired by yours of the 20th instant and beg leave to make the following report:

It appears that Mr. Guthrey purchased in this city and [was] about to carry away to the States now in rebellion a large amount of bonds of several of the States in rebellion. The amount and character of those bonds appear in a schedule furnished by J. A. Kennedy, superintendent of police, to your Department. The purchase and possession of so large an amount of securities under the circumstances was sufficient ground for arresting and detaining him until further investigation should establish his guilt or innocence. The evidence against him is confined to the circumstance that he had such securities and sealed letters directed to persons residing in the rebelling States and was about to carry them to those States.

Such transactions under ordinary circumstances would not be evil in themselves nor contrary to good morals or the common law. Unless his acts are made criminal by the laws of Congress or were designed to aid the enemies of the Government they were innocent. By the testimony of Mr. Henry C. Hardy, consisting of his affidavit, a commercial statement from his books and his letter transmitted through Mr. A. A. Low and now verified by affidavit, it may be held to be probably established that Mr. Guthrey acted in the premises with innocent and commendable motives without any design to aid the Confederate States or injure the United States. It cannot be pretended that paying good funds for the bonds in question was calculated to injure any one except the parties who made the purchase or benefit the States or people in rebellion.

Mr. Guthrey had in his possession letters from persons here directed to individuals residing in the Confederate States and was about to carry them South. They were sealed and he was ignorant of their contents. To carry them was indiscreet, perhaps culpable, but the design to carry them does not amount to a crime. Though the securities found on Mr. Guthrey may be confiscated under the laws of Congress on that subject from the testimony before me I do not see that Mr. Guthrey's acts have made him liable to any further punishment.

All which is submitted.

Respectfully,

SETH C. HAWLEY.

I inclose herewith all the documents transmitted to me from the State Department and also affidavit of John S. Young, detective, New York; affidavits of Robert King, detective, New York; affidavits of Henry C. Hardy, merchant, New York; commercial statements from books of Henry Hardy.

Henry C. Hardy being duly sworn doth depose and say as follows: I am a commission merchant doing business at No. 47 Front street, New York. I have long known Mr. John G. Guthrey, of Petersburg, Va., and we have been intimate friends. About the 8th or 9th of August last he came to New York for the purpose of investing sums of money for several persons in Virginia by purchase of public securities of Southern States, the design being to take advantage of the state of the market for such securities and purchase them at a cheap rate. With this design he applied to me as an old friend to collect his money here and purchase the State bonds. I did this business for him as an old friend and in this manner came to a knowledge of his design in the transactions. I know all the parties for whose account he made the purchases. They are all men advanced in life. They are men who have means to invest and operate with and I feel confident that the business was all private, commercial or financial business, and in no way connected with the military or political affairs of the country. I am confident that the object and motive of Mr. Guthrey in doing this business is truly and fully stated in a letter written by me and not signed addressed to Mr. A. A. Low and by him transmitted to the Secretary of State, William H. Seward. Annexed hereto is a statement of the account between myself and Mr. Guthrey covering the whole transaction, showing how and when the business was done; how the money was collected and invested. The relations between Mr. Guthrey and myself were friendly and confidential and I have no doubt he told me the whole truth without concealment. The business was done openly and without any thought on my part or, as I believe, on his that he was committing any offense. I made all the entries on my books of the transactions just as they occurred with his knowledge, and he never made any suggestion of any concealment or evasion. In relation to letters found on him I have stated the facts truly in the letter to Mr. Low hereinbefore referred to. They were left at my office sealed. He did not know the contents nor did he or I suppose that the carrying of letters was an offense. He said to one party who asked him to take a letter that if there was anything contraband in it he had better not send it as he would have to show it. The account I have furnished annexed* is a correct transcript of my books. If I had known or supposed that the business he was upon was either illegal or wrong I should not have aided him in the business and advised him not to proceed with it. And further saith not.

Sergeant Young, of the detective force, and myself on or about the 21st of August last went to several hotels in search of John G. Guthrey and found him at Fifth Avenue Hotel and arrested him. We brought his baggage to the central police office where it was searched and the bonds found in his trunks. We also found some money upon him. On delivering him at the office I was dispatched to Ohio on business and had no further personal knowledge of the case.

When arrested he asked me why he was arrested. I replied that you will find out at the office. He said, "I suppose it is because I am a Southern man or because my sympathies are with the South." I left next day for Ohio.

John S. Young being duly sworn doth depose and say as follows: I am sergeant of the Metropolitan police in command of the detective force in the city of New York. In that capacity and with the advice of the superintendent of police, John A. Kennedy, I arrested Mr. John G. Guthrey at the Fifth Avenue Hotel on or about the 25th day of August last, Detective King assisting me. We brought him and his baggage to the central office, where [we] found the bonds and money in his possession, a schedule of which was furnished by Superintendent Kennedy to the Secretary of State. Mr. Guthrey was committed to Fort Lafayette. In my investigations prior to the arrest of Mr. Guthrey I learned that he was in the habit of intercourse with George Miles, who is now a prisoner in Fort Lafayette, and with Walker, also a prisoner in the same place. This I learned by report, and these circumstances pointed to Mr. Guthrey as a party to be watched. I do not know of my own knowledge any treasonable or illegal acts beyond those connected with the purchase of the bonds. The arrest of Mr. Guthrey was actually made by Officer King. I was not at the hotel at the time. When he and his baggage were brought to the central office I searched and found the bonds and money as stated in the schedule.

Hon. S. P. CHASE, Secretary of the Treasury.

SIR: I have the honor herewith to return a letter of Hon. William H. Seward, Secretary of State, dated 13th instant, inclosing one from John A. Kennedy, esq.,* superintendent of police of New York, and a schedule of property found in the possession of John Garnett Guthrey, of Virginia, who has been arrested as a political prisoner.

The object of the letter of the superintendent of police was to inquire as to the disposition proper to be made of said property and that of the letter from the Secretary of State to submit to you the question of the expediency of instituting proceedings for the confiscation of the property, which question you have referred to me. In regard to this question I have to say that I presume from the fact that this property was found in possession of a person arrested for complicity with those who are in rebellion against the Government that the strong probability is that the property itself was being used or held for the purpose of promoting the insurrection now existing against the Government. If so it is of course liable to seizure and condemnation, and I know of no reason why it should not be condemned accordingly.

I have the honor to be, with high respect,

EDWARD JORDAN,
Solicitor.

NEW YORK, October 1, 1861.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War.

SIR: We have the honor to report that pursuant to the instructions of the War Department we have examined the case of John Garnett Guthrey, a citizen of the State of Virginia, now confined as a state prisoner at Fort Lafayette in the harbor of New York; that a personal interview was had with the said Guthrey in which he fully stated his object in visiting the State of New York; that it was purely for business purposes entirely disconnected with the present unfortunate troubles existing in the country; that he has not taken any part with the proceedings of the so-called Confederates in their attack upon the Government of the United States, but on the contrary by his advice and efforts has endeavored to sustain the General Government; that at an early stage of the rebellion and before any action was taken by the State of Virginia he was one of a party in Petersburg, Va., the place of his residence, to haul down the secession flag which had been presumptuously raised in that city; that he with thousands of others in Virginia are true and loyal men but are entirely helpless so far as action is concerned in sustaining the United States Government; that he never has nor does he intend to take action against the Federal Government nor give aid and comfort to those in arms against it; is ready and willing to give any pledge which may be required by the Department to that effect; that the inclosed letter and affidavit of H. C. Hardy,* a most respectable and intelligent merchant of this city, fully states the purposes and objects of Mr. Guthrey's visit to New York and that we have full confidence in the truth of the same.

After considering this case we are of opinion that there does not seem sufficient grounds on which to detain Mr. Guthrey as a prisoner of state, and therefore recommend to the War Department that he be discharged from custody upon such conditions as the Department deem just.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the papers inclosed in your letter of the 13th ultimo* from John A. Kennedy, superintendent of the Metropolitan police at New York, with the schedule of property found in the possession of John Garnett Guthrey, of Virginia, arrested and taken to Fort Lafayette as a political prisoner, the said papers having been submitted by you for my consideration as to the expediency of proceeding against the property under the confiscation act. I inclose also a copy of the report of the Solicitor of the Treasury, to whom the papers were referred for his opinion. The seizure having been made by an officer not placed by law under my control or supervision, and the forfeiture being claimed under the act of August 6, 1861, which confers on me no power of remission or mitigation, I do not conceive that this case falls within my jurisdiction, and the papers are therefore returned.

I am, very respectfully,

413 BROOME STREET, NEW YORK, *December 8, 1861.*F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: When in September last I made to you a favorable report in the case of John G. Guthrey, of Virginia, the evidence seemed to warrant the conclusion that he was not a political conspirator and that he was engaged in private financial speculation. He was liberated on parole, the terms of which I do not know.

From recent reports I am inclined to think that he has become a conspirator in some degree. Our department has established a communication with him unknown to him, and from that source we are informed that he expects soon to obtain possession of his State stocks, and is preparing to go to England, first sending his bonds there by unsuspected parties, and from thence to get to Havana and the rebel States. If that scheme should be accomplished it is possible that his bonds may be transmuted into arms or other contraband property. It is said that his parole does not preclude his going to England. A secessionist in England with $100,000 is capable of doing more mischief than he could do at home. If his parole does not preclude his going to England it would be well to restrict him to a residence in the city of New York.

* Not found, but see Jordan to Chase, p. 516.

He is moving all interests he can reach to get hold of his bonds; has said that he operated only through Black Republican agencies because the Administration is Black Republican. This he said in reply to a suggestion that he should employ J. T. Brady. He has said that he was not proceeding by process of law here to recover his bonds, but was operating directly with the Administration, and had assurances from his counsel that within ten days he would have possession of his bonds by an order from Washington. He is reported to have about $2,000 in the hands of his agent here which had not been paid over when he was arrested and that it will take all of that to get his bonds back.

It is further reported that Mr. Guthrey has entertained the proposition to supply a young man with money claimed to be necessary to get a commission in the U. S. Army with the design of having the officer when opportunity should present go over to the rebels with whatever information or other aid he could command. It is claimed that Guthrey entered into this scheme with avidity, and only held back the money because he needed all of his $2,000 above mentioned to use in getting possession of his bonds. It is further reported that Guthrey has sent the numbers of his bonds South and made arrangements to have payment refused except to himself.

Our detective department has obtained reports to the effect I have written, and if they should prove true the man would be safest in a fortress. But lest there should be some mistake I would suggest that for the present the action if any should be, first, hold on to the bonds; second, require a parole that shall restrict his travels to the city of New York, where the police can observe him.

Yours, respectfully,

SETH C. HAWLEY.

SIR: I have received your communication of the 8th instant relative to John Garnett Guthrey. In reply I have to state that representations which appear to be entitled to credit have been made to me that Mr. Guthrey was engaged at the time of his arrest in converting funds to aid in building a church at Petersburg, Va. I do not therefore deem it advisable at the present time to make a new order in his case. Still I hope you will continue the surveillance over his movements.

OFFICE OF THE SUPT. OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, December 9, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Understanding all sorts of efforts were making by Mr. Guthrey, who was lately a prisoner at Lafayette, to obtain possession of the bills,

State scrip and cash that was attached as property about to be applied to rebel use on the complaint and information of two of my officers I have been using the facilities of my department to obtain information in regard to the movements of Mr. Guthrey and his friends. By referring to my letters of August 24 you will see the amount found on Guthrey, as well as that found on his companion, George Miles.*

By the means alluded to I learn that Miles notwithstanding his oath to the contrary has found his way to Richmond, and to-day Guthrey received a letter from him dated Richmond, December 4. To a person who has his confidence he (Guthrey) said that if his arrest had been delayed twenty-four hours they would have got $7,000 more on him than they did, as Mr. H. C. Hardy had procured for him that money's worth more which he had not had time to deliver over and that it still remained in Mr. Hardy's possession. And further he said that it was perfectly safe in Hardy's hands as Messrs. Moses Taylor and Stevenson (I have not yet ascertained what Mr. Stevenson) were the friends of Mr. Hardy, and the Government would not dare to disturb Mr. Hardy with such friends. He also to-day expressed great confidence in being able to recover the attached property through the influence of Messrs. Taylor and Stevenson even if the property was confiscated; that should they fail he had a last resort through Mr. Del. Smith, which he wished to avoid if possible, but did not give as a reason for avoiding the last resort that it would cost him heavily.

When he recovers the bonds, &c., he will not attempt to go directly to the South but will go to Europe, thence to the West Indies and watch his chance to get home with his property. I would like to get possession of Miles' letter to him to prove his forfeiture of the condition of the release of Miles as well as to prove that Guthrey is in correspondence South in violation of his stipulation. But I would not like to rearrest a discharged prisoner without direct orders to that effect.

I would like to hear from you early on this business so as to be able to determine what course it is proper for me to take.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 13, 1861.

SETH C. HAWLEY, Esq., New York.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 11th instant. In reply I inclose herewith copies of the parole† of J. Garnett Guthrey and George Miles, which you required.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

OFFICE OF THE SUPT. OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, December 22, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have taken the affidavit of Samuel H. Hyman,‡ a native of Richmond, Va., who deposes to the fact that $7,000 in bonds belonging to J. G. Guthrey are represented to be in the hands of Mr. H. C. Hardy, No. 47 Front street, by Guthrey to him, and also states in effect that Hardy is custodian of his confidential matters. Hyman also testifies to Guthrey having stated to him that he has written at least three letters to friends in the insurrectionary States and has received some from them. Under your former instruction I feel at liberty to arrest Guthrey on this information, but I fear he has his letters, &c., in the hands of Hardy, and I need an extension of the order to Hardy and the papers in his possession. I would advise authority to that effect to be given me immediately by telegraph. I think I mentioned in a former letter that Hardy is also a Virginian and has a branch house at Norfolk.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT OF POLICE,
New York, December 25, 1861.

Lieut. Col. M. BURKE, Fort Hamilton.

SIR: Pursuant to directions from the honorable Secretary of State of December 11 I herewith deliver to your custody Mr. John G. Guthrey, of Richmond [Petersburg], Va.

Very respectfully, yours, &c.,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

† For parole of Guthrey, see p. 518; for that of Miles, see p. 540.

‡ See pp. 522, 523 for Hyman's affidavit.

OFFICE OF THE SUPT. OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, December 26, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: On the 24th instant Mr. John Garnett Guthrey, of Richmond, Va., was again taken into custody and yesterday was taken to Fort Hamilton and delivered to Lieut. Col. M. Burke. The inclosed affidavits of Samuel H. Hyman and Thomas P. Wood furnish the evidence on which I have acted under the discretionary authority given me in yours of 11th instant. The same affidavits implicate Mr. H. C. Hardy, of No. 47 Front street, New York, the brother referred to being in Norfolk, Va., in charge of their house there. Mr. Hardy was also taken in charge on 24th, but after examining him and finding him well inclined to deliver up all he has in his possession or in reach belonging to Guthrey I released him on oral parole. To-day I expect him to deliver over to me whatever bonds, &c., of the kind he retains control of. He informed me that he had loaned the bonds on call and deposited the cash. By taking the course I have with him this property which no doubt was passed out of his hands for the purpose of concealing it may be recovered. In any other course recovery would have been impossible.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT, New York City, ss:

Samuel H. Hyman being duly sworn doth depose and say as follows: I reside in the city of New York, No. 32 West Houston street; Richmond, Va., was my native place; I resided there until about one year since. I know John Garnett Guthrey, of Petersburg, Va., who was lately a prisoner in Fort Lafayette. I was introduced to Guthrey by a man by the name of Bateman who was in Fort Lafayette with him. Bateman has gone to England. I understood he was paroled not to go to States in rebellion. I understood from Bateman that he intended to get from England to the South. I represented to Guthrey that I wished to get to the South and wanted his assistance. I had repeated interviews with him night after night for some weeks, he always cautioning me to speak low and to secrecy.

I told him the only safe way to get there was to get a commission in the Federal Army and then escape across the lines; that I could get a commission with money; that I had but $500 myself; that it would cost from $800 to $1,000, and that I would like him to assist me to that extent. He expressed a desire and willingness to aid me but stated that all his bonds and funds had been seized except $7,000 in bonds and $2,000 in money, which was in the hands of Hardy & Co., or Hardy & Bro., 47 Front street, who had purchased his bonds for him. The $7,000 in bonds not seized had come in to Hardy from the broker after Guthrey was arrested and his bonds seized, and thus escaped seizure. He said the difficulty about aiding me was that all the money in Hardy's hands would be required to pay the parties for getting his other bonds free and he did not dare to have the $7,000 in bonds put on the market.

In the course of these conversations he told me his plans after he should get possession of his bonds, as follows: He intended to send them to England by putting them into the possession of some passenger going to England who would not be suspected, and to slip off himself and go from England to Havana and thence find his way into the rebel States; or if he could not do that to send the bonds to England and try his chance to get South from here. He also informed me that he had taken the numbers of most of the bonds that were seized just before he was taken and that he had sent the numbers to the governors of the several States by which they were issued and applied to have them repudiated and new ones issued in their stead if they should confiscate the bonds here. He told me the name of the firm of three lawyers (names not remembered) employed by him to get back his bonds. I asked him why he did not employ Brady. He replied that he had employed these lawyers because they were Black Republicans, and Hardy had advised him that they would have more weight with the Administration. He said that one of the lawyers had been at Washington on that business week before last and that he expected to have it settled every day.

He informed me about the 7th or 8th of December that he had received a letter from home dated the 4th of December informing him that they had seen a prisoner from Fort Lafayette who had broken his parole and he was certain it was Miles. He said this letter stated they dare not write much fearing he would not receive the letters, but he said the letter contained more than they would think. He also said that he had written two or three letters home but did not know whether they were received. He said he would give anything to get home, and if he could get back his bonds he would not care if the whole town was burned.

He expresses his feelings very strongly with the Southern rebellion; that it never could be put down as long as they had a dollar left at the South. He also hoped to see England at war with the United States; that that would be the best thing that could happen for the Southern States. He said that he had been informed that the official authorities here could be approached with money to get his bonds free, but he said he was intending to take his chance to get his bonds by Hardy and the lawyers who were backed by Moses Taylor and Mr. Stephens or Stevenson, president or cashier of some bank, and if he failed in that he should have an attempt made to see what could be done with money with the officials. He said if he had had any idea of being arrested he never should have had the bonds in his possession, but should have kept them locked up in Hardy's safe. He had taken them to his room to take the numbers when he was taken.

Hardy is from Norfolk, where there is a house of Hardy & Bro. conducted by the brother of this Hardy. He said that as soon as he got this thing settled he would be off; he would not stay in the town a day. He boards at the New York Hotel, which is frequented chiefly by secessionists. He does not talk much; says he will not talk to Yankees; is very prudent. He spends the forepart of the day in Hardy's office, dines about 5 o'clock, and goes to bed at 9. He said they had means of corresponding with Richmond that the people here know nothing about, and I understand that Hardy is constantly receiving information or letters from Norfolk and Richmond, but he did not say this directly. If he had money in his possession I have no doubt he would have aided me in my pretended plan of getting South. And further saith not.

SAMUEL H. HYMAN.

Thomas P. Wood being duly sworn doth depose and say as follows: I live in New York. I have on several occasions been in company with Samuel H. Hyman whose affidavit is annexed, passing as his friend and as being of the same opinion as Hyman and Guthrey. I can therefore corroborate many of the statements of Mr. Hyman, and particularly his statement of the plan of Mr. Guthrey for getting his bonds and sending them to England and going there himself and from there to the Southern States. Guthrey has always expressed a desire to get his bonds and get off home and all his talk has been favorable to secession. I also heard the statement of receiving the letter from Petersburg, Va., which spoke of the prisoner from Lafayette who had broken his parole, as stated in the affidavit of Mr. Hyman. And further saith not.

S. C. HAWLEY,
*Chief Clerk.*413 BROOME STREET, NEW YORK, *December 26, 1861.*F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: The proceedings for the condemnation of the funds found in possession of J. G. Guthrey are approaching a conclusion and will be disposed of in a few days. Under the present state of the law success is doubtful even with an earnest effort on the part of the officials, and unfortunately the desire to succeed is doubted in the best informed quarters. This is a gentle statement of the belief entertained here. Under such circumstances to allow the case to go on now would be sure to result in defeat. The money does not belong to Mr. Guthrey but to sundry citizens, firms or companies South.

The allegation that he was here on this business for a church, according to his own showing has only this degree of truth. When he undertook to do this business for these parties who own the funds he required them instead of paying him for his services to subscribe $500 toward paying the debt of his favorite church, and all the evidence of this there is in the case is his own statement. The testimony recently taken shows that Mr. Guthrey only awaited the release of this money to go back to his home, and that he is as far from being favorable to the Union as any Virginian.

If this proceeding is allowed to proceed now the result will be that the funds will be released; a not inconsiderable portion will remain with the New York lawyers who manage the business and the remainder go South to strengthen the rebellion. The sure method of preventing this is to direct a discontinuance of the legal process and order the funds to be sent to the State Department. As long as the funds are here the lawyers will not be idle. It is to be hoped that this course will be taken at once.

Yours, respectfully,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

[Inclosure.]

NEW YORK, December 28, 1861.

MOSES TAYLOR, Esq.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg leave to ask most respectfully your attention to the following statement:

On the 21st of August last my friend Mr. John Garnett Guthrey, of Petersburg, Va., was arrested at the Fifth Avenue Hotel in this city, deprived of a large amount of property, chiefly bonds of the Southern States bought here in the usual way, and sent to Fort Lafayette. There was no charge against Mr. Guthrey, and after about six weeks of confinement he was released on his parole of honor not to go into any of the rebellious States, &c., without first having obtained permission from the honorable Secretary of State. Since Mr. Guthrey's release he has lived very quietly in this city, and through counsel has been making efforts to obtain again possession of his property which has been libeled I believe by the parties who made the arrest, and is sought to be condemned or confiscated in the U. S. district court in this city on the ground as I learn that it was about to be carried South in violation of law. The case was to have been tried by appointment on the 26th instant.

On the 24th instant without process and so far as I can learn on no charge Mr. Guthrey was again arrested in this city by order of the superintendent of police, doubtless in obedience to instructions from the State Department at Washington, and on the 25th instant was sent again to Fort Lafayette. There are circumstances of very peculiar hardship in Mr. Guthrey's case and I earnestly invoke your kind offices in his behalf. I have known Mr. Guthrey long and well, and I believe him to be totally incapable of any act unbecoming a Christian gentleman.

I am, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,
H. C. HARDY.

[Indorsement.]

NEW YORK, December 28, 1861.

I have entire confidence in Mr. Hardy's statement, and in my opinion the case of Mr. Guthrey is one of great hardship and he should be released.

MOSES TAYLOR.

NEW YORK, January 2, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: Our friend M. O. Roberts will see you on a matter in which he feels much interested—in the imprisonment of James [John G.] Guthrey in Fort Lafayette since the 26th of December. He as well as others of our friends here feels confident that this second arrest of him has been made on some misrepresentation, and that an investigation of the facts will show it. His friends earnestly beg for such investigation and it is at their request that I address you. Unless they can clear him from the charge whatever it is that is made against him they will not for a moment seek his release.

I am, very truly, yours, &c.,

R. M. BLATCHFORD.

413 BROOME STREET, NEW YORK, *January 2, 1862.*F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: The case against the funds of Guthrey must be tried—and will be lost as matters now stand I think—on the 7th. Shall anything be done to avoid that result? If the measures suggested in the communication of Mr. Kennedy, the marshal (Murray) and myself forwarded by Mr. Webster should be approved by you please use the telegraph in carrying them out at once.

Yours, respectfully,

S. C. HAWLEY.

NEW YORK, January 2, 1862.

[MARSHALL O. ROBERTS.]

DEAR ROBERTS: I hand you inclosed a letter just received from Mr. Hardy in relation to Mr. Guthrey. I wish you would see Mr. Seward and say to him from me that I think this is a hard case and there is no doubt in my mind about the propriety of releasing Mr. Guthrey from Fort Lafayette.

Yours, truly,

MOSES TAYLOR.

[Inclosure.]

NEW YORK, January 2, 1862.

MOSES TAYLOR, Esq.

MY DEAR SIR: I am greatly obliged by your kind interest in behalf of my poor friend Mr. Guthrey. In view of it it seems to be my duty to tell you I have just been told that he is charged at the Department of State in Washington with having intercourse with the South and being about to go thither secretly in violation of the parole he gave when released from Fort Lafayette about the 1st of October last. My knowledge of and confidence in the man will not allow me to credit the charge one moment. By a released prisoner, Mr. Eagle, he received recently via Fortress Monroe a letter from his business partner. It was inspected and marked approved at Fortress Monroe. He showed it to me and I am sure the State Department would not complain of it. I have no idea that he has written a line to the South or had it done. He very recently refused to send a message home by a foreign consul then in this city on the ground that it would violate his parole. I am so assured by an old friend of Mr. Guthrey, resident here, a very respectable gentleman now retired from business, who will cheerfully testify thereto if need be.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. C. HARDY.

It may seem superfluous but I will add my firm belief that he has never had any idea of going home without first having obtained liberty from the Department of State. If the libel suit pending against his property had been tried on the 26th ultimo as it was appointed it was I think his intention then to apply to the Department of State for leave to go home.

H. C. H.

NEW YORK, January 6, 1862.

Hon. F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: On my return I find Mr. Hutchins so situated by reason of the extreme illness of a member of his family that he may not be able to visit Mr. Guthrey. I have therefore to request that the permission to see Mr. Guthrey be made so as to admit Mr. Hutchins or myself. The charge made against Mr. Guthrey we understand to be that he violated his parole by writing South or attempting to go South. It is now desirable that he should have an opportunity to make his explanation. We can scarcely believe it possible that he should have been guilty of either offense, as he has been engaged in preparing for the trial of a cause involving a large amount of property in which the question of his loyalty is involved.

Your early attention would oblige, yours, very respectfully,

AUGUSTUS SCHELL.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 29, 1862.

SIR: Herewith I inclose a sworn statement from Mr. J. Garnett Guthrey, a prisoner at Fort Lafayette. Will you please return it to this Department after reading it with your opinion thereon?

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

STATE OF NEW YORK, Kings County, ss:

John G. Guthrey, now in Fort Lafayette, being duly sworn says that he was arrested on the 24th day of December last in the city of New York; that as he has been informed the cause of his arrest was the alleged violation of his parole in writing to his friends in the South and in making arrangements to leave the city of New York. This deponent in answer to said alleged charges denies that at any time since his release from Fort Lafayette, on or about the 3d day of October last he has written or communicated in writing with any person or persons in Virginia or any other of the Southern States, and he denies that he has at any time made any arrangements to leave the State of New York in violation of his parole, nor has he had any intention of leaving said

State without the authority of the Government of the United States being first obtained. And this deponent further saith that he has important business which requires his attendance in the city of New York; and this deponent further saith that he has faithfully observed the conditions on which his release from Fort Lafayette was formerly granted, and that there is no truth in the allegations which he understands have been made against him. And further this deponent saith not.

And this deponent further saith that he has not received any communication from the South since his said release except a letter from Reuben Ragland, of Petersburg, Va., some time in the middle of December last, which letter as deponent was informed came by the way of Norfolk under a flag of truce and was examined, as its indorsement stated, by ——— Davis, provost-marshal, which letter is now in the possession of the U. S. authorities, the same having been taken from this deponent at the time of his arrest. And further saith not.

JNO. G. GUTHREY.

Sworn before me this 13th day of January, 1862, at Fort Lafayette, I being a commissioned officer in the U. S. Army, and recourse cannot be had to any officer named in 925th article of the Army Regulations of 1857 and 1031 of regulations of 1861 prior to a commissioned officer.

CHAS. O. WOOD,

First Lieutenant, Ninth Infantry, Commanding Post.

NEW YORK, February 11, 1862.

Hon. FREDERICK W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: It is now some two weeks since I had an interview with you relative to the release of John G. Guthrey now in confinement at Fort Lafayette. If no report has yet been made to the Department in his case may I request that action may be had as soon as consistent with the public interest, as I am convinced that Mr. Guthrey is unjustly deprived of his liberty.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WALDO HUTCHINS.

NEW YORK, February 12, 1862.

F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: In pursuance of your order I have re-examined the case of J. Garnett Guthrey and had an interview with him in Fort Lafayette. I am satisfied that he did not break or attempt to break his former parole. The evidence adduced against him on that point was from a tainted source and narrated an attempt by interested parties to induce him to commit himself, which attempt was unsuccessful. Mr. Guthrey is an honest man in everything except his political fidelity. On that head he is a Virginia abstractionist whose prayers are always against the Government. Until his funds that have been libeled are released or confiscated he can be trusted on parole. My belief is that he will keep the conditions faithfully and that he ought to be offered his release on the former conditions. He says to me that he would as soon remain in the fort but if offered the choice I think he will accept liberty.

I have been a little embarrassed in his case by the following circumstance, which has delayed my conclusion in his case, to wit: On Friday, the 7th last, a gentleman called on me in relation to Mr. Guthrey. He did not disclose his name. On Monday last, the 10th, Hon. Augustus Schell called on me in relation to Mr. Guthrey and informed me that the gentleman who called on Saturday was from his office. The next day I learned that Doctor Ives was in Fort McHenry and that he was the man who called on me from Mr. Schell's office. Not knowing what Mr. Ives is held for I have not allowed the circumstance to prejudice the case of Mr. Guthrey.

On reflection I think Mr. Guthrey should be offered his parole as before. I think also that the suit for the sequestration of the funds taken with Mr. Guthrey ought to be pressed to an issue at once and decided one way or the other. At this point Mr. Moses H. Grinnell called on behalf of Mr. Guthrey and submitted an affidavit* and petition which I inclose. I return herewith the paper inclosed to me and also those submitted by Mr. Grinnell.

Yours, respectfully,

S. C. HAWLEY.

NEW YORK, February 8, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,

Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: The undersigned merchants of this city most respectfully ask your candid notice of the following plain statement of the facts in behalf of Mr. John G. Guthrey, now in confinement at Fort Lafayette. Mr. Guthrey we will premise is over fifty years of age, known to us personally as a man of unusually mild, retiring manners and inoffensive disposition. We regard him as a highly honorable Christian gentleman. Mr. Guthrey is a native of Virginia, resident at the city of Petersburg, where he has been engaged in the manufacture of tobacco. He reached this city on the 8th of August last, his avowed object being to buy the stocks of Southern States in consequence of their then low price here. His purchases were made at the regular board of brokers in the usual way, and such stocks are still daily bought and sold there.

On the 21st of August Mr. Guthrey was arrested at the Fifth Avenue Hotel in this city by the detective police, under orders we judge from the Department of State, and sent to Fort Lafayette. The parties who made the arrest deprived him of sundry bonds, checks, drafts and moneys we believe to the nominal value of over $150,000. After six weeks of confinement Mr. Guthrey, against whom personally we believe no charge was brought, was released from imprisonment on giving his parole not to go or write South except by your permission. The bonds and money taken from him were libeled in the U. S. district court here for confiscation on the ground that they were being carried South in violation of law. After many delays the case was set for trial on the 26th of December last.

On the 24th day of December, two days before the trial was to have taken place, Mr. Guthrey was again arrested by the detective police and on Christmas Day was sent to Fort Lafayette where he yet remains. We are told this second arrest is made under a charge of violating his parole. In reply to this we take leave to refer you to the accompanying copy of an oath or affidavit* of Mr. Guthrey made at Fort Lafayette on the 13th ultimo. We have read it carefully and unhesitatingly declare our confidence in the truth of it.

* Affidavit not found.

We beg leave now, sir, with great deference, to say that Mr. Guthrey has not in our opinion deserved the punishment he has so long and patiently borne and to venture the hope that it will seem to you proper to restore him to his liberty.

We are, sir, with great respect, your obedient servants,

Case of George Miles.

George Miles, of Richmond, Va., was arrested* by John A. Kennedy, superintendent of police in New York City, August 21, 1861, and committed to Fort Lafayette. He was charged with collecting moneys in loyal States for persons residing in the insurrectionary States. Money and securities belonging to persons living South were found on his person. An order was issued from the Department of State dated October 3, 1861, directing Colonel Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to release Miles on his taking the oath of allegiance and stipulating that he will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the Government of the United States nor hold any correspondence with persons residing in those States without permission of the Secretary of State, and that he will do no act hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. He was accordingly released October 5, 1861.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

SIR: By direction of the Secretary of State I send in charge of Mr. Inspector Leonard Mr. George Miles, of Richmond, Va., whom he wishes detained.

Very respectfully,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

FORT LAFAYETTE, August 23, 1861.

Colonel BURKE,

Commandant Fort Lafayette and Fort Hamilton.

DEAR SIR: On my arrest on Wednesday afternoon, August 21, 1861, I had taken from me by Superintendent Kennedy, of the New York police department, a package of money sealed in a brown envelope containing over $7,000 in Southern bank notes, checks on Northern banks and negotiable notes on Richmond merchants; also not inclosed in this envelope two checks on New York banks for $4,500; one certificate of Virginia State stock for $1,000; also $1,000 in gold and $225 in gold taken from my person by the sergeant of police who arrested me, making in all $1,225 in gold; also in an envelope directed to Crew & Pemberton, Richmond, negotiable notes on Richmond for collection for something like $2,000. I do not now recollect any other money I may have had, nor do not say that there is other money, as my letters and papers were taken from me.

* See affidavit of Robert Murray, September 28, 1861, in case of Millner, post, for important reference to Miles' arrest.

For none of this money have I any receipt or acknowledgment and deeming you to be the proper person to take and hold this money I have taken the liberty of writing to you on the subject to either obtain the money or an acknowledgment for the same. I claim of this money as my individual property the $1,225 in gold, the Virginia certificate of State stock for $1,000 and $200 of the Virginia bank notes; in all $2,425; also about $900 of the negotiable notes made payable in Richmond to my order. My individual property should at least be in your possession, as I am innocent of any act or attempt to violate the laws of the Government sufficient to place me in my present unpleasant situation, and could my case be properly heard and the proofs I could bring to bear in my case I have no doubt of my being released.

I shall try and bear my confinement as a man unconscious of offense to the Government, hoping all will come right and trusting in your honor as an officer and a gentleman to protect my property as far as it lies in your power.

All of the property in my possession belonged to private citizens. Will you have the kindness to let the letters written be forwarded and confer a favor by letting me know your determination about the money?

I remain, respectfully,

GEORGE MILES.

P. S.—I have only $10 in money and my meals cost me $1 per day. Unless you obtain my money or some portion of it from Mr. Kennedy I shall have no means of buying common necessities.

OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT OF POLICE,
New York, August 24, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: At the time when Mr. George Miles, of Richmond, Va., was arrested Mr. Sergeant Young and Detective King of my force, who effected the arrest, found on his person and among his effects one certificate or bond of the State of Virginia for the par value of $1,000 and sundry bank bills, specie, checks, &c., amounting in the gross to $13,129.16, all of which property Miles admitted to me belonged to persons now residing in Richmond, excepting the Virginia State bond and $1,000 in gold which he claimed as his individual property. I have directed $200 of the amount to be placed in the charge of Lieut. Col. M. Burke for the personal use of Miles while in confinement. The balance is held for seizure by the U. JOHN A. KENNEDY, Esq.,
Superintendent of Police, New York.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your two communications* of the 24th instant and to state in reply that your course with regard to the cases of Guthrey and Miles is approved.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, August 28, 1861.

Lieut. Gen. WINFIELD SCOTT, Washington.

GENERAL: I have the honor herewith to return the papers in the case of Miles and Guthrey which you yesterday referred to this Department and to state in reply that John A. Kennedy, esq., superintendent of police at New York, has represented to this Department that he had caused to be deposited with Colonel Burke at Fort Hamilton the sum of $200 to defray the personal expenses of Miles and also a like sum to defray those of Guthrey which seems to supersede the necessity of making any further provision at this time for those objects.

I have the honor to be, general, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD.

FORT LAFAYETTE, New York Harbor, August 31, 1861.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War.

DEAR SIR: I am a tobacco manufacturer of the city of Richmond whose whole business has been done with Northern commission merchants. At the commencement of these troubles I had a shipment of tobacco seized on the schooner Mary which was afterward released. Feeling some uneasiness about the safety of my goods I went North and was kindly received and well treated.

On my return home I was solicited by Mr. Thomas, a wealthy manufacturer, to return and wind up his business in the Northern cities.

* See case of John Garnett Guthrey, p. 510, for one of these letters.

After some persuasion I agreed to go, especially as my own business was ruined and I wanted to go North to try and make arrangements to commence my business North. I had business in Boston with Fisher & Co., Tilton & Co., Abbot & Co. and J. T. & S. G. Thayer; in New York with Messrs. Charles M. Connelly & Co. and Buckley & Moore; in Philadelphia with Buckner, McCammon & Co., Mercer & Antels, Motz & Beam and Donan & Tait.

This business was purely of a peaceful nature. These were the only parties with whom I had any transactions. I received several letters and accounts and some moneys from these parties; also several letters I supposed of a peaceful and family nature left for me with the request that I would mail them in Nashville. I know nothing of the contents of these, but suppose the contents were not unfriendly to the United States Government as I could not believe that any one would betray my confidence so far as to impose upon my kindness and make me the bearer of any treasonable correspondence.

I claim to be free from any act of hostility or any intention to violate any law of the United States Government either here or at home, and defy proof of any act of mine to justify my present imprisonment. What property I have is principally in the North, and two letters of mine—one in the hands of Fisher & Co., of Boston, and one in the hands of Buckner, McCammon & Co., of Philadelphia—can be produced wherein I requested them not to send me any money as I preferred its remaining where it was. I also proposed to Mr. Buckner, of the firm of Buckner, McCammon & Co., of Philadelphia, to start one of his sons in business with me and I would on my return home make my arrangements and move my family to Philadelphia. This proposition of mine was taken into consideration by Mr. Buckner. You can easily ascertain these proofs as they should have some bearing on my case.

I did receive some money for myself (which was taken from me) to pay off some debts in the event of my making arrangements to move my family North. Some portions of the moneys I had in my possession were drafts on Richmond merchants for collection there. I also had business on my return with Cincinnati and Louisville tobacco houses.

I believe, sir, I have given you the whole truth in relation to my business North and feel confident if you would look into my case that your sense of justice and right would urge it upon you to procure my release. You are not only depriving me of my liberty but are causing a great deal of unhappiness to my wife and children. I have no relations to look after and befriend them.

Respectfully, yours,

GEO. MILES.

FORT LAFAYETTE, September 17, 1861.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War.

DEAR SIR: I understand I was arrested and imprisoned in this fortress on the charge of collecting money to carry South. If this is the only charge why cannot my liberty be restored, as I have given up the money? It is true I cannot afford to lose this money, but my business is fast going to ruin with no one to look after and take care of them, to say nothing of my own family who are left in an unprotected situation. In collecting this money I was innocent of any intention to break the laws, as President Lincoln's proclamation was not promulgated till after I had collected the greater portion of this money and I was informed and so understood that this proclamation did not go into effect until the expiration of fifteen days.

If you have any other charge against me of disloyalty to the Government I humbly petition for an opportunity to clear myself, feeling confident that I can bring proof sufficient to convince you that I am simply a business man; have never taken any part in the secession of the Southern States. If I am held as a prisoner of war you did me a wrong as I am not a native of the South. I am from New Jersey.

Is there no way by which I can be restored to my wife and children? Cannot I give my parole to report in Washington and have a hearing, or can I not be released under bonds? Am I to be kept here to the ruin of my health while all my interests are to suffer and go to ruin? I beg of you to give me a hearing or at least let me know why I am detained here. I ask this much in the name of justice and humanity.

Respectfully, yours,

GEO. MILES.

PHILADELPHIA, September 19, 1861.

J. LESLEY, Jr.

SIR: I send you my niece's letter in regard to Mr. Miles' imprisonment at Fort Lafayette. You can read it and then hand it to the general. You can tell him who A. J. Buckner is as he deals altogether with the South in the tobacco trade. He is worth $300,000. He says Miles is loyal and if necessary he will go his security for his appearance or for anything the general may want. I would say that my niece is a lady and daughter of A. J. Buckner, of this place. I hope you will urge it on him to have Miles released if not incompatible with the public interest. Please let me know what the general will do in the matter.

Oblige, yours, in a hurry,

T. T. DERINGER.

PHILADELPHIA, September 19, 1861.

[Lieut. Gen. WINFIELD SCOTT.]

MY DEAR GENERAL: Mr. Miles has been arrested and I would refer you to my niece's letter in regard to his sentiments. The letter is long but it will pay you for its perusal. Her father, A. J. Buckner, knows him well. He is the largest tobacco commission merchant in the United States, connected altogether with the South. He will go any amount of bail for Mr. Miles if you require it. Now, general, if it is no serious charge against Miles I do hope for the sake of humanity you will have him released. I could write you a volume but I know your time is precious. Anything you may require in regard to Miles' loyalty can be substantiated by Buckner and Woodward. I will leave it with you hoping you will answer.

Truly, your true friend,

T. T. DERINGER.

[Sub-inclosure.]

LINWOOD, September 13, 1861.

MY DEAR UNCLE: I presume you will be somewhat perplexed to see my name affixed to these pages for it has been some time since we met and a much longer one since you received a note from me, but I hope by their rareness when they do arrive they will be doubly appreciated and the love for the writer strengthened. You are well aware that the Government has very properly found it necessary to take into safe-keeping men who have been known to possess rebel proclivities and at the same time, even in case of innocence, they are allowed but small chance of defense, and you know too there are men living in the very heart of the South who are loyal Union men to the backbone though afraid to express their sentiments there. Such a one is Mr. Miles. He came up here on his own private business and it was before the law passed prohibiting any money to be paid the rebel States. During his short stay in Philadelphia he ran down and took tea with us, and in course of conversation he remarked he had always been partial to the North and hoped ere long to persuade his wife to leave the South forever and take up their abode in the North. (I write this to show you his feelings, and his friends knowing this it seems to me worse than criminal to hesitate in striving to have him released.) Mr. Woodward's grandma was present and asked him if he did not fear meeting with difficulties here, being a Southerner. He replied, "Oh, no; my business has nothing, nothing at all to do with either North or South. It is entirely of a private business nature and interferes with no one." He had transacted his business and was on his way home when he was arrested and put in Fort Lafayette. If there ever was an unjust arrest it was this. He has one of the loveliest wives, who is quite delicate, and two children, and he can neither hear from nor see them. Is it not as bad as death and so sad? The arrest of those wretched traitors to their country's cause is a deed of charity to us all, but in this case it is a mistake and should be rectified. Now, uncle, for your part. Now, uncle, you know you have much influence with the Secretary of War, Mr. Cameron, and you can get almost any request you make granted, and I want you for my sake, for God's sake, have justice done this person. If I can induce you to have him released through your good influence I will consider it is the only righteous act of my life and my gratitude to you will be unspeakable. Suffice it to say at any time and in any way I can repay you it shall be done with my whole heart. I could scarcely sleep last night thinking of that poor wife's feelings. God knows if she be still living. We are promised a rich reward if we "do justly and love mercy." This will be both justice and mercy. Mr. Woodward and I were speaking of Mr. Miles last evening and he did not know exactly what to do, but thought he would see you and get your advice on the subject; but he is like other business men, puts things off until it is too late; and you know, dear uncle, blood is thicker than water and if an act of justice and mercy is to be done I would like one of my own relatives to be the means of effecting it. This is entirely between you and me. I will be sincerely obliged if you will answer as soon as you consider it and say what can be done. Mr. Woodward does not know I am writing you, neither will I tell him till I have heard from you. God in His mercy grant your answer may be hopeful. If Mr. W. calls upon you before you answer this do not say I have written you, only give him your good advice. I must close.

Believe me, dear uncle, prayerfully, your niece,

LAVINIA.

SIR: On the 23d instant this Department transmitted the papers to you for examination and opinion in the case of George Miles, a prisoner confined at Fort Lafayette, and herewith I inclose a letter* from that person to the Secretary of War and by him referred to this Department which you will please examine and return with the other papers.

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 1, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: It is now six weeks since I have been imprisoned. I have made two appeals to you to be released. My business at home is going to the dogs. I have a wife, children and two sisters dependent upon me for support and you are well aware that provisions and clothing are scarce and very dear. I left them with a small amount of money not expecting to meet with this cruel treatment. I am unable to hear from or to get a letter to them and for their sakes I will cheerfully make any sacrifice.

You have taken from me a considerable amount of money. This money I cannot afford to lose but I will make no claim to it. If I have broken any law in the collection of this money let the loss of it be a sufficient punishment. I am willing to take the oath of allegiance and to execute bonds for the faithful performance of the same, and I again state to you that I have never aided the rebellion of the Southern States either directly or indirectly. I have never meddled in politics and have been the loser by this rebellion in the prostration of my business, and ask my release as a loyal citizen of the whole Union.

If you have any other charge than that of collecting money what is it, and how am I to prove my innocence if I am to be deprived of a personal examination? I have no outside influence to bring to bear upon my case for I am a poor man. I am not able to employ counsel nor do I know of any being employed in my case. Therefore I humbly submit my case to your judgment and ask a release for the sake of my family. If this is denied me then I ask that you will allow me to forward through Washington a letter to my family.

Respectfully, yours,

GEO. MILES.

NEW YORK, October 1, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State, United States.

SIR: Yours of the 23d September with inclosures in relation to George Miles, confined in Fort Lafayette, were received in due course. I have examined his case and taken all the testimony against him that I can discover, and beg leave to make the following report:

It appears that George Miles was a commercial agent engaged in disposing of property and collecting moneys in the loyal States for persons in the States declared in the President's proclamation to be in insurrection. That when arrested he had in possession securities and moneys so collected which he was about to carry South to the States in insurrection. A schedule of these securities and moneys was furnished you by the superintendent of police, J. A. Kennedy, and is herewith reinclosed.* It further appears that he was seeking to cover up the funds and property of his employers to save them from confiscation.

Even if the securities and moneys found on Mr. Miles are subject to confiscation under the act of Congress approved August 6, 1861, or the fifth section of the act approved July 13, 1861, his acts as they appear in the testimony do not amount to a legal offense for which he could be personally convicted as a criminal. I do not think it can be pretended that the securities and moneys were intended to be used or employed in aiding, abetting or promoting insurrection or resistance to the laws. I do not see how any offense can be established against Mr. Miles.

Very respectfully, yours,

SETH C. HAWLEY.

I inclose herewith the documents transmitted to me and in addition the affidavit of John S. Young, sergeant of detectives, which contains all the evidence I can hear of against Mr. Miles.

[Indorsement.]

OCTOBER 3, [1861].

Let Miles be released upon taking the oath of allegiance and engaging to hold no correspondence and do no act hostile or injurious.

METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT, City of New York, ss:

John S. Young being duly sworn doth depose and [say] as follows: I am sergeant of the detective force of New York. I arrested George Miles at the Metropolitan Hotel, New York, about or before 20th of August last and searched him and his baggage and found the funds described in a schedule furnished by Superintendent J. A. Kennedy to the Secretary of State, also numbers of letters addressed to persons South from persons here. These letters were sealed. Miles was prepared to start for the South that evening. He had been a room mate with a man by the name of Jones who talked violent secession doctrines very openly and indiscreetly. Miles said less and was more discreet. Miles said that his business was as agent for Southern men of business in selling commodities and collecting money and sending it South, and that this was done to prevent confiscation of property. He said some of the funds in his possession were his own; that the exact amount he could not state. We found also copies of letters purporting to have been sent to Boston urging and directing the shipping, disposing of and covering up the property and demands of his principals to avoid confiscation. It appears by his papers that he was agent of Mr. Thomas, an extensive merchant of Richmond.

* See p. 533 for Kennedy's inventory.

Mr. Miles stated that he was not a Southern man; that he was born in New Jersey; had been long in business in the South; that for this reason probably he was employed to do this kind of business upon the idea that he could do it more advantageously than a mere Southern man, but that he had no connection with or sympathy with the rebellion. The letters that related to matters in Boston were sent to Boston; the other letters are with the marshal of the southern district of New York.

DEAR SIR: Mr. George Miles, of Richmond, Va., was arrested by the Government in New York City about the 19th day of August last and confined in Fort Lafayette. Having been acquainted and transacted business with him for a period of two years (and from all of our conversation and transactions with him we believe him to be a loyal citizen) we feel it a duty we owe Mr. Miles to put the Government in possession of such facts as have come under our immediate notice, to wit: Mr. Miles left Richmond for the purpose of making arrangements through us to carry on the manufacturing of tobacco in this city, and for the purpose of defraying his traveling expenses accepted from James Thomas, jr., of Richmond, a power of attorney to close up his accounts in the Northern and Eastern cities. This detained him much longer than he anticipated and as he was about leaving for his home with his business but partially accomplished was arrested.

Mr. Miles is a native of Trenton, N. J., and is willing to bind himself to remove his family north of the Potomac if necessary to his release. He has but limited means, with a wife and several small children depending upon him. In all of our conversations with him he expressed himself decidedly as a Union man and is desirous of getting into business in the North and settling with his family amongst us.

DEAR SIR: Having been unable to obtain an interview with you I on yesterday obtained an interview with the President to get him to use his influence with you in my behalf. He appeared to take some interest in my case and may possibly have spoken to you on the subject. I have taken the liberty of writing to you to-day as I am compelled to return to Philadelphia this afternoon, my money not holding out. You are a father and can appreciate my feelings toward my absent family at a time like this and will excuse my perseverance for your permission to go to them. I was arrested by your order and imprisoned several weeks at a time when you were allowing others to reach their homes. No charge of disloyalty being maintained against me I was released by your order on the oath of allegiance and pledge of honor not to go home without your permission. This pledge I cannot break. If I was innocent at the time of my arrest, and you have an affidavit on file in your Department from one of the first houses in Philadelphia proving me to be loyal and that I was making arrangements to go into business and remove my family there to reside; if these statements are true, do you not in justice to yourself owe me some reparation, and will you not when you send home your released

Hon. S. P. CHASE, Secretary of the Treasury:

Inclosed I submit the affidavit of Mr. George Miles, whose property a list of which is given was seized under the direction of John A. Kennedy, esq., police superintendent of this city, August 24, 1861, and for the release of which he applies. The facts in the case are briefly these: Mr. Miles came North August 2, 1861, principally for the purpose of making arrangements to remove his business to New York or Philadelphia and also as agent of James Thomas, of Richmond, to make collections, &c. Soon after his arrival his property was seized and he taken to Fort Lafayette where he remained till October 5 when he was released upon the oath of allegiance, the examination in his case disclosing the fact that the gold lace, the only contraband property found in his possession, was not his property nor in any respect under his control and that he was merely engaged in his private business. The Government authorities admit that the act of August 6 does not apply to his case but claim to hold it under the act of July 13 and the President's proclamation of August 16. As you will observe Mr. Miles left Richmond two weeks before the proclamation was issued and therefore his errand was not then unlawful. Admitting therefore that he was collecting money to carry South, having done this without violating any law I submit to your consideration the hardship of depriving him of this property then lawfully in his possession. Added to this the fact that by this seizure he is deprived of all means of support renders this appeal for your consideration especially necessary. It seems to me also that in a legal point of view, apart from all other considerations, the seizure was premature as at most there was but the intent to proceed South. At the time of his arrest he was returning to the hotel at which he then occupied rooms and where he intended to remain till the following day at least.

Trusting that the case may receive your favorable consideration and soliciting as a great favor to Mr. Miles in his present situation an early reply, I remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOMAS G. RITCH.

[Inclosure.]

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK:

George Miles being duly sworn deposes and says that up to the 2d day of August, 1861, he was a resident of Richmond, in the State of Virginia, and engaged in the manufacture of tobacco. At the time this deponent came North he brought a large number of letters with him directed to the relations and friends of wounded prisoners at Richmond, which he duly mailed as requested; that on the 2d day of August, 1861, he left Richmond to make arrangements to remove his business to Philadelphia, it being impossible for him to continue it at Richmond. To defray his expenses he accepted a power of attorney from Mr. James Thomas, of Richmond, to wind up his business in the Northern cities. Deponent further states that while he was in the city of New York, to wit, on the 24th day of August, 1861, he was arrested by direction of John A. Kennedy, esq., superintendent of police, upon the charge as deponent was subsequently informed of collecting money to carry South; that the only property over which deponent had any control or in which he had any interest was the following: One Virginia 6 per cent bond of the denomination of $1,000; a package addressed to Messrs. J. T. and S. G. Thayer, Boston, Mass, containing $7,119.16 in bank bills and certificates of deposit; bank bills and gold, $1,510; certified checks upon Bank of North America, New York, payable to the order of James Thomas, $4,500, and a package of notes belonging to Messrs. Buckner, McCammon & Co., of Philadelphia, against parties in Richmond and given deponent for collection, amounting to $2,900; that one package containing gold lace, which is given in the list of property belonging to deponent, was not purchased by nor for deponent nor has he at any time had any interest therein, and the said package was given to deponent by a person named Jones, a resident of Richmond and an acquaintance of deponent, in Maiden Lane near Broadway, with a request that deponent would take it to the hotel at which deponent and said Jones were then staying as he the said Jones was going in a different direction; that upon deponent's arrival at this hotel with the package in his possession he was arrested and removed to Fort Lafayette, where he remained from August 22 to October 5, when he was released upon taking the oath of allegiance; that the said Jones was also on the same day arrested, but as deponent was informed was released on the plea of ill health and has since returned South, as deponent believes. Deponent says that he first met said Jones at Philadelphia, and that at no time have the said Jones and the deponent had any business relations in common or any other intercourse than that of acquaintance. Deponent further states that it is and has been since his arrival North his intention and desire to remove his business and family to the North and remain here; that his entire property now remaining to him is included in the property seized and now held by the New York police department, and that if said property were confiscated this deponent would be entirely without means to engage in business or to support his family; that he has never done any act or thing inconsistent with his obligations as a loyal citizen of the United States Government, and that as evidence of his good faith in the matter he is willing that the property may be placed in charge of deponent's attorney in New York or of such other of deponent's friends as may be acceptable to the U. S. district attorney and no part of the same delivered to deponent except with consent of the said district attorney.

GEORGE MILES.

Sworn to before me this 24th day of October, 1861.

CHARLES NETTLETON,
Notary Public in the City of New York.

PHILADELPHIA, November 9, 1861.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: I have endeavored in every honorable way to obtain your consent to go to my family under parole of honor to return or to be released from my parole to you. You not only refuse to allow me to pass by your permission but you refuse to allow me the privilege of writing to my family. You are well aware that I have never been disloyal to the Government, for you have ample proof of my loyalty. You had me imprisoned within the walls of Fort Lafayette several weeks when I should have been released on examination. I was released by your orders, taking the oath of allegiance to support the Constitution and giving my pledge of honor to you individually not to go or correspond South without your permission. You have allowed the New York police to take and keep my property, compelling me to live on the bounty of others for my present support. I have written to Mr. Frederick [W.] Seward, Assistant Secretary of State, requesting permission to go for my family or to be returned to my imprisonment, as I cannot enjoy my liberty believing as I do that my family are in great distress about me and possibly suffering many privations. I have appealed to you by letter being refused a personal interview and you refuse to answer my petition.

Believing that you do not intend allowing me to go for my family I have no other resource left me but to throw up my parole and on your order return to my prison. Therefore I now, sir, give you fair and honorable notice that I do not after the expiration of four days consider myself in honor bound to wait your permission to return home. I shall respect my oath of allegiance but shall consider myself untrammelled as respects my parole. My address in this city is Messrs. Buckner, McCammon & Co., where I shall await your pleasure four days and will report to any fortress you may order in that time should you think it proper not to send me back to my imprisonment. And if I should succeed in reaching my home I shall consider myself bound to return with my family.*

Respectfully, yours,

GEORGE MILES.

F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

SIR: * * * I am getting rid of the little confidence I have possessed in Southern men. George Miles who was set free on my report (probably) has evaded his parole I suppose, as he is now said to be in Richmond. I should like to know what were the conditions if any of his release.†

Yours, respectfully,

S. C. HAWLEY.

Case of Charles Barkley and the Schooner H. Middleton.

Charles Barkley was master of the schooner H. Middleton, which vessel was captured outside the port of Charleston, S. C., August 21, 1861, and conveyed to New York. Captain Barkley was conveyed to Fort Lafayette and from thence transferred to Fort Warren. He was charged with having run the blockade and with being disloyal to the United States Government. In a letter of December 2, 1861, he requests the Secretary of State to have him exchanged for some person who may have been captured by the insurgent privateers, thus confessing his sympathy with the rebel cause. The U. S. district attorney for the southern district of New York made application for the examination of Captain Barkley in the U. S. district court in a cause pending for the condemnation of the schooner H. Middleton as a prize, and in compliance therewith an order was issued from the Department of State dated January 14, 1862, directing Colonel Dimick to deliver Captain Barkley to U. S. Marshal Murray, of New York, and on the same day an order was made directing U. S. Marshal Murray to receive the prisoner and convey him to New York and after his examination to take him to Fort Lafayette. U. S. Marshal Murray received Captain Barkley and conveyed him to New York. No information has been received at the Department of State this February 15, 1862, showing whether or not Captain Barkley has been again committed to Fort Lafayette.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

COLONEL: Among the prisoners on board the schooner Henry Middleton, recently captured off Charleston and sent into New York, was a Danish subject named Andres Stambol, who with others is now understood to be at Fort Lafayette. WASHINGTON, September 22, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: It is my duty earnestly to request you to give immediate and serious attention to the inclosed copy of a dispatch which I have received to-day from Her Majesty's consul at New York. I have learned from it that not less than nine British subjects are confined in irons in an overcrowded casemate in Fort Lafayette for no other crime (as is stated) than being found on board vessels captured on the charge of attempting to run the blockade. The following is a list of these unfortunate men: William Simms, William Williams, Joseph Clifton, Richard Revel, forming part of the crew of the schooner H. Middleton, and Bernard Coogan, passenger by the same vessel, imprisoned on the 7th instant; William Smith, John Angus, Charles McClenahan and William Perry, shipwrecked seamen taken on board a small coasting craft, the Colonel Long, imprisoned on the 13th instant.

I have the honor to be, sir, with the highest consideration, your most obedient humble servant,

LYONS.

[Inclosure.]

BRITISH CONSULATE, New York, September 20, 1861.

[Right Hon. Lord LYONS.]

MY LORD: Referring to my dispatch of the 13th instant and your lordship's reply of the 16th instant I have the honor to acquaint your lordship that I yesterday visited the British sailors imprisoned at Fort Lafayette, and beg leave to report that there are four seamen who formed part of the crew of the schooner H. Middleton, bound from Charleston, S. C., to Liverpool, which was captured on the 21st ultimo shortly after leaving Charleston by the U. S. ship Vandalia. These men who were imprisoned at Fort Lafayette on the 7th instant are respectively William Simms, aged forty-nine, a native of Chichester, a married man having a wife and children at Portsmouth; William Williams, aged twenty-two, a native of Liverpool; Joseph Clifton, aged nineteen, a native of Montreal, and Richard Revel, aged twenty-five, a native of Wexford.

Simms and Williams arrived at Charleston from Liverpool on board the American bark Susan G. Owen about the end of April and were paid off there. They remained unemployed and unable to leave Charleston until the 6th of August when in order to reach England they shipped in the H. Middleton, being the first vessel which left Charleston for Liverpool after the blockade. Clifton arrived at Charleston in the American ship Amelia from Havre about the end of January and was paid off there and remained there unemployed with the exception of a few days' labor until the 9th of August when he shipped in the H. Middleton also in order to reach England. Revel arrived at Charleston from Havana on the 10th of June in the schooner Victoria and was discharged there. He also remained unemployed until the 9th of August when he shipped in the H. Middleton with the view of returning to England.

In addition to these four seamen Bernard Coogan, aged twenty-six, a native of Galway, was a passenger from Charleston to Liverpool. He had gone out to Charleston by the Columbia, arriving there on the 12th of March and intending to remain with a brother who is settled there. Finding no encouragement to remain and being unable to bear the expense of a journey northward he took advantage of the H. Middleton, the first vessel by which he could return home, and in which the captain gave him a passage. The master of the H. Middleton, a very intelligent man, corroborated the statement of the seamen and Coogan. Having closely examined them myself I see no reason whatever to doubt the truth of these statements.

Besides these men of the H. Middleton I found in the same room with them four other British seamen named William Smith, aged seventeen, a native of Henley-on-Thames; John Angus, aged twenty-four, a native of Shetland; Charles McClenahan, aged twenty-two, a native of Belfast and William Perry, aged forty-four, a native of Manchester, married and having a wife and three children at Manchester, who were taken by the U. S. ship Jamestown on board a small coasting craft called the Colonel Long near Charleston about the 4th instant, and were imprisoned at Fort Lafayette on the 13th instant.

Smith, Angus and McClenahan were part of the crew of the British bark Prima Donna bound from Havana to New York, which was wrecked on the Florida coast during the hurricane of the 16th of August. Having after much labor and many privations reached a small settlement called Miami where they remained some days a small coasting craft or fishing smack called the Colonel Long above mentioned put into that place, and the master in consideration of their assisting him to gather a quantity of limes agreed to carry them to Charleston. They accordingly left Miami in this vessel taking with them a letter from the mate of the Prima Donna to Her Majesty's consul at Charleston, now in my possession.

Perry was a seaman on board the British bark Sir Walter Raleigh, also wrecked on the 15th of August on the Florida Reefs. He was for seven days on a raft from which he was taken in an exhausted state by a Mr. Johnston belonging to Miami, who carried him to his house and treated him very humanely for a week, when he embraced the opportunity of reaching Charleston in company with the other seamen of the Colonel Long, but which was captured on the way thither as above mentioned. This poor man is still in a weak and miserable condition, having suffered severely from bruises and injuries during and subsequent to his shipwreck.

I have further to report that the whole of these nine men are kept continually in irons. They form part of the number of twenty-seven men who occupy one room—a casemate—the dimensions of which Lieutenant Wood informed me were ten feet wide, thirty feet long and about eight feet high.

I have the honor to request that your lordship will be so good as to bring the foregoing facts under the notice of the United States Government.

I feel satisfied that a knowledge of the circumstances which I have above detailed cannot but be followed by an order for the discharge of these poor men, some of whom have survived the perils of shipwreck only to be made prisoners while attempting to reach an asylum, and all of whom have been actuated by no more criminal motive than that of a desire to return to their native country.

I have, &c.,

E. M. ARCHIBALD.

MY LORD: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of yesterday inviting my attention to an accompanying copy of a dispatch addressed to you by Her Britannic Majesty's consul at New York relative to certain British subjects now imprisoned in Fort Lafayette and to state in reply that orders have been given for their release.

NEW YORK, October 2, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD.

SIR: We have been employed as the counsel of the captain and part owner of the schooner Henry Middleton, libeled by the United States for condemnation. Captain Barkley, the master, is confined in Fort Lafayette, and for no offense but that of being found on the vessel (a course not unusual as we understand in such cases), and we are deprived of the means of consulting with him or preparing his defense in the suit against his vessel (to which suit we believe he has a perfect defense), as also from getting personal effects of his on board the vessel. We would respectfully ask permission to see him and prepare the defense in his case, stipulating not to take any steps to procure his personal release unless the Government accord it. It would seem very hard to prevent us seeing and conversing with him or subjecting the communications of counsel to the inspection of the military officer in command, virtually compelling him to defend through the military officer of the United States. We would submit to the fair consideration of the United States whether it is of any possible use or equitable to keep the captain there under the circumstances.

Yours, respectfully,

BEEBE, DEANE & DONOHUE.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 4, 1861.

Hon. GIDEON WELLES, Secretary of the Navy.

SIR: Application having been made to this Department for intercourse with persons on board the schooner Henry Middleton, understood to have been captured off Charleston, I will thank you for such information as may be in the Navy Department in regard to the circumstances attending the capture in order that the propriety of granting the application may be determined.

SIR: * * * In the fort there were ten more sailors who were perfectly willing to take the oath of allegiance if they had not been intimidated by Charles Bartlett [Barkley], captain of the H. Middleton, who is a rank secessionist and confined in the same apartments with them. This man is calculated to do a great deal of mischief by his secession proclivities, and boasts that he ran the blockade three times before he was caught, and that he would do the same thing again if he was at liberty. I would, therefore, respectfully request authority to have him removed from his present quarters and transferred to some safe place where he can do no mischief.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: Her Majesty's Government have had under their consideration the note which I had the honor to address to you on the 22d ultimo with the dispatch from Mr. Consul Archibald which accompanied it.

Her Majesty's Government have learned with much surprise from these papers the cruel treatment to which the nine British seamen who were imprisoned in Fort Lafayette were subjected by the U. S. authorities. Her Majesty's Government are unable to comprehend the grounds on which persons who were accused of no offense were confined in irons and treated as criminals, and although it has been satisfactory to them to learn from the answer which you did me the honor to make to my representations on the subject that orders were given for the release of these men, yet Her Majesty's Government cannot but consider that some amends are due to them for the suffering to which they were thus causelessly exposed.

Her Majesty's Government have accordingly intrusted me to bring the matter again to the notice of the Government of the United States and to express the hope that due compensation may be awarded to the sufferers.

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

LYONS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 29, 1861.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your lordship's note of the 28th instant. In that communication you inform me that Her Majesty's Government have learned with much surprise the cruel treatment to which the nine British seamen who were imprisoned in Fort Lafayette were subjected by the U. S. authorities. You add that Her Majesty's Government are unable to comprehend the grounds on which persons who were accused of no offense were confined in irons and treated as criminals, and that although it has been satisfactory to the British Government to learn from you that upon the representations you had made to this Government orders were given for the release of the seamen, yet Her Majesty's Government cannot but consider that some amends are due to them for the suffering to which they were causelessly exposed. You state that upon these grounds Her Majesty's Government have instructed you to bring the matter again to the notice of the Government of the United States and to express the hope that due compensation may be awarded to the sufferers.

The case thus presented to me is mainly built on representations made to you by the British consul at New York, founded as he says upon the statements of the parties interested. In these statements they represented themselves as British seamen who had neither done nor meditated any wrong against the Government of the United States; that they had all been unfortunate, while some of them had been shipwrecked and that the latter having escaped from previous evils were innocently found on board lawful vessels, were captured and subjected to inhuman treatment.

It is my duty to consider this case free from these illusions. The owners of the schooner Henry Middleton are insurgents and traitors. The vessel was captured while pursuing a forbidden trade and attempting to run the blockade at Charleston. Upon this ground she is held for forfeiture by law with all the property found on board, and all parties captured in the vessel must be condemned as insurgents against the Government, and so falling into the hands of the public authorities they become prisoners of war. The case of the vessel called the Colonel Long is substantially the same.

The persons on whose behalf you appeal were found among the seamen on board of those two vessels and navigating the same. Together with others they became prisoners of war and as such were conveyed to Fort Lafayette, a fortification situate in the approaches to the harbor of New York. Being seamen and brought there simultaneously with privates who had been taken in battle in other vessels the officer in charge thought it prudent to put them in irons until his superior officer should direct what disposition should be made of a body of prisoners so large as to be deemed dangerous.

The British consul applied through your lordship to this Department for leave to see them. Leave was granted. In the same way it was made known to the Government that the nine persons in question though found acting with insurgents against the United States claimed not only to be subjects of the Queen of Great Britain but to have gone on board the vessels not from choice but necessity to seek a return to their native country. So soon as these representations were heard the nine men were released from imprisonment and set at large.

The President thinks that this act of national comity does not properly draw after it an obligation to make any compensation to the persons to whom the clemency of the Government was thus promptly and without inquiry extended.

I avail myself of this opportunity to offer to your lordship a renewed assurance of my high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

FORT WARREN, December 2, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: On the 21st of August last I was taken prisoner by the U. S. sloop of war Vandalia outside the port of Charleston, S. C., on board the schooner Henry Middleton, of which I was master, and have been detained in custody since that time under your orders as I am informed, and upon the charge of having run the blockade. There are also confined with me here William St. George, J. F. Newton, S. F. Newton and Robert Grissons, of the schooner Albion, captured on August 16 off Charleston by the U. S. gun-boat Seminole; E. Sibern, J. A. Douglass, E. Baum and E. O'Neil, of the schooner May Wood, captured off Hatteras Inlet September 9 by the Pawnee, and E. Myatt, of the schooner Colonel Long, taken by the Jamestown off the coast of Florida. We have lately seen in the newspapers an announcement of the arrival in Charleston, S. C., of sundry prisoners, being the officers and crews of vessels captured by Confederate privateers. Should any exchange of the prisoners in question be contemplated or proposed I desire to suggest on my own behalf and am requested by the persons before mentioned to suggest on theirs that our position would appear to make us suitable parties for that purpose. My own crew have all been discharged heretofore by your orders. Permit me respectfully to commend our case to your attention in the view proposed.

I remain, your obedient servant,

CHARLES BARKLEY.

OFFICE OF U. S. DISTRICT ATTORNEY,
New York, January 10, 1862.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: On January 8 instant when the prize cause of the schooner Henry Middleton and cargo was reached in its order on the day calendar of the U. S. district court, Mr. Donohue, counsel for Charles Barkley, claimant, stated to the court that his client was confined at Fort Warren and that he had been unable to communicate with him. The district judge gave Mr. Donohue the inclosed certificate and ordered the cause to be adjourned to the 22d of January instant to await any action the Government might feel disposed to take in the premises. Mr. Barkley was I believe master of the vessel at the time of her capture but has never been examined before the prize commissioners. If not inconsistent with the views of the Department it would facilitate the cause and strengthen the probabilities of condemning the vessel and cargo should the master be regularly examined. I desire only to lay the facts before the Department, leaving the matter of course entirely to its decision.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. DELAFIELD SMITH,
U. S. District Attorney.

FORT LAFAYETTE, March 13, 1862.

Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR.

SIR: After leaving Charleston, S. C., on board schooner Henry Middleton bound to Liverpool, of which vessel I was master, I was captured by the U. S. sloop of war Vandalia on the 21st day of August, 1861. On the 22d of the same month I was transferred to U. S. steam frigate Roanoke, off Charleston. On the 6th of September I was again transferred to steamer Quaker City, then lying in Hampton Roads; there put in irons and brought to Fort Lafayette where I was placed in company with privateersmen in a small room much crowded, and in leg chains or irons. About the 10th of September I was released from the irons and on the 14th of September I was removed to Fort Wood at Bedloe's Island and placed in solitary confinement until the 30th day of September, when with other prisoners I was removed to Fort Warren, at which place I was confined until the 19th or 20th of January, 1862, when I was removed to New York and confined in the House of Detention until the 5th of February, in which interval I was taken before the U. S. prize commissioners to give testimony in the case of my vessel, after which the prize commissioners said they had no further use for me in the case of my vessel and I presumed that I would be restored to my liberty, but when the privateersmen were removed from the Tombs to Fort Lafayette I was taken to the Tombs and transferred with them, which was on the 5th day of February, since which time I have been confined with them.

I consider my case one of peculiar hardship. I have not been tried for any offense but have been knocked about from prison to prison without notice or being informed of the reason, and I respectfully ask that you will have my case investigated or let me be informed of the character of my position. I have now been almost seven months a prisoner and have no idea whether I am considered a prisoner of war, or in what class of prisoners I am considered.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
CHAS. BARKLEY.

Case of Jerome R. Barber.

August 21, 1861, Jerome R. Barber was arrested in Onondaga County, N. Y., and indicted for treason in the U. S. district court at Auburn, of which the Attorney-General was informed by telegraph from the district attorney of the northern district of New York the same day. He was taken to Fort Lafayette by order of the State Department and placed in custody there on the 24th of August. The evidence shows that Barber is a native of Onondaga County, N. Y., where he resided till two or three years before his arrest, when he went to Louisiana from whence he wrote a letter to his brother which was received and shown a short time before his arrest, in which he stated that he was a military engineer in the Confederate Army and was going North to build forts on the Mississippi; that Louisiana was the State of his adoption and he should fight for it as long as he had an arm to defend it. In the letter he mentioned his brother who had joined the Federal Army, and he said he had rather he were dead. Barber came to Onondaga County about three weeks before his arrest. After he came home he stated that he had a commission in the Confederate Army; that he built the fortifications in Vicksburg, Miss. After his return he was driving about the country with livery teams and excited suspicion that he was engaged in mischief. After his arrest he admitted to the officer who arrested him that he had been in the service of the Confederate States as an engineer and that he built the forts at Vicksburg. It appears from his own admissions that Jerome R. Barber is a traitor. Having been transferred to Fort Warren the said Barber remained in custody there February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

AUBURN, August 21, 1861.

Hon. EDWARD BATES, Attorney-General:

A man is arrested here who is employed in Mississippi as he says as military engineer and was about to return and had arranged to carry letters to the South. I caused his arrest and indictment. The evidence would hardly convict him of treason but he is an unsafe man to go to the enemy. His name is Jerome Barber. What shall I do—let him bail or hold him?

Syracuse, August 26, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD.

DEAR SIR: Your order to remove Jerome Barber to Fort Lafayette was handed me by W. A. Dart, U. S. attorney. I delivered him to the fort the 24th of August, 9 a. m. I understand a man of our city went to Washington and advised men belonging to our Onondaga regiment that Government had no right to hold them any longer, and I learn six of the men have left and come to this county with their muskets, &c. I shall take these men in custody and keep them for further orders and find out what was said to them by the man I mention. Inclosed please find names* of other men who are here and say they shall not return. Please hand it to the proper officers. If detectives are to be appointed by the Government I wish to take a hand in it as my arrangements are such through the county I can do much good. The man Barber I arrested in this county and shall soon have more of the [same] kind. The course taken with Barber has done much good in our vicinity.

Yours, obediently,

R. R. LOWELL,
U. S. Deputy Marshal.

SYRACUSE, August 27, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD.

DEAR SIR: I forgot to put this slip* in the other letter. * * * Our city is in a better shape since Barber was transported to Fort Lafayette. I can clean this county of rebels.

Yours, obediently,

R. R. LOWELL,
Deputy U. S. Marshal.

U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE, Lockport, September 2, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: At the late term of the U. S. district court for this district held at Auburn one Jerome Barber was indicted for treason. The Attorney-General of the United States was advised by telegram of the case, in answer to which the district attorney for this district received your telegram as follows:

WASHINGTON, August 22, 1861.

WILLIAM A. DART:

Your telegram to Attorney-General received. Deliver Jerome Barber to the marshal or deputy, who will carry him to Fort Lafayette, in custody of Col. Martin Burke, who is instructed to receive him.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Previous to receipt of this telegram the prisoner had been arrested upon capias issued out of said district court returnable at same term, brought into court, arraigned upon the indictment and plead thereto. The capias had been returned to clerk with marshal's return indorsed thereon. Judge Pratt appeared in prisoner's behalf and moved the court to admit prisoner to bail. Judge Hall postponed argument of the motion and further consideration of the subject to Thursday, the 29th instant. At this stage of the case your telegram was received and placed in the hands of two of my deputies, who immediately departed with the prisoner to Fort Lafayette, and he was delivered at the fort on the 24th instant as directed in said telegram and I have the receipt of the officer in command at the fort therefor. To prevent all attempt at rescue on the part of the friends of Barber at Syracuse he was by advice of the district attorney taken by way of Canandaigua, Elmira and New York and Erie Railroad to Fort Lafayette. It was feared that the telegram would not in such case be sufficient authority to hold him though we should have assumed that it was and have held him at any risk. As such cases may occur again I would like to receive the instructions and views of the Government, and if proper to have a formal written order follow the telegram.

I am, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant,

EDWARD J. CHASE,

U. S. Marshal.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 5, 1861.

EDWARD J. CHASE, Esq.,

U. S. Marshal for the Northern Dist. of New York, Lockport.

SIR: Your letter of the 2d instant relative to the case of Jerome Barber has been received. Your course in regard to that person is entirely approved. It is conceived that under existing circumstances the public safety requires in similar cases a suspension of ordinary judicial proceedings. If therefore any arrests should hereafter be made by you or any of your deputies for such causes you will at once apprise this Department by telegram and directions will be given through the same medium to place the prisoners in the custody of the military authorities of the United States.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

SYRACUSE, September 13, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

MY DEAR SIR: Allow me to call your attention to the matter of Jerome Barber, who was lately indicted for treason at Auburn and who is now at Fort Lafayette. Mr. Barber is a native of this county and until within about three years always lived here. For about three years Barber has lived in the South engaged as engineer in constructing levees on the Mississippi River. A short time since Barber came North on a visit and while here was arrested and taken before the U. S. commissioner. A day or two afterward he was indicted at Auburn and taken there. I appeared as his counsel. We offered to give bail, and the matter of bail was postponed till the next Thursday after the court adjourned. The hearing was to be had before Judge Hall at his office in Buffalo. Barber was immediately taken to Fort Lafayette. I am convinced that he is wrongly imprisoned and that there is nothing of the matter. He made an affidavit in open court that he was not guilty of the matters alleged in the indictment, and now what he very much desires is his trial. The court at which he may be tried sits next month at Albany. Will you please inform me if the Administration intend to give such men the benefit of a trial and if Barber will be allowed his trial or not?

Perhaps you will be easily assured that I would not attempt to shield any man from his just deserts especially in times like these when I remind you that I was a long time a partner of H. C. Goodwin, of Madison County, with whom I believe you were personally acquainted. And if I were not constrained to believe in the entire innocence of Barber I would not attempt to effect his release. I take the liberty to address you as I learn that Barber was taken to the fort by your order. I hope to hear from you soon.

Most truly, yours,

D. J. MITCHELL.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 23, 1861.

WILLIAM A. DART, Esq.,

U. S. District Attorney for the Northern Dist. of New York.

SIR: Will you please send to this Department a statement of the proofs in the case of Jerome Barber?

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

U. S. DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S OFFICE,
Potsdam, September 27, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,

Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your letter of 23d instant requesting a statement of the proofs in the case of Jerome Barber is received. The proofs before the grand jury were as follows: Mrs. Cornelia D. Castle, of Onondaga Hill, Onondaga County, testified that she knew Jerome Barber and had for several years previous to his going to Louisiana, where he went from Onondaga about two years ago. He was a surveyor and a man of some education. Knew his brother Charles Barber, who resides at Onondaga. Charles showed me a letter from Jerome a short time ago. It was dated at New Orleans. It stated that the writer had a friend who was going to Louisville and who would mail it there. The letter stated that he (Jerome) was a military engineer in the Confederate Army and was going North to build forts on the Mississippi; that Louisiana was the State of his (the writer's) adoption and he should fight for it as long as he had an arm to defend it. In the letter he mentioned his brother who had joined the Federal Army, and he said he had rather he were dead. There was a slip of paper in the letter that appeared to have been cut from a daily newspaper that stated that Jerome had been appointed an engineer on the levee works. The letter was inclosed in an envelope and bore the postmark of Owego, in this State. Witness further stated:

Jerome Barber came to Onondaga about three weeks ago (the examination was taken August 20, 1861). He has had a livery team from Syracuse and has been driving about the country a great deal. After he came home he stated that he had a commission in the Confederate Army and that he built the fortifications in Vicksburg, Miss. I tried to get the letter after I saw it but found it had been destroyed or secreted.

R. R. Lowell, deputy U. S. marshal, Syracuse, N. Y., was examined and testified that about two weeks before a justice of the peace residing at Onondaga Hill gave him notice that a man who had been an officer in the Confederate service was running about the country with livery teams as he thought for mischief. He referred me to Mrs. Castle, who made the complaint before U. S. Commissioner William C. Ruger, of Syracuse, N. Y. I arrested Barber and made search for the letter but could not find it. Barber was at William Earl's, in Marcellus, about eighteen miles from Syracuse, when I found him. He admitted to me that he had been in the service of the Confederate States as an engineer and that he built the forts at Vicksburg. He stated that there was $18,000 due him on levee bonds, and that he must return to Louisiana soon or suffer great loss.

The witnesses are all credible and left no doubt upon the mind of the district attorney as to the truth of their statements, and that Barber was a rebel officer and intended soon to return South to join the rebel forces. The grand jury found a bill against him for treason but there is no evidence upon which to try him for that offense. He has powerful friends who seemed anxious for his release and who have undoubtedly exerted themselves in his behalf, but from all the information that has come to the knowledge of the district attorney he thinks he ought not to be at large.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. O. TAPPAN,
Assistant District Attorney.

ELBRIDGE, ONONDAGA COUNTY, N. Y., October 10, 1861.
HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEAR SIR: The undersigned takes the liberty of writing to you in behalf of his friend Mr. Jerome Barber, who is now a state prisoner in Fort Lafayette. If this epistle should do him no good I pray you let it do him no harm. Mr. Barber was a private pupil of mine in the spring and summer of 1856; lived in my family. I taught him the higher mathematical sciences and qualified him to be a navigator, teacher or engineer. I am a very radical Republican; have always acted against the radical Democrats, and at that time (1856) Mr. Barber, then twenty-six years of age, held similar sentiments—at least so far as I now remember. That was the year of those outrages in Kansas and the worse than outrage against Senator Sumner, and we were much excited about these things. Mr. Barber said one day that he would take his rifle and march to Kansas and help to drive out and exterminate the slave-holders there were it not that an election was soon to be held which he thought would change the course of things. You can see by this that he has no natural sympathy for slavery or slave-holders. Soon after this Mr. Barber went to some place near New Orleans where a relative of his had some iron works, he acting for a while as clerk. He did not like this employment very much and he sought a place of assistant engineer in keeping up the embankments against the river at Lake Providence in Louisiana. The chief engineer being a Southerner and not well versed in science soon discovered that Mr. Barber was more at home in the business than himself, and he being wealthy and not liking the responsibility Mr. Barber was offered the place with a salary of $3,000. This is his story, but there is little reason to doubt it for I received letters from him postmarked Lake Providence with Mr. Barber's name and title of State engineer printed on the envelope. Now we must consider that Mr. Barber was a young man. The people about his early home had done nothing for him. His new friends at the South had done everything for him and we should not wonder if it turned his head. War came; his business was interrupted, his loyalty for the South probably suspected because he was from New York and his salary cut off. He returned to his early home disappointed and probably embittered and in his debates with the rustic inhabitants of his native hills no doubt he used strong language, and I am convinced that this is the first of his offending.

The report has been that he was engineer at Memphis but I think this is not true. It was also said that he was commissioned to purchase provisions and supplies for the Southern army. I do not know how this is but I do not believe it. He has too much common sense to boast of such things among his country associates if it were really true. He is one who is sometimes fond of boasting and like all boasters his truths become very elastic. It is the opinion of those who know him best that he is not worthy of the distinction that the Government has given him and that were he set at liberty he would have no power to do the country harm and I doubt whether he would have the disposition to do so. I write this letter without his knowledge, leave or approbation. It is true I received a letter from him a few days since on a scientific subject and his only complaint in it is that he is accused of crimes without being granted a trial, and at first view this does look hard and is in direct opposition to American professions, but a nation in war must take care of itself in spite of constitutions and of technicalities in law.

Yours, in behalf of justice,

H. N. ROBINSON.

P. S.—The Republicans here are indignant against President Lincoln for his modification of General Frémont's proclamation. We are all for General Frémont, right or wrong.

FORT WARREN, Boston Harbor, March 17, 1862.

Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In reply to yours of the 15th I have the honor to report that the following-named persons have taken their parole and left agreeably to your order of the 21st ultimo: J. R. Barber. * * *

I am, sir, with highest respect, your obedient servant,

J. DIMICK,
Colonel First Artillery, Commanding Post.

Cases of Mrs. Greenhow and Messrs. Walker and Van Camp.

Mrs. Greenhow* was arrested on the 23d day of August, 1861, in the city of Washington by order of the War Department and was placed under military guard at her own house. She was afterward transferred to the Old Capitol Prison. She was charged with being a spy in the interest of the rebels and furnishing the insurgent generals with important information relative to the movements of the Union forces. At the time of her arrest a number of cipher letters and a large quantity of correspondence containing military information evidently intended for the insurgents were found torn into fragments in the stove where they had probably been cast by her. Some of these fragments were assorted and placed together so as to be read and copied. Mrs. Greenhow while imprisoned did not hesitate to express her sympathy for the success of the rebellion. The said Rose O'N. Greenhow remained in custody in the Old Capitol Prison February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day she was transferred to the charge of that Department.

William J. Walker was arrested by the provost guard in Washington, August 23, 1861, and was committed to Thirteenth Street Prison; from thence transferred to the Old Capitol Prison by order of General Porter. He was charged with being engaged in contraband and treasonable correspondence with the rebels. At the time of his arrest he was entering Mrs. Greenhow's house at a very late hour of the evening of the day on which she was placed under surveillance. An order was issued from the Department of State dated November 19, 1861, directing General Porter to release Walker on his taking the oath of allegiance stipulating that he will neither leave the city of Washington nor enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government, nor hold any correspondence with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State and that he will do no act hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. Walker refused to take the above-prescribed oath and stipulation on the 19th of November. Subsequently he signified his willingness to take the oath in the form it had been tendered to him, and he did take it and was released November 26, 1861.

A. Van Camp was arrested in Washington about the 21st of December, 1861, by order of the Secretary of State and committed to the Old Capitol Prison. The charges against Van Camp were that he was a spy and aided in the escape of Dr. J. C. Herndon, late of the U. S. Army, who deserted and carried to the rebels important information, and also that Van Camp not only consented but sanctioned the enlistment of his son in the rebel army. It appears from the report made to the provost-marshal by Major Allen, his agent, that Van Camp's son was wounded at the battle of Bull Run and that in violation of the President's proclamation Van Camp clandestinely passed the lines of the Federal Army and visited the leaders of the rebellion, and was allowed to pass amongst them without let or hindrance, enjoying their entire confidence. The said A. Van Camp remained in custody at the Old Capitol Prison February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

WASHINGTON, September 14, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

MY DEAR SIR: I think there must be some misapprehension in the case of Mr. William J. Walker, now imprisoned in this city on the supposed charge of treasonable correspondence with the enemy. Nothing so much surprised me on my arrival in this city a few days ago as the news of his arrest, for I have known Mr. Walker intimately for years past and have seen no occasion to entertain other than the highest esteem for him politically and personally. Up to a very recent period—the time of my departure from here to North Carolina—Mr. Walker had uniformly expressed himself to me as became a loyal and patriotic man. Did I believe him otherwise I would be the last to intervene in his behalf. But I have confidence that an investigation of his case will disclose his entire innocence of what is probably only a malignant and false charge.

I ask you, dear sir, respectfully but earnestly under the peculiarly trying circumstances of Mr. Walker's case to use your efforts toward a speedy examination of the charge against him. He has an aged mother and a family mainly dependent on him for their support. The humiliation of imprisonment on a suspicion so discreditable and infamous as treason I know deeply affects the members of his household, and in justice to them suffering as they are with him Mr. Walker should receive a prompt and impartial trial. I desire this letter to be filed with any papers the provost-marshal may have in the case to be used in behalf of Mr. Walker.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHARLES HENRY FOSTER.

49 WALL STREET, NEW YORK CITY, October 12, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I understand that Mr. William J. Walker, of the city of Washington, D. C., was arrested some weeks since and now is confined in said city under suspicion of disloyalty to the Government. Permit me to say that in the summer and fall of 1853 I occupied a house on the east side of Twelfth street, just above F street, said city, and in consequence became acquainted with Mrs. Oceana Walker who occupied (and still occupies) the house immediately adjoining on the north. I ere long discovered that Mrs. Walker was in very reduced circumstances and had a considerable family of children on her hands without means of support. Both Mrs. Smith and myself were led to take a deep interest in her case and ultimately went to Postmaster-General Campbell (under President Pierce's Administration) and made a strong appeal to him in favor of her son, William J., and thus got him appointed a messenger in the General Post-Office at a salary of $600 or $700 per year, which office he held for a considerable period but ultimately resigned it in favor of his brother who holds it to this day. * * * William on throwing up the situation came to this [place] and became the agent of some Southern railroad or roads in promoting their interest by securing to them patronage, and was doing very well when the pending atrocious rebellion broke out which of course destroyed his business. He then returned to the city of Washington out of employment and I interested myself in his behalf and tried to get him a situation under the Government, when to my great surprise I learned he had been arrested for the cause already indicated.

I consider him a young gent of unspotted honor and rectitude, of very superior attainments and abilities, and I cannot believe he has committed crime or contemplated its perpetration, but if I thought there had been some indiscretion in his conduct I would ask you to overlook it in consideration of the filial piety which he has displayed for his aged mother.

With sentiments of high respect, I have the honor to subscribe myself your fellow-citizen,

TRUMAN SMITH.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, October 22, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: William J. Walker, now in confinement as a prisoner of state, was for several years a messenger in this Department, well known to me. I certainly have never had any reason to doubt Walker's loyalty but have supposed him a well-meaning, harmless man. He was ambitious to rise above his position as messenger and applied himself diligently to educate himself for higher duties. I think he became correspondent of one or two newspapers and they may have been Southern papers, but this must have been before the great rebellion burst forth and could not I suppose have compromised him. I was surprised to hear of Walker's arrest and confinement upon charges of disloyalty, but as I have no knowledge of the circumstances under which they were made I can only say that my knowledge of him through several years would lead me to doubt his being seriously implicated in any treasonable act or project.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

T. P. TROTT,
Chief Clerk.

[Indorsement.]

I concur in the statements of Mr. Trott.

A. N. ZEVELY,
Third Assistant Postmaster-General.
E. L. CHILDS,
Private Clerk.

WASHINGTON, October 23, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Having ascertained that William J. Walker, of Washington, has been arrested on suspicion of disloyalty to the Government of the United States and now confined in this city, permit me to say I have known this gentleman for several years and still know him to be a gentleman of high sense of honor and great moral and intellectual attainments. Allow me further to add that up to the time of his arrest I have heard him frequently express himself as a strong Union man and opposed to this most atrocious rebellion against the Government of the United States. I know that he is not guilty of committing any disloyal act against the Government and I think a due examination of his case will prove the correctness of what I say. I hope you will give his case your earliest consideration and find it perfectly consistent with your official duties to release him.

I have the honor to be, yours, most respectfully,

MARION E. ROSS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 28, 1861.

Brig. Gen. ANDREW PORTER, Provost-Marshal, Washington.

GENERAL: Herewith I return to you some statements* in reference to one Walker, a prisoner in your custody. Will you please examine his case and return to this Department these papers with your report thereon?

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,

Assistant Secretary.

Papers found in the Confederate archives relating to Mrs. Greenhow and Van Camp.

[No. 1.]

CENTERVILLE, October 29, 1861.

Hon. J. P. BENJAMIN.

MY DEAR SIR: Your note of the 27th instant has been received with its inclosure. The note in cipher was addressed to me—that is, to Thomas John Rayford, a name I adopted before leaving Washington for purposes of cipher correspondence with Mrs. Greenhow by whom the note probably was written. As you will perceive from the translation inclosed the subject-matter is unimportant. I say Mrs. G. probably wrote the note, but it is quite possible she did not and that it is a shallow device of the enemy to entice [us] into a correspondence which shall fall into their hands. This is the best light to view it, as a correspondence with her or further use of that cipher is useless. This cipher I arranged last April. Being my first attempt and hastily devised it may be deciphered by any expert, as I found after use of it for a time. I accordingly would have discarded it long since had Mrs. G. escaped detection, and had indeed arranged a cipher to send her just as she was arrested. The War Department at Washington came into possession of one of her letters in this cipher and by its aid ought to have worked out the key. That does not matter as of course I used it with but the lady, and with her it has served our purpose including the one great service of saving General Bonham from a disastrous surprise on the 17th of July. I hear from another source that a reward is offered for the key. I am inclined to furnish it through a person in Washington and let the friend get the consideration, for I repeat the possession of the key can do them no possible good now nor can it prejudice any one. My suspicion has been excited by the way the value of the key is dwelt upon in this note and the desire to get at it on part of the enemy, for I cannot doubt that an expert could unravel it.

* No inclosures found, but see preceding correspondence.

I know not who wrote the letter signed A. M. H. The place of attack he indicates is one that Doctor Van Camp has just come here to inform us has actually been determined on as the place of descent by the Annapolis armada. Callan, clerk of Senate Military Committee, is informant. It is doubted here, however, but the army has been put in order for such an exigency.

Last night I telegraphed information sent me that Cape Fear River, Smithville, &c., were the real points of attack. This came from one (Washington, 24th instant) with capacity and wit to make a most efficient emissary. Circumstances have placed her en rapport with me lately and I expect a good deal of timely, acute observation of a useful character from her, but as I cannot be altogether certain of her faith all will be received with caution and nothing communicated to her, as was my course I may also say with Mrs. G. The person in question communicates the name of an alien just from Portsmouth, Va., one E. B. Lukins, who is said to have given so much information deemed of value that he has already been commissioned. This man had drawings of batteries in the Peninsula. He, she says, has a brother-in-law by name of Ford now in the works at Sewell's Point from whom he learned a signal in use by us when our vessels are to run the blockade of York River. If there is such a signal it has been communicated, be assured. Generals Johnston and Beauregard think the matter ought to be examined into.

You rightly say the events of the last six months seem all a dream. The most dreamlike thing in the world's history is the presence here in Fairfax County in the month of October, 1861, twelve months from the time you were in San Francisco, of two hostile armies of formidable size such as now confront each other.

Be assured I shall be pleased to be of the least personal service to you in this quarter.

Yours, truly,

THOMAS JORDAN.

[No. 2.]

CENTERVILLE, January 18, 1862.

[The following] respectfully transmitted for the information of the War Department by instructions from General Beauregard.

THOMAS JORDAN,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

DECEMBER 28, 1861.

DEAR GENERAL: I wrote you yesterday giving you some information additional to that contained in my dispatch the day before. I omitted to say yesterday that I inclosed a dispatch from our friend Mrs. Greenhow, which I hope reached you to-day. I also inclosed one from our friend in B. To-day I have it in my power to say that Kelley is to advance on Winchester. Stone and Banks are to cross and go to Leesburg. Burnside's fleet is to engage the batteries on the Potomac and McClellan & Co. will move on Centerville and Manassas. This move will be made next week. This information comes from one of McClellan's aides and from Fox, of the Navy Department. As I remarked yesterday be prepared for them on every hand and at every moment. Mason and Slidell have been given up and the Hall clique are furious. Look out for a smash-up. I send you the papers containing Seward's letter, &c.

Now, my dear general, look out for a large army, and tell your men (God bless them) to cut and slay until the last man is destroyed. Do not allow one to come back to tell the sad tale. No living man ever made such a desperate effort as McClellan will make. Nevertheless I believe he is a coward and is afraid to meet you. If some excuse is not hatched up you may certainly expect an attack next week. My God! general, give them the most awful whipping that any army ever received. McClellan's army will certainly number 180,000 or 185,000 men—perhaps more. Let our next greeting be in Washington. You shall have a warm reception. I write in some haste.

From Mrs. Greenhow.

DECEMBER 26.

In a day or two 1,200 cavalry supported by four batteries of artillery will cross the river above to get behind Manassas and cut off railroad and other communications with our army whilst an attack is made in front. For God's sake heed this. It is positive. They are obliged to move or give up. They find me a hard bargain and I shall be I think released in a few days without condition, but to go South. A confidential member of McClellan's staff came to see me and tell me that my case should form an exception and I only want to gain time. All my plans are nearly completed.

HDQRS. CITY GUARD, PROVOST-MARSHAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, November —, 1861.

Brig. Gen. ANDREW PORTER, Provost-Marshal.

GENERAL: I have the honor to report that I have received at this office a communication from the State Department dated October 28, 1861, signed by F. W. Seward, Assistant Secretary of State, and addressed to yourself in the following words, to wit.*

In compliance with the above request and by your direction I have made a thorough examination of the case of William J. Walker and beg leave to submit for your consideration the following as my report thereon:

That the said Walker was arrested on the night of the 23d of August last under the following circumstances:

That on the morning of the same day by order of ——— I arrested Mrs. Rose O'Neal Greenhow at her own house, 398 Sixteenth street, Washington; that I stationed a guard which had been detailed for that purpose by myself inside the house in order to insure the safe-keeping of Mrs. Greenhow and to aid in the arrest of any persons who might call there for the purpose of seeing the prisoner while being ignorant of her arrest or even of such a suspicion. No guard was placed outside the house for the reason that it was believed many persons who were communicating with Mrs. Greenhow might continue to call, and thus reveal their identity and lead to their detection; that during the day on which Mrs. Greenhow was arrested I employed several of my operatives in searching her house and in examining her correspondence, a very large amount of which—much of it highly treasonable in character—was found in different parts of her house, and no small part of which was torn up recently as it appeared, some of the latter being thrown into the stove but not burned as there was no fire therein; that I continued several of my operatives at the said house during the night of said 23d of August with orders to detain any and all persons who should call and report their detention at once to me; that at about 10.30 o'clock on the night of said 23d of August the aforesaid W. J. Walker in company with another person named F. Rennehan came to the house of Mrs. Greenhow and were at once admitted by the man stationed in the hall for that purpose, where they were detained until my arrival at the house, when they were taken before the provost-marshal and there examined in presence of the Hon. Thomas A. Scott, Assistant Secretary of War; that they there represented themselves to have been making a friendly call on Mrs. Greenhow when they were arrested; that they were asked what their business was with Mrs. Greenhow and that their answers were evasive, indefinite and contradictory; that after a full examination it was the advice of Mr. Secretary Scott that both Walker and Rennehan should be held and they were accordingly sent to prison by order of Brigadier-General Porter, provost-marshal.

I beg leave to say in further continuation of this report that in order to the better understanding of the case it seems to me proper to review as briefly as I can some of the many facts connected with the character, practices and arrest of the said Mrs. Greenhow, in connection with whom and with which the said Walker stands connected. It was a fact too notorious to need reciting here that for months before her arrest Mrs. Greenhow was actively and to a great extent openly engaged in giving aid and comfort, sympathy and information to the enemies of the Government; that although she was living in the capital of the United States and under its governmental protection her house was the rendezvous for the most violent enemies of the Government, not a few of whom were rebels in arms against its authority and who were using every means in their power to accomplish its overthrow; that the house of Mrs. Greenhow was a sort of focal center where treason found a resting place and where traitors were supplied with every needed care and where they were furnished with every possible information to be obtained by the untiring energies of this very remarkable woman; that for a great number of years Mrs. Greenhow has been the instrument of the very men who now lead in the rebel councils and some of those who command their armies; who have successfully used her as a willing instrument in plotting the overthrow of the United States Government and which she no less than they had desired to accomplish; that since the commencement of this rebellion this woman from her long residence at the capital, her superior education, her uncommon social powers, her very extensive acquaintance among and her active association with the leading politicians of this nation has possessed an almost superhuman power, all of which she has most wickedly used to destroy the Government.

With her as with other traitors she has been most unscrupulous in the use of means. Nothing has been too sacred for her appropriation so as by its use she might hope to accomplish her treasonable ends. She has made use of whoever and whatever she could as mediums to carry into effect her unholy purposes. She has used her almost irresistible seductive powers to win to her aid persons who were holding responsible places of honor and of profit under the Government so that she might through them obtain information only known to the employés and agents of the Government and thus aid the rebels to organize and for so long a time to maintain such a powerful resistance to its authority. She has not used her powers in vain among the officers of the Army, not a few of whom she has robbed of patriotic hearts and transformed them into sympathizers with the enemies of the country which had made them all they were. She had her secret and insidious agents in all parts of this city and scattered over a large extent of country. She had a long list of names arranged with great care and in alphabetical order composed of persons upon whom she and the other enemies of the Government had calculated to rely and who were to be rewarded when they should have completed its overthrow. She had alphabets, numbers, ciphers and various other not mentioned ways of holding intercourse with traitors unknown to any but themselves; all of which means she was in active use of at the time of and subsequent to her arrest. In the circle of her influence were very many women of various ages as well as men, which women like herself bore to the friends of the Government the most defiant habit. They openly talked of and as openly wished that the rebel leaders and their armed legions might take possession of Washington and hurl from power by force of arms the legally chosen and duly constituted authorities of the people of the United States. These women paid their visits to the camps of the rebel generals, gave them the right hand of fellowship, extended an invitation to them to come and take our nation's capital and promised them every aid they had power to render. They carried with them on such visits letters to those generals; letters which had been written by or collected at the house of Mrs. Greenhow; letters containing the most valuable information—all designed to aid the rebels in striking all the more effective blows. Statistical facts were thus obtained and forwarded that could have been found nowhere but in the national archives, thus leading me to the conclusion that such evidence must have been obtained from employes and agents in the various Departments of the Government.

I have further to report that for some days previous to the arrest of Mrs. Greenhow I had several of my operatives keeping watch over her house and also over the houses and persons of several who were well known to be in sympathy with Mrs. Greenhow and with other traitors and rebels against the Government. On the night previous to her arrest while I was keeping watch at and about the house of Mrs. Greenhow, being assisted by several of my operatives, an officer of the Army left her house at a late hour of the night and was followed by myself and one of my operatives, who when he discovered me commenced to run and was followed by myself and operative at a rapid gait, leading us to his quarters, where when we came up close behind him he called for the guard and ordered us both under arrest. The officer then went upstairs while I halted and looked at my watch. Said officer returned in twenty minutes with a revolver in his hand, saying that he went upstairs on purpose to get the revolver. The inquiry arises, was it for that purpose he staid thus or for the more probable one of hiding or destroying the evidence of his guilt obtained of Mrs. Greenhow or furnished to her; that I requested said officer to send word for me to Mr. Scott, Assistant Secretary of War, to General McClellan or to General Porter, all of which he refused to do, ordering us (myself and operative) into a most filthy and uncomfortable place under guard until morning, when we were discharged by Mr. Secretary Scott in person.

Such is the character and such were the associations of Mrs. Greenhow at the time of her arrest, since which time she has not ceased to lay plans, to attempt the bribery of officers having her in charge, to make use of signs from the windows of her house to her friends on the streets, to communicate with such friends and through them as she supposed send information to the rebels in ciphers requiring much time to decipher—all of which she supposed she was doing through an officer who had her in charge and whom she supposed she had bribed to that purpose, but who faithful to his trust laid her communications before yourself.

At her house under the circumstances heretofore detailed, at an hour approaching to midnight, for no purpose which he was able to explain, in company with a man (Rennehan) who though confined since the 23d of August last in the same room with Walker and who has been residing in Washington for many years has as yet not even attempted to prove his loyalty, Walker had called as heretofore recited and was taken into custody. I need hardly recite his course and appearance at the examination at the office of the provost-marshal, and how that appearance and action impressed Mr. Secretary Scott as well as myself with the belief that Walker was not only not loyal but that his purpose at Mrs. Greenhow's at that hour of night was beyond even a negative disloyalty. Since that time I have seen nothing to change my opinion.

In conclusion permit me to say that the statements referred to in the communication aforesaid from the State Department have been examined by me, and they are or many of them from distinguished men—men whose statements are entitled to weight.* But I submit that they are all general in their character and do not specifically show that Walker is a loyal man. It is a melancholy fact that hundreds of men who before this rebellion were above reproach, who were ornaments in society and high perhaps in public station, are now acting the traitor's part and in this our hour of need are joining hands to strike down the best Government in and the hope of the world.

No one can regret the existence of such a state of facts more than myself, nor the reasons which impel me to conclude that under the circumstances it is safer and wiser to hold both these men until the Government has once more established itself on such a basis as that not only them but even Mrs. Greenhow herself may be permitted to go at large with no fear of consequences. It seems to me that this is a time when if ever the line of demarcation between loyalty and disloyalty should be so clearly marked as to admit of very little doubt. I sympathize with any and every person who is deprived of liberty, but it is far better that a few should suffer than that the lives of our best men and bravest soldiers should be sacrificed, or what is worse the country suffer betrayal by men who in all things else bear a good and valuable character.

If Rennehan is a loyal man why has he not undertaken the proof? My inference is he cannot. I believe that both he and Walker went to Mrs. Greenhow's that night for the purpose of receiving and carrying information to the enemy, and that as a military necessity they ought not to be discharged.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Your obedient servant,

E. J. ALLEN.

SIR: Let William J. Walker, a prisoner confined in this city, be released on taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States stipulating that he will neither leave the city of Washington nor enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State; and also that he will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection. You will please make the stipulations a part of the oath.

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal.

GENERAL: I have the honor to report that agreeable to an order from the Department of State dated this day and addressed to yourself, signed by F. W. Seward, Assistant Secretary of State, ordering the release of William J. Walker, a prisoner confined in the Old Capitol Prison, I detailed one of my operatives to go to said prison and present him with the oath which it was ordered he should take on the occasion of discharge as a condition precedent by the Assistant Secretary aforesaid, with instructions to my operative to release said Walker if he took the oath but if he refused to let him remain in custody and report the case to me; that my operative went to the prison aforesaid and read the oath prescribed to said Walker, who upon hearing the same told my operative that he would not take the oath, objecting particularly to that part of it which allowed no mental reservation.

My operative further reports that said Walker offered among other reasons why he would not subscribe to the form of oath prescribed that he had relatives or friends in the South and that his sympathies were with them; that said Walker further told my operative that he was willing to give his parole of honor not to leave the city of Washington, but he would not take the oath; that the form of oath presented to Mr. Walker by my operative and which he refused to subscribe to was as follows, to wit.*

In conclusion I beg to submit that the occasion requires of me the reiteration of the opinion given in my previous report upon this case of William J. Walker that he is an unsafe man to be at large at such a time as this, when if ever the best efforts of every man whether in public or private life are required to maintain and defend the Constitution and flag of the United States. This man Walker is willing to enter upon his parole of honor that he will remain in the city of Washington during this rebellion unless permitted to depart by the Secretary of State. Why a parole of honor and not the oath? Because one binds him without mental reservation and the other does not. I further submit that the city of Washington is the very last place for such a man with such antecedents and upon his parole of honor to be allowed at large with his sympathies leaning South and his mental reservations unchecked, when upon that ground alone he refuses to swear like an honest man that he will do no act hostile to the best interests of the best Government on the face of the earth.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Your obedient servant,

E. J. ALLEN.

* Omitted here. See oath at p. 571, as finally subscribed by Walker.

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to report that on the 19th of November last in accordance with an order from the Secretary of State addressed to yourself, and as I reported to you in full at the time, I tendered through one of my operatives to William J. Walker, a prisoner in the Old Capitol Building, the usual oath of allegiance with a view to his taking it and being discharged from custody. He declined to take such oath for reasons satisfactory to himself (which I reported to you in full at the time), and was left as he was found in prison. Subsequently it seems said Walker signified his willingness to take the oath in the form it had been tendered to him, and in accordance with your orders on the 26th of November the oath was again tendered to him, when he took it and was thereupon discharged from prison. I have the honor to hand you the oath inclosed herewith duly executed to be sent to the Secretary of State in accordance with orders coming from that Department.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. J. ALLEN.

I, William J. Walker, of Washington, D. C., without permission of the Secretary of State; nor will I hold any correspondence whatsoever with any person within said States now in insurrection during the rebellion excepting by permission from the Secretary of State; also that I will do no act hostile or injurious to the Union of the States, nor will I give aid, comfort or assistance to the enemies of the Government whether foreign or domestic, and that I will defend the flag of the United States and the armies fighting under it from insult and injury if it be in my power so to do, and that I will in all things deport myself as a good and loyal citizen of the United States.

GENERAL: I will thank you to examine the case of Aaron Van Camp, a prisoner in your custody, and report to this Department.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,

Assistant Secretary.

HDQRS. CITY GUARD, PROVOST-MARSHAL'S OFFICE,

Washington, D. C., January 9, 1862.

Brig. Gen. A. PORTER, Provost-Marshal, Washington City.

GENERAL: In accordance with the request of the Hon. W. H. Seward, Secretary of State, directed to you requesting you to report on the case of Dr. Aaron Van Camp, I have the honor to report that Van Camp was arrested and confined in the Old Capitol under the following circumstances, to wit:

On the arrest of Mrs. Rose O'Neal Greenhow August 26, 1861, a letter in cipher was found in her possession addressed to Thomas J. Rayford,* another noted rebel emissary in forwarding and carrying information to the rebel government, from which letter the following is extracted:

Your three last dispatches I never got. Those by Applegate were betrayed by him to the War Department; also the one sent by our other channel was destroyed by Van Camp.

Acting on information thus secured I instructed my operatives to ascertain further particulars regarding the person named Van Camp and watch his proceedings. The result of their inquiries left no doubt as to the identity of the person thus under surveillance with the Van Camp mentioned in the letter above quoted from Mrs. Greenhow to Thomas J. Rayford or as to his intimacy and complicity with leading rebel emissaries in this city, particularly Michael Thompson, Mrs. Greenhow, Mrs. Phelps, William T. Smithson, alias Charles R. Cables, G. Donellan and others.

On November 26 two of my operatives left this city by stage for Leonardtown, Md. Near T. B. a person hailed the stage and traveled with them to the end of their journey. Having obtained the confidence of the stranger they ascertained him to be Dr. J. C. Herndon, U. S. Army, who had just deserted his post and was on his way to the rebels in Virginia with as he said important letters sewed up in his vest. My operatives also discovered that as he could not have left the city in a public conveyance without being suspected and probably arrested by the guards at the Eastern Branch bridge he was under the necessity of obtaining a private conveyance, which was furnished him by Van Camp, who knew his object in requiring it to be to desert from the U. S. Army and carry dispatches to the rebel government at Richmond.

* Rayford was in fact Col. Thomas Jordan, assistant adjutant-general to General Beauregard, of the Confederate Army, then occupying Centerville. See Jordan to Benjamin, p. 564.

Having obtained from various independent sources reliable information of Van Camp's acting as a spy for the rebels, forwarding information procured in frequent visits to our camps in Virginia and actively aiding all in his power to overthrow the Government of the United States, I directed his arrest to be effected, which was accordingly done. The next step was to take the depositions of persons who were acquainted with him. The substance of the concurrent testimony thus obtained is to the effect that his sentiments and sympathies are entirely with the rebel movement and opposed to this Government. In addition, however, to treasonable expressions of a general character there are particular expressions and acts requiring a special notice. George Stabler, who is intimately acquainted with Van Camp, testifies that the latter expressed satisfaction at his son joining the rebel army and sanctioned his going; that he had visited Manassas after the battle of Bull Run (in which his son was wounded), and that he always seemed to exult at any defeat of the Federal forces. My operative remarks in reference to the testimony of the above witness that it was given very unwillingly, and that the witness knows more about Van Camp than he is willing to tell. The cause of his unwillingness is presumed to be the intimacy and friendship existing between Van Camp and himself, which gives additional weight to the testimony thus elicited, especially when it is considered that the allegations are amply sustained by other testimony.

According to the deposition of Francis Reeside Van Camp told him that on his visit to Manassas he had obtained for his wounded son a position as orderly to General Beauregard. On Reeside's remarking that he was trying to get a place under Government Van Camp replied that it would be of no use for the Southerners would take this town. Reeside understood from Van Camp's manner that he had communications with the South. Van Camp furthermore stated to this witness that he had been in Missouri and they were fixing a plan there to kill the Dutch (Federals) and that in a month they would be all cleared out. Reeside heard him tell a man named Francis that he would be damned if he would fight against the South, and abused Francis for enlisting in the Federal Army.

Rev. William [D.] Haley, chaplain to the Seventeenth Massachusetts Regiment, states that he has heard Van Camp say that he was ready and willing to take up arms in defense of the South and secession. Mr. Haley is well acquainted with Van Camp and confirms many of the preceding statements.

Allen G. Fowler testifies that he has heard Van Camp say that he would rather take up arms on the Southern side than the Federal and that he approved of his son entering the rebel army.

In a letter written by Van Camp to his wife and which was found in his house speaking of his prospective return home from a journey to the West he uses the following expressions: "——— says I shall have to take the oath; if it was not for our claim I know what I would do." The evidence in this case therefore substantiates the following facts, to wit: that his sympathies and sentiments are decidedly with the rebels and against this Government; that with not only his consent but his approbation his son joined the rebel army. His son was wounded at the battle of Bull Run and has been since appointed an orderly on the staff of General Beauregard by the influence of the said Aaron Van

Camp. That a close intimacy amounting to actual co-operation in their treasonable acts and designs has been proved to exist between him and a clique of rebel emissaries resulting in one case in his destroying important documentary evidence against them; that in violation of the proclamation of the President of the United States Van Camp did surreptitiously and in a clandestine manner cross the line established by the Federal Army; visited and held intercourse with the leaders of the rebellion; that he enjoyed their confidence and was allowed to pass amongst them without let or hindrance.

I would also, general, especially call your attention to that portion of this report wherein it is shown that Van Camp assisted and abetted the desertion of a U. S. officer with the view of enabling him to join the rebel army; that he did assist the conveyance by the same of valuable information and dispatches to the rebel government, and I would respectfully suggest that in this he has been guilty of a serious military offense for which he should be held to a full accountability as also for his treasonable practices and connection with the rebels.

It is therefore evident that no matter what engagements he may make to the contrary a man of his influence, ability and connections should not be allowed to go at large and thereby be enabled to assist in rebellion those persons whom it is the object of our Army to overcome. I therefore respectfully recommend that as a military necessity Aaron Van Camp be kept in close confinement until the close of the war.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. J. ALLEN.

WASHINGTON, March 7, 1862.

Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

HONORED SIR: After several ineffectual attempts to see you in person I have the honor to address you by letter, the contents of which I trust will elicit your most favorable consideration. In the month of August last I was placed under arrest for alleged disloyalty to the Government of the United States. After a confinement of three months I was released by the honorable Secretary of State upon taking the oath of allegiance and giving my parole not to give aid nor comfort to the enemy nor to leave the city unless by permission of the Secretary of State. Upon making application to the Secretary a few days since with a view to be relieved from that portion of the parole which prevents my leaving the city I was referred to you as being the proper person to make application to inasmuch as you now have control of all such matters. In accordance with the suggestion I most respectfully beg to present my case to your attention. Under your recent proclamation I am inclined to think that I come within its true scope and meaning. If it should be consistent with your sense of duty to release me from that portion of my parole, viz, that portion which prescribes me to the city limits I will remain under perpetual obligations.

I have the honor to remain, your most obedient servant,

WILLIAM J. WALKER.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 7, 1862.

WILLIAM J. WALKER, Esq., Washington.

SIR: I am directed by the Secretary of War to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 7th instant and to say in reply that it is deemed inexpedient at the present time to modify the terms of your parole.

Very respectfully, yours,

E. D. WEBSTER.

OLD CAPITOL PRISON, [Washington,] March 15, [1862].

[Mrs. MOORE, San Francisco, Cal.]

MY DARLING: All my letters must reach you through our underground as these despicable scoundrels, the detectives, now examine all letters and exercise their discretion about sending them. My last letters were returned to me; also a note to Adie Douglas telling her your order of Stanton's. My God! you cannot conceive the outrageous practices here. These Black Republican dogs have made a howl in Congress about the negroes that were confined in the jail, and they confined me and other ladies in a filthy room the walls of which these few warm days are covered with vermin and have lodged negroes in the same quarters above, below and around. In fact we are confined in a negro quarter of the building. We cannot open our windows without the stench from over 100 negroes, and if you have ever been in the neighborhood of a negro meeting-house in summer you can fancy what odors reach us when our door opens. I will have my revenge and bear these outrages better on that account. I have no feeling but hate toward this detested, demoralized nation and I thank God that it is in its last throes.

McClellan has got his congé, having served the purpose of killing off Scott. Stanton has been brought forward to get rid of McClellan and he will be put aside in his turn. These men let their vanity blind them as to their real position and content themselves with the applause manufactured in advance to suit the rôle they are intended to play and lose sight of what a light observation should point out to them—the necessity of making a party for themselves.

Stanton is now fooled to the top of his bent. He writes magnificent orders for Lincoln and lords it in the most approved fashion. He does not see what others see—that his own fall is not distant. The abolition policy is now fully avowed. Frémont has been again galvanized into prominence. If he was a man of talent and nerve he would be the first American dictator. As it is he will be the cat's-paw to draw the chestnuts out of the fire for somebody else to eat. I am pressed for time, darling.

The naval engagement has been a glorious victory to the Confederates, unprecedented in daring in any age. The retreat from Manassas is also a most masterly success and I don't wonder at the howl of indignation of the whole North at being so outwitted. I shall try to give you a full account of things here. I do not care to speak of Mrs. Cutts. I shall publish an account of my experiences. When I tell you this I am now seven months a prisoner but in that time she and Adie have been three times to see me; that only once during that whole period have they ever sent me the smallest thing and this was on Christmas as an ostentatious display. But I am content. I shall send you some colored clothing for yourself and Leila. As for myself I shall never lay aside my mourning. God bless you, darling. My love to dear Leila and Minnie.

Your devoted mother,

R. [O'N.] GREENHOW.

We the undersigned, late prisoners in the Old Capitol at Washington, do pledge our word of honor that in consideration of our being set at liberty beyond the lines of the U. S. NOTE.—Mrs. C. V. Baxley and Mrs. Augusta Morris also signed this parole and were sent South with Mrs. Greenhow.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF VIRGINIA,
Fort Monroe, Va., June 3, 1862.

Mr. FULTON, Baltimore, Md.

SIR: I am requested by General Dix to say to you that he has seen in the New York Times and Herald a notice of his departure from Baltimore, which he supposes was furnished by the agent of the Associated Press, in the latter part of which a gross misstatement is made. The portion alluded to is in relation to the female prisoners, Mrs. Greenhow, Mrs. Morris and Mrs. Baxley. The women were in charge of an officer of the First U. S. Volunteer Cavalry, accompanied by a guard of six men. The general gave him orders to keep them in close confinement with a guard over them with instructions to allow no communication with any one whatever, which order he has every reason to believe was strictly carried out. Besides the guard they were accompanied by the warden of the Old Capitol Prison. The statement that they were permitted to hold a regular "levee" must therefore seem to be a pure misapprehension.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILSON BARSTOW,
Aide-de-Camp.

* Mrs. C. V. Baxley and Mrs. Augusta Heath Morris were the other parties included in this order. For their cases see post.

Case of Daniel C. Lowber.

Daniel C. Lowber, of New Orleans, was arrested at Crestline, Ohio, on the 23d of August, 1861, by an officer of the New York police, charged with being a bearer of dispatches between the rebel government and Europe. He had sailed from New York for Europe early in July and various charges were made to the State Department and to the police of New York that he took out dispatches from the rebel government and would bring back answers or other dispatches on the steamer Edinburgh near the middle of August. On the arrival of that vessel it was learned that he had disembarked at Halifax and was making his way through Canada. Hence his pursuit and capture at Crestline as aforesaid. During his absence he wrote: "I have succeeded in getting a big thing for the Confederate States of America from some moneyed men in England." He arrived at Fishkill, N. Y., at a house of a relative on or about 20th of August, 1861, and on the 21st went to New York, as he said, "to dispose of his papers, sending them South if possible through Adams Express, if not by private messenger, John Jackson." Of all these proceedings the New York police had notice and their vigilance prevented the transmission of papers by either means of conveyance contemplated. Returning to the house of his relative he asked for some letters which he had left lying carelessly about on the library table. One was mislaid and in the fright which seized him he said it was the dispatch brought from England for Davis. He had been unsuccessful in France. He afterward became alarmed and left Fishkill under cover of darkness to take the Harlem Railroad at Dover Plains for New York; but returning under some pretext, before we knew what he was about he had burned the dispatch, trusting to his memory to convey the contents safely to Richmond. He had made proposals to France and England. The commissioners in England had assured him that before Christmas the blockade would be run. With this assurance he went to several large houses in England and made proposals for a loan on sugar and cotton, chiefly upon cotton, and received from some of them proposals in return. Others were to follow him by mail. He made his way by the Harlem Railroad to New York and thence by way of Philadelphia westward till he was arrested at Crestline as before stated. The occurrences at Fishkill and the burning of the dispatch or package explain why no such documents were found in his possession as it was alleged he bore. Among the papers found in Lowber's possession was a letter from the rebel commissioner P. A. Rost, dated Paris, August 4, 1861, addressed to Hon. Pierre Soulé, New Orleans, on private business but containing the following words which may imply that Lowber took dispatches relating to Rost's public mission: "I have no important news to give you but to report progress." There was also a letter signed W. W. Mertens, dated Liverpool, August 6, 1861, addressed to the mother of the writer at Petersburg, Va., saying:

I send this by Mr. Lowber, of New Orleans, who tells me he intended going to Richmond to see President Davis. * * * I have wanted to send you some money but I do not know how I could do so safely. I would send it in this letter if I were certain that Mr. Lowber would go to Virginia, but his route may be altered if President Davis should not be in Richmond.

Mr. Kennedy, the superintendent of police in New York, in writing the result of the pursuit of Lowber and of the examination of his papers, August 26, 1861, says:

The great pains he took to avoid arrest is the strongest feature against him as it stands, unless some of the letters which I this day forward to you by Adams Express may contain matter of treasonable character.

But the superintendent of police did not then know of the disclosures made by Lowber at Fishkill and of the burning of the package there, which had been communicated directly to the Department of State. Lowber on being brought to New York was confined in Fort Lafayette by direction of the Secretary of State and was afterward transferred to Fort Warren where he was detained till January 10, 1862, when he was released on his parole to leave the United States within fifteen days and go directly to the Kingdom of Great Britain and remain in that Kingdom until the cessation of the present hostilities and not to hold or be engaged in any correspondence nor do any act hostile or injurious to the Government.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: From sources entitled to the utmost confidence I learn there is now on the way from Europe a bearer of dispatches to the Confederate States of America. His real name is D. C. Lowber and is a brother of Captain Lowber, of the U. S. revenue service. He left this country under an assumed name and may possibly return under the same appellation. I will endeavor to ascertain what it is and communicate it to the U. S. marshal of this district. I understand his arrival is expected every moment and would be happy if the Government could get possession of his dispatches, and have in writing this morning communicated the affair to the U. S. marshal.

It may appear impertinent for me to offer a suggestion, but I avail myself of this occasion to recommend putting martial law in force in New York, Baltimore and Philadelphia as the only means of suppressing the treasonable papers, spies, &c., which are actively at work. It is well known here that Adams Express daily conveys information in every shape to all quarters of the Southern Confederacy and we apprehend the Government is yet hardly aware of the necessity of the most energetic measures against an enemy that stops at nothing and would glory in the destruction of the North.

Very truly, yours,

GEO. H. BALL.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Washington.

DEAR SIR: I have most positive assurances that a rebel ambassador, a bearer of dispatches from Jeff. Davis' Government to Europe, is now on his return home. His real name is D. C. Lowber but he did not sail under that name when he went out and probably has some other name on his return voyage. There is no doubt whatever that he is now on his way home for I have the intelligence through some of his most intimate friends who condemn his course but will not name it to the Government. Would it not be well to instruct Marshal Murray about this? Permit me also to say that Adams Express is yet daily carrying South from Northern traitors letters containing revelations of all that is doing here, and on application only a day or two since at their office they replied they would take whatever of documents might be desired, not claiming of course to know contents. In this way it is not difficult to post Jeff. Davis and his rebels with any news of matters occurring here. The carrying of mails and papers by this express surely can do no good, but I only name the circumstances existing for your consideration.

Respectfully,

N. A. ADAMS.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD:

Daniel C. Lowber, of New Orleans, went to Europe six weeks ago under suspicious circumstances. In returning instead of coming on the steamer he landed at Halifax and came across country to Newburg. Last night he took the 5 o'clock train at Poughkeepsie for the West. He is undoubtedly bearer of important papers from the Confederates and every effort should be made to secure his arrest. We have one of his trunks addressed to him at Indianapolis. Would it not be well to put the officers of all sorts on the border on their guard? He wears false teeth. His whiskers are grayish and he lisps in his speech. I have sent a man in pursuit but he may be too late.

JOHN A. KENNEDY.

PEEKSKILL, August 24, 1861.

W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: My uncle, D. C. Lowber, of New Orleans, passed through New York en route for Liverpool about the 1st of August as bearer of dispatches from the Confederate States to France and England. A day or two before my father left for Liverpool I was shown a letter from Mr. Lowber in which he said, "I have succeeded in getting a big thing for the Confederate States of America from some moneyed men in England." As my father had only a few hours at home I did not trouble him about it, but arranged that he (uncle) should be searched immediately on his arrival by steamer Edinburgh. This was checked by his coming through by way of Quebec and reaching our house Tuesday evening. Wednesday he went to New York. He told us to dispose of his papers, sending them South if possible through Adams Express, if not by private messenger, John Jackson. I sent messenger through Mr. Monell to have Jackson watched and Adams Express searched for several days. Returning at 3 o'clock, he asked for some letters which he had left lying carelessly about on the library table. One was mislaid and in the fright which seized him he told me it was the dispatch brought from England for Davis. He had been unsuccessful in France. He was to leave at 6 o'clock for Richmond, via Indianapolis and Louisville. The family were too strongly anxious for his safety to permit any information to be given endangering one who through thirty years of political antagonism had continued my father's closest friend and our dearest relative.

The only means I could contrive to get the papers was to create a panic. I drove to the station in advance with his trunk and returned with news that the station agent had refused to check the trunk; that the detectives were doubtless on his track and gave him a telegram received from John Jackson in confirmation. He handed me the dispatches to conceal, jumped into the carriage which was waiting and we started for Dover Plains where he could take the Harlem train to

New York. But a second thought for the safety of our family urged him to return and before we knew what he was about he had burned the dispatch, trusting to his memory to carry the contents safely to Richmond, so I was again checked.

In our long night drive, however, his gratitude for my assisting him in his flight, his release from the sudden fear and his old love and confidence in us led him to talk freely. He had made proposals to France and England. The commissioners in England had assured him that before Christmas the blockade would be [broken]. With this assurance he went to several large houses in England and made proposals for a loan upon sugar and cotton, chiefly upon cotton, and received from some of them proposals in return. Others were to follow him by mail. His English letters would be addressed care of A. H. Schultz, or to D. Matthews, 87 (or 78, I forget which) Nassau street, or to John Jackson, 17 Broadway, or box. Wherever they came they were to be taken up by Jackson, opened, memoranda taken of them and copies made and sent to Henry Neill, Galt House, Louisville, or inclosed to editor of Louisville Courier, to be kept until called for by Henry Neill under which name my uncle will travel. If the proposals were accepted Jackson was to telegraph him to the same address "All favorable." The originals will be sent to me to mail to the same address from Fishkill. His trunk I am to open and make copies of any letters in it which might be detained were it opened and forward to him there or to New Orleans, keeping the originals. There was a new cipher contrived and agreed upon between him and Jackson by which he could send any information which might transpire. This I have not yet got but hope to. He anticipated an attack upon our troops before Sunday, 30th of August. If repulsed or if uncertain of success they would as before feign a retreat to draw our soldiers upon the batteries they have been busied in building since the Manassas affair. These will be completed in eight or ten days and they are in haste to use them before our gun-boats are completed. In order to cover uncle's flight I urged Mr. Jackson to follow him with me to the Newark station where he might wait for money. Owing to the information given we were all day under police surveillance but at last we eluded them and returned to Staten Island without having seen him, where I was forced from exhaustion to remain.

Uncle will return to England should all be favorable by way of Detroit and Chicago to Quebec. He says the police and marshals in either or any of the Western towns are more careless and indifferent and slow than those of New York and anticipated no detention there. The correspondence I hope can be seized at the post-office or Adams Express. And why can't this be stopped entirely? If not I would go to New York to mail the letters and they could be taken upon me by notice given to the police. In this case I would rather suffer anything for treason than have my family know that I was acting as spy. Should any name have to be used in the former case Mr. J. J. Monell, of Newburg, has given me leave to substitute his for mine.

With warm thanks for your late kindness to my father and kind remembrance and wishes for myself, I remain, yours, truly,
MARY LOWBER SCHULTZ.

For the purpose of keeping this secret from my family I have written from Mrs. Beecher's at Peekskill. Should there be any reply or questions to be asked if you address to Peekskill in cover to H. W. Beecher they will at once forward it to me.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD:

Officer King has just arrived with Daniel C. Lowber in custody, whom he arrested in Ohio. I have examined his baggage carefully. Find nothing in shape of dispatches. If he had any he parted with them. What shall I do with him?

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.—
OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT OF POLICE,
*New York, August 26, 1861.*Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Previous to the arrival of Mr. Daniel C. Lowber from Europe I was called upon by a person related to him by family ties and who necessarily desires to be kept from exposure and informed that Lowber was expected to return on the steamer Edinburgh, then expected to arrive on Tuesday last, 20th instant; that when he went out he carried dispatches and that doubtless he would have others on his return. On this information I communicated with the U. S. marshal and arranged for a joint action to secure him and his papers on the arrival of the steamer.

The Edinburgh did not arrive until the 21st, and on the search it was ascertained he had not come on that vessel. While our officers were engaged on the steamer making the search I received the telegraphic dispatch from Newburg, a copy of which I herewith inclose except the names of the parties, who desire not to be made known, but they are respectable persons. I at once placed detectives at the office of Richards & Co., 15 Broadway, where he had a business connection; at Adams Express, where every package during the day received with a New Orleans address was carefully examined and nothing found of the form or character of dispatches to the Confederates. I also put a watch on the house of his brother-in-law, Mr. Evans, in West Twenty-fifth street. At 9.45 in the evening I sent three men to Fishkill Landing to look for him there, he having a sister-in-law living at Matteawan. On arriving there they found his trunk marked "Neill," the name of his son-in-law, which had been brought to the depot by his niece during the afternoon to be checked for Indianapolis, which was sent to me. And they also ascertained that some intimation was given to the lady at the depot by which she was enabled to infer that officers were in pursuit. She immediately returned home and accompanied him in a carriage in the direction of Fishkill village, giving out that they were going to Poughkeepsie to take the Hudson River train up, but in reality went to a station on the Harlem road and took a train down to the city, passed over to Jersey City and so proceeded to Philadelphia, and then took the next train west via Pittsburg, &c.

On receipt of this telegram from Fishkill announcing his departure I sent a man by the New Jersey Central, being the first train west, to head him off if possible, supposing he had gone by way of Buffalo; but it so happened that by the time they reached Pittsburg both Officer King and the fugitive were on the same train, and the sagacity of the officer led to his detection and identification at a station on the Fort Wayne railroad (Alliance), where the train stopped to dine, but he prudently telegraphed for help to meet him at the depot at Crestline, where the arrest was made, but nothing found on him to implicate him.

The great pains he took to avoid arrest is the strongest feature against him as it stands unless some of the letters which I this day forward to you by Adams Express may contain matter of treasonable character. He denies having had anything of the kind intrusted to him, either in going out or returning; that his visit was on business and in pursuit of health solely. He is a New Yorker by birth, thoroughly southernized by more than twenty years' residence at the South. I am thus particular that you may see the whole case

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

PHILADELPHIA, August 28, 1861.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

SIR: My anxiety and the occasion of my writing to you yesterday* was, I find in an interview with Mary, not well founded. I feared that Mary felt herself to be the cause of her uncle's arrest and that it had so influenced her feelings as to prompt an impulsive visit to Washington in the hope of interesting you in a merciful consideration of her uncle's case. As you know now from Mary's own statement to you she wrote me under the influence of a high sense of duty that she feared her uncle was possessed of both means and papers to be used against the Government. Believing Mr. Lowber would be in the Edinburgh I sent my brother to Mr. Kennedy to impart my belief and conviction that Mr. Lowber was in a hostile attitude to the Government with both means and papers in possession that would prove his guilt. I desired my brother to say to Mr. Kennedy that I was prepared to make oath as to my belief if such would be required to warrant the arrest. Mr. Kennedy promised prompt action and that Mr. Lowber should be arrested. He did not make sufficiently intelligent arrangements and unnecessary notoriety has been given to a very simple affair.

Mr. Lowber's visit to the home of my uncle was a gross insult and any man of ordinary sense might have easily so recognized. It may be that it was designed to disarm suspicion. If so the outrage was the greater. That feeling should have acted with some members of the family I can well comprehend, as it too often influences for the time the higher attribute of duty. But as to the loyalty of our family being above all suspicion let, with the simple exception of Mr. Lowber, their record since the first glimpse of treason was manifest attest. But I feel more annoyance as to my uncle, Alex. H. Schultz. I can simply write that I know it to be impossible for him to entertain a thought or feeling not in hearty unison with the Government whose honored servant he at present is and I can forgive everything to Mr. Lowber better than his reckless visit to Fishkill. I would underwrite Captain Schultz with my life and I will hope a suspicion of his integrity has never crossed your mind. I have rapidly and interruptedly written but I trust not impertinently, and will ask you to regard the feeling that has prompted it and kindly overlook any lack of etiquette.

Respectfully,

E. S. JAMES.

SIR: I have received a letter from Mr. D. C. Lowber, a prisoner confined at Fort Lafayette, asking permission for his niece, Miss Mary L. I am, sir, your very obedient servant,

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 30, 1861.
 Hon. THURLOW WEED.

DEAR SIR: Personally we are strangers but I have known you by reputation since my boyhood and you may have heard my name mentioned by my brother-in-law, Capt. A. H. Schultz. I am sadly in need of a friend in my extremity, and stranger as I am to you I thus boldly force myself on your notice and ask your assistance.

*Not found.

Over nine weeks ago I was arrested under very suspicious circumstances at Crestline. I was supposed to be a bearer of dispatches to the Confederate Government. My baggage was taken possession of by the superintendent of police in New York and after a thorough overhauling nothing was found to criminate me, but it was said that I had ample time to dispose of my dispatches before my arrest.

Permit me to state to you "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth." On the 6th of July I left my home in New Orleans to make a flying trip to Europe partly for the benefit of my health and partly to have a personal interview with my business correspondents in Liverpool and Glasgow. My whole stay in England and France was but eight days, and here let me assert that I neither carried over nor brought back any writing or any verbal message to or from any person directly or indirectly connected with the Confederate Government except a private letter from the Hon. P. A. Rost to Pierre Soulé which Judge Rost, who is an old friend of mine, told me contained some instructions in relation to a legal suit Mr. Soulé had in charge for him. Further than this I never belonged to a military company, I never held a public office and I cannot recollect that I have attended a political meeting in twenty-five years. Still I would not convey to you the idea that I am not decided in my political opinions. If that is a crime worthy of punishment by imprisonment there is not sufficient prison room in the States to hold those equally culpable as myself.

Please bear in mind that when I came North there was no restriction on Southern travelers but it was held out that quiet persons not interfering with public matters could go and come at their leisure. And even when the passport system was adopted it was not to be operative on citizens (private citizens) of seceded States returning from Europe until they had time to hear of the new regulation. Had I been conscious of being in the act of committing any offense against the Federal Government I would not have unhesitatingly paid the friendly visit I did to my relatives at Fishkill Landing knowing how widely we differed in our political views. Had that visit not have been made I would not probably have been arrested.

As I said before it is now over nine weeks that I have been incarcerated here, shut out from intercourse with all those who make life dear to me. Driven to desperation by the seeming neglect of those who I thought would unasked by me endeavor to effect my release I recently attempted to escape and was caught in the act. The penalty—double irons and a four by six foot cell in the guard house during the pleasure of the commandant of the fort—I was perfectly aware of before making the attempt. It was faithfully but not harshly imposed and of that I have not one word of complaint to make. But I conceive there was nothing particularly atrocious in my endeavor to free myself surreptitiously. At least twenty officers and men confined as prisoners of war at Richmond have evaded the vigilance of their keepers and on their arrival at Washington have been patted on the back as good and enterprising fellows. It may be said that I can be released if I establish all the foregoing facts on taking the oath of allegiance, but the question arises is it right to require me to take that oath when it is well known it will work the immediate confiscation of my property for the benefit of the Confederate Government and that you are not now in a position to protect that property for me? In regard to giving my parole not to visit or to correspond with a seceded State that I will do and will honorably keep the promise until released from it. May I beg of you the favor to call the attention of him who has the power to open the gates of my prison to this my case? If there are any other explanations I can make they will be promptly given as the days here seem like weeks and I confess to a great anxiety to get out.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. C. LOWBER.

NEW YORK, November 5, 1861.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEAR SIR: Allow me to call your attention to the inclosed letter* from Mr. D. C. Lowber, now a prisoner in Fort Warren; also to a paper handed me last evening by Charles Todd. Of nearly all the statements in it I hold confirmatory letters from Mr. and Mrs. Lowber and Mr. Neill and other residents of New Orleans dating from October, 1860, to April, 1861, which I will forward if desired. Particularly is it well known that Mr. Lowber made himself to some degree obnoxious in New Orleans by his strong defense of the Union and his condemnation of the precipitate action of the South against an untried Administration, and an unhesitating and continued remonstrance against the existence of a vigilance committee. From my own experience I can say that his house was the only one in New Orleans in which I ever heard abolitionism fairly allowed an utterance. In a conversation with Miss Frémont, then visiting at his house in New Orleans in May, 1860, I remember his distinctly avowed disgust at the demagogues who wished by secession to plunge the country into civil war, for which he believed they had not one unfriendly act of Government to show as excuse. At the time that he broke a friendship of fifteen years' standing and turned Mr. Thomas Heard from his house for his offensive utterance of secession sentiments (December 24) the feeling against him was so strong that both he and Mr. Neill were repeatedly threatened by the vigilance committee, and I most sincerely believe that he left New Orleans with the simple and sole purpose of visiting his grandchildren and establishing business relations in Glasgow. Also I think it can be proved that whatever letters or papers he carried on his return not one found its way South. All his existing letters and papers are now in possession of the Government. Four or five Union men well known as such are willing in consideration of these statements and his tried truth to give bail for his honorable adherence to his parole. Or should bail be refused they will hold themselves responsible for his word. As we are the only relatives in the North with whom he would care to spend an hour I think it is almost unnecessary to pledge ourselves for his good faith. You must know that no aid or comfort to the enemy would go from our house.

I have been induced to write thus from the belief forced upon me that Mr. Lowber's health is being seriously affected and his constitution undermined by the inactivity of prison life and by the conviction that if released on parole no harm could result to the cause nearest and dearest to me. The disease from which he suffers is peculiarly fostered by confinement and from my knowledge of the family tendency I have been seriously alarmed lately lest it terminate in some form of insanity. Except my parents he is my dearest relative and I could not entertain this belief without longing to save him from such a fate. But for this conviction my perfect trust in the Administration would have forbid my uttering one word on the subject.

*Not found, but probably Lowber to Seward, preceding.

Respectfully,

MARY LOWBER SCHULTZ.

[Inclosure.]

NEW YORK, November 4, 1861.

I hereby declare that having been a resident of New Orleans during the last winter, and being a frequent visitor at the house of Mr. Daniel C. Lowber, I was enabled to know his feelings on the political questions before the country. From the frequent conversations I held with him during the winter I knew him to be a Union man, and it was only upon the actual secession of his State that he felt that loyalty to his home should cause him to favor the acts of the South, but I know he took no active part in politics, and I never knew him to attend any of the political meetings—in fact, he was a remarkably quiet and private citizen. In confirmation of the above I would state that both Mr. and Mrs. Lowber considered me an abolitionist and still I was always welcome at their house; also that I know he turned a boarder out of his house on account of his secession talk, about January last. Again Mr. H. M. Neill was complained of to the vigilance committee and proscribed on account of his Northern feelings, and Mr. Lowber took the most active and determined part in his defense and prevented any action being taken against him. As regards his trip to Europe I can testify that during the winter and spring I frequently heard Mr. Lowber speak of his intention of going to Europe during the ensuing summer, partly on account of his general health but more particularly on account of his hearing which was getting to be very bad; also to arrange for credits and direct shipments of iron pipe from the iron manufacturers of Glasgow. It would certainly be surprising if the rebel leaders employed in a clandestine mission a man so very deaf as he was and so very outspoken on every subject.

I learn from Mr. Lowber that the close confinement and want of exercise is affecting his health. I may add that I am a native of this city and a loyal citizen of the United States.

No. 8 HANOVER STREET, NEW YORK, November 9, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: At the request of the friends of Mr. Daniel C. Lowber, now a prisoner in Fort Warren, I beg to state what I know of his proceedings in Europe. The first I saw or knew of him there was on his arrival at Holywood, near Belfast, Ireland, where he came quite unexpectedly to me or my brother on a visit to my brother and to see his grandchildren, my brother's children. He staid there only one night and invited my brother to accompany him to Glasgow to introduce him to the manufacturers of gas and water pipes with a view to arrangements for business on the termination of the war. My brother could not go but requested me to accompany him which I readily consented to, as I had business of my own in Glasgow and Edinburgh. I accordingly at Glasgow introduced him to our agent, Mr. John Kincaid, who took him to the largest manufacturer in that line, I not accompanying them. I also called with Mr. Lowber on a firm in the same line (McLaren & Co.) with whom he had previously done business in pipes. These calls occupied the forenoon and we parted at about 4 p. m. of the day we reached Glasgow, he to go on to London and I to go to Edinburgh on my own affairs. I have not seen him since nor heard from him except a few lines received from Liverpool before he sailed for America acknowledging the receipt of his watch which I had forwarded to him and referring in sufficiently boastful terms to the battle of Bull Run.

While at Hollywood and on board the steamer for Glasgow he talked very freely, defending slavery against our abolition sentiments and expressing the most entire confidence in the success of the rebellion and the restoration of peace within ninety days. He also mentioned to me that Mr. Rost, or Judge Rost as he called him, was an old friend of his and he intended to call on him at Paris and learn what prospect there was of the Confederate Government being recognized by the Emperor. I asked him to let me know the result and inquired if he intended to call on the commissioner in London. He seemed in doubt, saying that he did not know him personally.

As soon as I heard of his arrest which I did in Liverpool from Captain Schultz I informed the latter that from what I had seen of him and the entire tone of his conversation I was satisfied he had no official or other connection with the Confederate Government, for if he had I felt certain he would have been proud of it and told me or my brother of it, while on the contrary he stated positively that he was only going to call on Rost as an old Louisiana friend and to satisfy his curiosity as to the chance of recognition. I thought it possible, however, that Rost might have asked him to carry a letter for him and if so it was likely enough that he may have thoughtlessly consented to do so. But if so I know nothing of it, and I may remark that at that time it was a very natural mistake and one I should readily have fallen into myself as it had hardly been declared illegal.

I have no doubt from Mr. Lowber's character that if released upon his parole he will rigidly keep it and I should readily join in giving bail for him. I am aware that he last winter interfered effectually with the vigilance committee of New Orleans in behalf of my brother who had been proscribed by them as an abolitionist and but for Mr. Lowber's advocacy he would probably have been notified to leave the State to the destruction of an extensive and valuable business. Such acts on behalf of men with Northern ideas ought surely to be considered unless there is something serious against him of which I know nothing.

I remain, with great respect, your obedient servant,

WM. M. NEILL.

As to my own trustworthiness and my principles I can refer to the following whom you will not suspect of too great regard for the South: Charles L. Brace, my brother-in-law; H. J. Raymond, of the New York Times; C. A. Dana, Tribune; Wendell Phillips, W. C. Bryant, Evening Post; W. Lloyd Garrison, Fred. L. Olmsted, Charles G. Loring, H. Ward Beecher, &c., all of whom are my intimate personal friends.

Hon. F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: On my way to New York I met here an old and highly valued friend of mine, William M. Neill, esq., from England, and I have herewith the honor of introducing him to you. Mr. Neill has resided for a considerable time in New York, where his sympathies with liberal ideas and with intellectual and artistic interests have endeared him to a wide circle including some of our most distinguished citizens.

Mr. Neill who holds a high position in the commercial world as the chief partner of a cotton exporting firm is now again in this country particularly for the purpose of studying the nature of our present contest in its bearings upon the cotton interests of Great Britain. Mr. Neill visits Washington for a short time in the pursuit of these investigations and also in that of matters of a more private character. I beg to state that I have known Mr. Neill for a considerable time and that any statement of his is entitled to the most implicit faith in his veracity and integrity.

I have the honor to remain, dear sir, yours, very respectfully,
JULIUS BING.

His Excellency ABRAHAM LINCOLN,

SIR: I was arrested on the 23d of August, and by order of the Secretary of State was committed to Fort Lafayette and thence transferred to this place. Over four months have now elapsed and I have heard of no charges against me, but I presume I am detained as a citizen of Louisiana. As it is not probable I shall ever be brought to trial and the further imprisonment of a humble private individual like myself can be of no benefit to the United States Government I respectfully ask permission and a passport to embark for England under a pledge that I will not return to America until the present disturbances are over, nor aid, comfort or hold correspondence with any person in the seceded States.

Your obedient servant,

FORT WARREN, December 30, 1861.

DEAR HAMILTON: As the break of day is now apparent to all except those who are fattening and battenning on this unholy war I stoop to ask a favor of a political enemy, personal friend though he be. I have now been imprisoned so long that it is absolutely necessary on account of my business affairs that I should go to England before I return home and I want you to see President Lincoln and ask for permission and passport to embark on the steamer that leaves Boston on the 8th. If it is obtained you must also pay my passage on sea as I am entirely out of money. In Liverpool I can obtain what further funds I need. I would prefer that this application should not be mentioned, even in the family, as some of the family are in such intimate companionship with J. A. Kennedy that the first thing we will know will be an account of it in the Tribune, and for a humble private individual my name has been in the papers as often as I care to have it. It is well that you and I have not corresponded since your return from England. The bitter thoughts that this war has created in my heart would have found utterance in bitter words, and the corner stone of something more than an apparent estrangement might have been laid. As it is, the same old love that has filled my heart for you and yours for the last thirty-two years still wells up in it with undiminished force.

Understand me, in asking for my release and passport I do not wish to leave Fort Warren until the day before the steamer sails, so that I can go immediately on board.

Give my love to the old enemy and her inimical scions and believe me, ever truly yours,

D. C. LOWBER.

Much as I wish to get to England I can take no oath of allegiance to the United States Government, but I will give my parole not to return to the country during the continuance of the war and not to aid, comfort or correspond with the Southern States until peace is made. If you think it worth while you can hand this letter to President Lincoln.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 7, 1862.

Col. JUSTIN DIMICK, Fort Warren, Boston.

COLONEL: You will please release Mr. D. C. Lowber, a prisoner confined at Fort Warren, Boston, on his complying with the following conditions, namely: That he will engage upon oath that he will leave the United States within the period of fifteen days from the day of his release and go directly to the Kingdom of Great Britain; that he will remain in that Kingdom until the cessation of the present hostilities between the Government of the United States and the persons in insurrection against its authority; that he will not correspond with or be engaged in any correspondence hostile or injurious to the Government of the United States with persons residing in the insurrectionary States during the present hostilities without permission from the Secretary of State; and further, that he will do no act hostile or injurious to the Government of the United States.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 7, 1862.

JOHN A. KENNEDY, Esq.,

Superintendent of Police, New York.

SIR: Colonel Dimick has been directed to release Mr. D. C. Lowber upon condition among others that he will leave the United States, and you will therefore permit him to embark without a passport.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,

Assistant Secretary.

FORT WARREN, Boston Harbor, January 10, 1862.

I, D. C. Lowber, prisoner confined at Fort Warren, do solemnly swear that I will leave the United States within the period of fifteen days from this date and go directly to the Kingdom of Great Britain; that I will remain in that Kingdom until the cessation of the present hostilities between the Government of the United States and the persons in insurrection against its authority; that I will not correspond or be engaged in any correspondence hostile or injurious to the Government of the United States with persons residing in the insurrectionary States during the present hostilities without permission from the Secretary of State; and further, that I will do no act hostile or injurious to the Government of the United States. So help me God.

PARIS, August 4, 1861.

N. M. BENACHI, Esq., New Orleans, La.
(Politeness of D. C. Lowber.)

DEAR SIR AND FRIEND: I suppose a few lines from this part of the world will be acceptable to you and therefore embrace a direct opportunity to let you hear from us and hope you will do me the favor to write me a few lines and give me what information you possess about matters and things in New Orleans. We are kept in constant excitement about the infamous war the North is waging against us. By every steamer from New York we hear that a battle or skirmish has taken place and that the North is victorious. In fact, if all we hear is true they must by this time have 5,000 or 6,000 prisoners on hand. Many of our people here are dreadfully alarmed and think we are gone, but from what I saw when I traveled from New Orleans to Nashville I don't think it possible for the North to subjugate us. It is perfect nonsense for them to suppose they can if the South continue united, and from all appearances I don't think there is a doubt of it. I yesterday made a bet with a gentleman that whenever Jeff. Davis, Beauregard or Lee accepted a battle that they would gain it. I have every hope such will be the result. They are quite right to fall back till they are sure of success for a defeat in a general battle would have a most disastrous effect both on the morale of our army at home and in Europe. All eyes are turned to Virginia and the result of the first and second grand battles. Should we be successful in one or two grand engagements depend on it England and France will immediately acknowledge our independence notwithstanding all you hear from old fogies.

We yesterday saw in the English papers a letter from Mr. Mure, the British consul in New Orleans. We were all much astonished that Mr. Mure should have thought it necessary to write a letter so injurious to the interests of the South at this time particularly. What he says may have taken place but not in the manner that he describes it. I do not believe it was the intention of any of our commanders to press men in our service for I know we had more men than we required. I suppose men would enlist while intoxicated and when sober would repent doing so and try to get off. I assure you letters of this kind operate greatly to our prejudice and make us pass for a set of ruffians, and I am only surprised that Mr. Mure, an old resident of New Orleans, should have written such a letter knowing the bad effect it would have against us. It was entirely uncalled for. He had already explained the whole matter to his Government in a previous letter. Can it be possible that he too is against us? I really hope not. It would be too bad.

The newspapers here are not much in our favor; still I find a few of them making a move in the right direction and I think in a short time they will come out more direct, not that they have any sympathy for us but that their interests require them to be on our side. Depend upon it we will be recognized before next December if even a European war with the North should be the result. Cotton and tobacco they will have coûte qu'il coûte. Cotton is very active in Liverpool on account of the war news from America. The lower qualities have not been much affected. Middling Orleans, $8\frac{1}{2}$ pence to $8\frac{1}{4}$ pence; upland, 8 pence, with a brisk demand both for manufacture and exportation, as well as speculation. You have seen I suppose that last week sales amounted to 144,000 bales, a quarter of which was taken on speculation; prices have also gone up in Havre 2 to 3 francs, so that my New Orleans friends will come out of the year's business right side up. I wish I had a million of bales in Liverpool now. Many here think cotton will go to 10 pence. I should not be surprised particularly if England don't force the blockade, and that very soon. I am told the North is buying in the Liverpool market, but I only give you this as an on dit, but should not be surprised if such was the case.

A few days ago I called on Mr. Spencer, American consul, to get him to visé my passport. He went back in his room and brought out the biggest Bible I ever saw and told me I would have to take the oath of allegiance to the United States. I refused to do it and he refused to visé my passport. The thing has been brought before M. Thouvenal who refused to take any action at the present time but said that no Americans would be troubled going or coming into France. So Mr. Consul may keep his visé and be d—d. I shall not trouble him again. We think of returning home some time in October and may put you to a little trouble for a short time till we get settled.*

Your friend,

B. RODRIGUEZ.

We have had two pamphlets lately. One "La Révolution en Amérique du Nord Dévoilée;" the other "La Question Américaine." Both will do us great good. If the gentleman that takes this letter will oblige me by taking charge of them I will send them to you. The last one is quite complimentary to our ladies. It says: "Les femmes du Sud sont des tendres mères de famille, des épouses dévouées; les Créoles le disputent à nos Françaises en grâce, exquise distinction, sensibilité, générosité, chaleur de cœur et d'idées, intelligence de tout ce qui est noble, beau et bien."†

It is quite a good brochure and I would like to send it to you and shall try to do so.

Yours,

BEN.

(Care Messrs. Ralli, Benachi & Co., New Orleans, La.)

MY DEAR FRIEND: I wrote you a long letter a few days ago, but as the bearer of this is acquainted with you I thought I would write you again to let you know that we have just received the glorious news of the defeat of the Federalists at Manassas Junction. I was not at all surprised at it as I offered some Yankees to bet them a suit of clothes that Beauregard would whip them if he accepted a fight. There are many, however, who did not expect such a result.

* Unimportant personal matter here omitted.

Although we only received the news yesterday, already there is quite a change in the public mind. The Patrie and Constitutionnel already begin to think it probable that the South may succeed. There is one exception, and that comes from one who has lived among us and made money out of us and now turns round and whenever he has a chance heaps lies and calumnies against us. I inclose you an article from his paper of to-day. You can judge of the wretch's antipathy to us. Mind what I tell you. Before three months we will be recognized both by England and France. "Ca ira, ca ira, Lincoln a la lanterne." Those that only a few days ago were trying to ridicule the Americans and particularly the Southerners begin to find out that when an occasion requires it we can fight as well as others. To-day we had at our place of meeting seventeen Southerners and true to the cause, and had you seen and heard them talk it would have done you good. I am only afraid this victory has been achieved at a great sacrifice of our brave men. I am very anxious to receive details but from what I see it must have been a terrible battle. Depend on it another such an one and the whole North will be so demoralized that they will be glad to give us what we have been asking for, "Let us alone." They expect to get money in this country. They will not get a cent and I really don't think they will raise the $500,000,000 at home. Parties here interested in cotton think the news will cause a slight decline. As yet nothing is known and can give you nothing of interest to you. My main object in writing you is to send you the inclosed* extract.

Yours, truly,

B. RODRIGUEZ.

LIVERPOOL, August 7, 1861.

J. B. PHELPS, Esq., Crescent, New Orleans, La.

MY DEAR SIR: The grand and glorious victory at Manassas Junction, Va., has totally destroyed the remotest chance of Lincoln, Seward, Chase & Co. obtaining a penny of the money they want to borrow in Great Britain. The account of the battle we have received so far is the most favorable tale in which the Yankees can tell of their own defeat, but there is enough to satisfy me that their loss in killed must have been 15,000 to 20,000, though they report only 500. The Great Thunderer† is down upon the Northerners with all its virulence. Even Doctor Russell, LL. D., "licensed to lie damnably," tells the truth about the stampede from Manassas. England don't intend to consider the blockade efficient, no matter how many ships Lincoln may have, even if they be as thick as blackberries. I have yours of 13th of July, 1861. Many thanks.

Yours, truly,

W. W. MERTENS.

"The dissensions which arose some months ago in the United States of North America have unfortunately assumed the character of open war." Such is the tranquil comment of the royal speech upon the events in the New World which have fallen so unexpectedly upon the ear of Europe. Our Queen has reflected with an excellent fidelity the feelings of her people. After the first surprise was over, and when the "God bless me! you don't say so?" had been said, we think we never heard of a battle in which 75,000 men seem to have been engaged on each side, and which fell so blank upon the public ear and engaged so little European interest. The fact is that we do not like to laugh and the sense of the ridiculous comes too strong over us when we would be serious. It is a great battle without the dignity of danger or the painful interest of great carnage. There are all the ridiculous incidents of stark fear and rabid terror without much real peril and with very little actual suffering. We begin to feel that we have been cheated out of our sympathies.

When this war broke out we English all pictured to ourselves two earnest sections of the same population interlaced in mortal combat, warring to the knife and to the death. We received by every mail little samples of an atmosphere of blood and thunder and war and wounds. All America appeared to us, poor dupes, like a fresh exploded mine—all smoke and fragments and torn limbs. We fancied our kinsmen reckless, furious, flying at each other's throats and careless of their own safety. At the same time that they were shaking their knives at each other they were shaking their fists at us. We trembled for what we were fated to see. We held our breath for the first shock of battle between these two young giants. We shut our eyes against the deadly struggle.

We are calmer now. We are all calmer. We are satisfied that these warlike athletes who were issuing such dire threats against any one who should dare to offer to separate them are not so very reckless. Since their dissensions have assumed "the character of open war" they have been carried on upon strictly humanitarian principles. If we are to believe the American press an American battle has never yet been so dangerous as an American passenger boat, and not much more so than an American railway. The hostile forces shell each other out of strong fortresses without losing a single life. They fight a battle in Western Virginia which determines the fate of a district at the expense of less than a score of casualties, and a great stand-up battle is fought between 150,000 men, ending in a panic and a twenty-mile run, and when the "Grand Army of the Potomac" reaches Alexandria the New York Herald reports that "the killed on our side will be between 300 and 500."

It is very difficult to gauge the solidity of anything American, even of a great battle. We know that there was a great rout in front of that gap which runs up into the hills, for we were represented in the ruck and may say that we saw it with our own eyes and heard the cannonade with our own ears. There is a probability also that the number of men present at the battle mounts to the high figure of 150,000, for both accounts seem to agree upon this. Beyond these facts, however, everything seems vague and uncertain. The advance of the "Grand Army of the Potomac" reads in the American papers like a burlesque of the progress of Xerxes to the Hellespont. The great Federal victory of Bull Run which was flashed over the Northern States and recorded in the Northern papers was a thing hovering for hours while yet in print upon the confines of fancy and possibility. The abject rout, the ultimate reality, was what we could have least believed. Perhaps we ought to have anticipated that the same ferocious men who had burned up the homesteads on their line of march would speed back over the embers with pale faces in their panic flight. But this never did occur to us. It requires the testimony of the Americans themselves and the witness of our own correspondent to suggest to us that 75,000 American patriots fled for twenty miles in an agony of fear although no one was pursuing them, and that 75,000 other American patriots abstained from pursuing these 75,000 enemies because they were not informed how stark frightened these were. Even the artillery were not captured but picked up. The guns were left behind because they impeded the flight of the artillerymen, and they might have been to a great extent carried off if the apprehensions of the gunners would have allowed them to take advantage of the leisure which the prudent conqueror was so ready to afford.

On the other hand our correspondent thinks that the panic had gone so right to the heart of the North that if General Beauregard had the enterprise to follow up his advantage he might have gone almost unresisted into Washington City itself. All that the Northern press says upon this subject is to congratulate themselves that the enemy did not know in what a fright they were.

This is not our account of this battle. It is the American account. It is the account of the New York papers, alternating as they do between shrieks of victory, of agony and of vindictive despair. If they have only lost between 300 and 500 men it seems to us to be a very cheap lesson. See what they have gained by it. They have found out now that the spirit of patriotism and even the instinct of combat does not prevent Northern volunteers from going off in a body under pretense of their time of enlistment being up although the morning of the combat may be come and the cannon may be sounding in their ears. They have found out also that even a Northern army can without much good military reason given lose its attraction of cohesion and dissolve into a mob. They have also found out that the Southerners are not to be walked over like a partridge manor, and that they have some military heads among them. Of course we must expect them to meet these hard facts by a certain quantity of bluster. They must call out a few more millions of volunteers, and they must make a confident demand upon an incredulous world for a few more hundred millions sterling.

But behind all this there must rise a gathering doubt that this Southern nut is too hard to crack and that the military line as a matter of business does not answer. The North has now made its experiment and not only has it not answered but the process has not been encouraging. As a matter of habit and to ease the American mind a certain quantity of threats and tall words may be necessary and they may pass. But they will be of small avail against the facts as they now stand. In the face of the picture of that screaming crowd—the “Grand Army of the Potomac,” &c.—these great words from the expectant gentlemen at Washington lose every charm. These people do all in their power to alienate our sympathy, for they are amenable neither to courtesy nor to misfortune. Nothing civilizes them. They seem to think that at all seasons and upon all occasions England is a safe target for their insults and their threats. They either feign very well or else they positively think they can influence our policy by their bluster. There was a moment on the 21st of July when victory was supposed to be with the “Grand Army of the Potomac,” and the most popular newspaper in New York seized the opportunity to show what use our excellent friends proposed to make of their victory. The first thought was revenge upon England. After some taunts at what are supposed to be our recent recantations the organ of New York moderation continues:

And now, forsooth, because the Queen's Government sees fit to stultify itself, not daring to carry into execution its implied threats, and prohibits the entry of Southern privateers into British ports, we are required to let bygones be bygones and even to ignore that any cause of displeasure has existed. The absurdity and inconsistency of acknowledging the "equal belligerent rights" of the rebel States and then cumbering them from sheer cowardice and fear of the consequences bestows no title to consideration, nor will leisurely repentance for hastily offered indignities be considered the slightest atonement when the time shall have come to resent them. Both England and Spain may rest assured that just retribution will be visited upon them for taking advantage of our domestic disturbances to further their own selfish schemes of aggrandizement. For the outrage offered in the Queen's proclamation the United States will possess itself of Canada, and for the invasion of Santo Domingo Her Catholic Majesty will certainly have to pay with the sacrifice of Cuba. We have first to put down rebellion at home, but every hour proves that the war that has begun will be a short one and that ere the lapse of another half year armies will exist on the American continent of over half a million of men, thirsting for a foreign foe upon whom to expend their strength. When the Union element at the South shall have been fairly emancipated and the forces of the Republic shall have been united, let Great Britain and Spain beware. Our armies never will consent to lay down their arms while a vestige of European domination remains in the Western Hemisphere. Causes of war we have enough and they will not cool for keeping.

If this is what we are to receive from the supremacy of the North the North can scarcely expect that we should put up very ardent vows for their conquest of the South. If the conquest of the Southern States means also the conquest of Canada and Cuba and the establishment of a great military aggressive power in North America we may learn to bear more patiently the scene that occurred at Bull Run. We are not, however, fearful enough to be ferocious. On the contrary we cordially and even sincerely congratulate our would-be enemies that they have escaped with such small loss from the sword of General Beauregard, and much as they tell us it would be against our interests we sincerely advise them to make up their quarrel and avoid all serious effusion of blood. When they have returned to the habits of peace they will not be nearly so bloodthirsty as they think they will be, or if they should be they will not be so mischievous as they say they will be. Spain will know how to keep in check a navy which is now terribly embarrassed by two small privateers and the Canadas have in other days given a very good account of invaders from the other side of the river. The United States are a very great nation and we wish them all lawful prosperity, but they are not half so capable of mischief as their newspapers think they are.

Case of Mayor Berret, of Washington.

This person [James G. Berret] was mayor of the city of Washington, and as appears from a list of prisoners at Fort Lafayette was received at that fort August 25, 1861. There is no evidence on file in the Department of State showing the precise cause of his arrest or what were the charges against him. Application having been made for his release and it having been stated that he was willing to take the oath of allegiance to the United States Government an order was issued September 12, 1861, by the Secretary of State directing Lieut. Col. Martin Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to discharge Mayor Berret on his taking the oath of allegiance to the United States prescribed by a recent act of Congress and resigning the office of mayor of the city of Washington. He was accordingly released September 14, 1861.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: As the question of the mayoralty of this city will come before our common council to-night and as it is important that we should have all important facts before us which bear upon the official rights and authority of ex-Mayor Berret and of Acting Mayor Wallach, I desire answers to the following questions if it will comport with the regulations of your office to give them:

1. Did Mr. Berret voluntarily resign his office as mayor?
2. When did he resign his office and when did said resignation reach the State Department so as to be communicated to the city authorities?
3. When was Mr. Berret released from arrest?

As information on these points will help us to come to a correct conclusion in the board of common council to-night I most respectfully inquire if you can deem it proper to give it?

I send this communication because I have failed to obtain a personal interview.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 14, 1861.

Z. RICHARDS, Esq.,

President of the Board of Common Council of the City of Washington.

SIR: In answer to the inquiries contained in your letter of this date I have to represent that, first, Mr. Berret resigned the office of mayor of this city voluntarily as I understand from him, though it is true his resignation was required as a condition of his discharge from Fort Lafayette; second, it is presumed that he resigned on the 14th day of last month, the date of his oath of allegiance, which with the letter of resignation was transmitted to this Department in a letter of that date from Colonel Burke at Fort Hamilton, N. Y., and received here on the 17th of September; third, Mr. Berret was also it is presumed released from arrest on the 14th of September.

Mr. Berret subsequently came to this city and called upon me at which time he confirmed the fact that his resignation and oath had been cheerfully made as an act of loyalty to the Government.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Case of Robert Tansill, Captain of Marines.

The Department learned of this person's arrest and detention from himself. His statement shows that he was a captain of marines and arrived at Boston from a foreign cruise in the U. S. frigate Congress on the 23d day of August, 1861, and forthwith forwarded his resignation to the Navy Department rather than join in an unnatural war against his blood relations, kindred and friends. His name was stricken from the rolls, and on the 27th of August he was arrested by the order of the Secretary of the Navy and confined in Fort Lafayette. The Secretary of the Navy under date of October 10, 1861, says:*

On the 26th of November, 1861, Tansill addressed a communication to the Department of State in which he says: "I am unalterably opposed to your political principles and war policy and I would prefer to suffer a thousand deaths rather than raise my hand against the sovereignty or independence of any State of our once happy country." And also, "I can never consent to receive my liberty upon terms or conditions inconsistent with what I believe to be my obligations and duties as a citizen of my native State, Virginia." Robert Tansill is as appears by his own voluntary and ostentatious avowals a disloyal man. The said Tansill having been transferred to Fort Warren remained in custody there February 15, 1862, when in conformity with the order of the War Department of the preceding day he was transferred to the charge of that Department.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 7, 1861.

Hon. GIDEON WELLES, Secretary of the Navy.

SIR: I have the honor to send you herewith the inclosed communication from Robert Tansill, a prisoner in the custody of Colonel Burke, at Fort Lafayette, addressed to the President, and submitted to you to decide whether it is proper to be transmitted to His Excellency.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

FORT LAFAYETTE, N. Y., *October 3, 1861.*His Excellency ABRAHAM LINCOLN,
President of the United States.

SIR: I deem it a duty to myself to bring to the notice of the President the circumstances of my confinement and treatment here. I arrived at Boston in the U. S. frigate Congress on August 23 after an absence from the United States of two years, and resigned my commission as a captain in the U. S. Marine Corps (my only support) rather than join in an unnatural war against my blood relations, kindred and friends. My conscience, the dictates of which I cannot safely disregard, compelled me to this course. On the 27th of August I received a communication from the honorable Secretary of the Navy informing me that my resignation had been received and my name stricken from the rolls of the Marine Corps. Of this I complain not. I was then by an order of the Secretary of the Navy arrested and brought under a guard like a common felon to this fort where I am now incarcerated without even being informed of the charges against me. I have written to the Navy Department* in regard to this unjust and unlawful treatment, to which I have received no answer. As to the particulars and details of my treatment here in prison I deem it unnecessary to trouble Your Excellency. Complaints of this nature have been made by others and forwarded to the Department without having elicited the slightest consideration; besides there are circumstances which decency forbids mentioning to the head of a civilized people. Letters to and from my wife are subjected to the inspection of the commanding officer of this fort, and my dearest friends are denied permission to visit me on the most important business.

Under such extraordinary circumstances I feel justified in appealing and indeed I have no other resource but to appeal directly to the President which I now do, and respectfully ask that I may be brought to trial as soon as possible on the charges against me whatever they may be, or released from this imprisonment which can find no sanction in the laws of war nor in the Constitution or laws of the country which the President has solemnly sworn to support. Should, however, this just request be disregarded I then ask that I may be sent to Washington, D. C., where my wife and children reside that I may be permitted to see them from whom I have been absent in the service of the United States more than two years.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
ROBERT TANSILL.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, [Washington,] *October 10, 1861.*Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I received yours of the 7th instant, with a communication of Robert Tansill addressed to the President in which you do me the honor to ask me "to decide whether it is proper to be transmitted to His Excellency." I have respectfully to state that I am aware of no impropriety in the transmission. Robert Tansill was a captain of marines and has passed most of his life in the service and pay of the Government. When the present difficulties commenced he was with Flag Officer Sands on the Brazilian Station. As soon as he heard of the conspiracy against the Government he addressed the Department in a long communication expressing sympathy with the conspirators and indicating a higher allegiance to local authority than to that of the Government whose uniform he wore and whose pay and honor he had through his life received. On reaching the United States he forwarded this communication to the Department, and at the same time his commander notified me that he refused to take and subscribe to the oath. It was under these circumstances that he was sent to Fort Lafayette.

In a conversation with yourself in regard to this man I expressed my sympathy for his family and relatives and a desire that his wife and children might be permitted to see him. You concurred in these views, and further stated that he ought not to be permitted to go at large without taking the oath prescribed. The communication of Robert Tansill is herewith returned.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GIDEON WELLES.

FORT WARREN, Boston, Mass., November 26, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Since my arrest and confinement I have written to the President and Secretary of the Navy asking to be released or brought to a trial on the charges (if any) that may have been preferred against me. Not having received an answer from these gentlemen I have thought that I might accomplish my release by addressing the Secretary of State on the subject.

I presume you are aware that I was arrested and confined on resigning my commission as a captain in the U. S. Marine Corps. It is but fair that I should frankly admit that I am unalterably opposed to your political principles and war policy, and that I would prefer to suffer a thousand deaths rather than raise my hand against the sovereignty or independence of any State of our once happy country. With due deference to your opinion I cannot but believe that the practice of incarcerating those who differ with you in opinion as to the necessity or policy of the present unfortunate war is really calculated to and will do you and the cause you desire to advance more harm than good. By this policy you not only make political enemies but personal ones also. You are aware, sir, that injuries produce ill will and justice friendship. Why then pursue a course which makes you foes instead of friends? If you had sent all the gentlemen to the South whom you have caused to be imprisoned they would not I am sure have the slightest influence in the final determination of the unhappy contest now raging between the two sections of the country. But be that as it may no good can come from wrong, and it is a mistaken policy for those who are at the head of public affairs to act so as to forfeit the respect and incur the resentment of those under them, however humble they may be. I repeat, sir, that those things that are wrong are unsafe and no plea of necessity can justify them. The constant practice of justice is not only the best policy, but our surest shield, most lasting and firmest support. By disregarding these sacred principles the rulers of to-day are often the victims of to-morrow, more especially in revolutions where majorities often suddenly become minorities.

The very great desire I have to see my wife and children who will soon be in a destitute and suffering condition and from whom I have been absent in the public service for over twenty-eight months has induced me to address you this note and ask an unconditional release, as I can never consent to receive my liberty upon terms or conditions inconsistent with what I deem to be my obligations and duties as a citizen of my native State, Virginia. I hope, sir, that you will reflect upon this application, and I beg you will exercise in its consideration a spirit of justice and humanity, which are the brightest ornaments of a great statesman.

ROBERT TANSILL.

Case of Samuel J. Anderson.

[Samuel J. Anderson is] a native of Georgia for several years past sojourning in New York; went to Georgia in the spring of 1861 and returned early in the summer. He was known to sympathize with the rebellion and manifested his sympathy by instituting proceedings to endeavor to procure the release of persons held in confinement by the Government for precautionary reasons. Having been informed that he was about to return to Georgia the Secretary of State caused him to be arrested on the 27th day of August, 1861, and confined in Fort Lafayette. Letters were found in Anderson's possession showing that he maintained a treasonable correspondence with parties in the rebel States. One from W. M. Manning dated Charleston, S. C., February 19, 1861, has this passage: "I am unable to say whether there is any one in your city employed to give important information in regard to our affairs. I would be glad to hear from you often." A. W. Redding writes from Jamestown, Ga., March 15, 1861, as follows: "You are in the midst of the enemy's country. You are at headquarters. Just give us the dots." A letter signed J. V. Hitchcock dated Washington, August 23, 1861, says: "On inquiry I find that passports of which you speak are not issued by the Government. The only way to get through is to go by way of Kentucky." On the 11th day of October, 1861, the said Samuel J. Anderson was released from confinement on taking the oath of allegiance with stipulations against future misconduct.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

CENTRAL DEPARTMENT OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE,

New York, July 31, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD.

SIR: There is a soldier, I know not of what rank but probably a private or non-commissioned officer, named John [T.] Neil [Neale], stationed at Fort or Camp Runyon, who had been here for some days lodging in the same room with a noted secessionist who has twice been arrested by the police on suspicion of treason and who for the same reason will again be arrested to-day. Neale left yesterday to return to his post which it is said is in the neighborhood of Washington. It is supposed that Neale has communicated to Anderson, the secessionist, such information as he could obtain respecting our army. Anderson is the personal friend of Alex. H. Stephens. He proposes to leave for the South this afternoon, but he will be arrested at the time of his departure.

Very respectfully,

JAMES BOWEN.

OFFICE SUPERINTENDENT METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, August 26, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD:

A man named Samuel J. Anderson, of Georgia, who has been holding place in the custom-house and sheriff's office in this city for several years, and who acknowledges himself to me as devoted to the fortunes of Mr. Stephens, of Georgia, has during the summer made one visit to the South, and on his return was the person who brought the proceedings before Judge Garrison to release the Baltimore [police] commissioners.* He is about to leave again for the South. Had he not better be detained?

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
*Superintendent.*DEPARTMENT OF STATE, *Washington, August 26, 1861.*Lieut. Gen. WINFIELD SCOTT, Washington.

GENERAL: I will thank you to direct Col. Martin Burke to receive Samuel J. Anderson, of Georgia, whose arrest at New York has been directed.

I have the honor to be, general, your obedient servant,
WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

OFFICE OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF POLICE,
New York, August 27, 1861.

Lieut. Col. M. BURKE.

SIR: By direction from the Secretary of State I send to you for safe custody Mr. Samuel J. Anderson, formerly of Georgia. Mr. Inspector Leonard who accompanies him will deliver him to you.

Very respectfully,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
*Superintendent.*FORT LAFAYETTE, *August 31, 1861.*Col. MARTIN BURKE, Present.

SIR: I have taken the liberty of writing to the President—being personally known to him—and have taken the further liberty of sealing the letter, being under the impression that such was the proper course, &c. If, however, I am mistaken may I request you, sir, to read the letter and forward it, &c.

Very respectfully, &c.,

S. J. ANDERSON.

FORT HAMILTON, *New York Harbor, August 31, 1861.*Col. E. D. TOWNSEND, Assistant Adjutant-General, &c.

SIR: As Mr. Anderson requests me to send a sealed letter to His Excellency the President of the United States contrary to our regulations I have opened the letter, and seeing nothing wrong in it I respectfully forward it to you.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

MARTIN BURKE,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.

* See Volume I, this series, p. 619 et seq., for case of the Baltimore police commissioners. No record of the proceedings before Judge Garrison can be found.

[Inclosure.]

FORT LAFAYETTE, August 31, 1861.

SIR: As you are doubtless aware I was arrested and lodged in this fortress on Tuesday last by order of General Scott. This is all I know in regard to the cause of my arrest, being unconscious of having violated any law of the United States. My private correspondence was all seized* and taken from me, including many letters from my friend Mr. Stephens running back through a period of several years. I have never destroyed any of his letters nor have I received any from him since he occupied his present position although I have written to him as usual until since mail facilities with the South have been obstructed. However, never having had any information to convey to him other than that which was conveyed through the newspapers my communicating with my friend needs no explanation.

I have never combined with any man or set of men to overthrow or embarrass the Government, nor am I aware of any such combinations in New York or elsewhere in the Northern States. In my right as an American citizen I have discussed the merits of public men and measures according to my judgment and abilities. As a political exponent of the State rights creed I could not approve some of the acts of your Administration. I have therefore commented upon them in various ways but in doing this I do not think I have exceeded the legitimate limits of fair and free discussion. However, even of this I had grown weary and had determined on the day of my arrest to return to Erie County, near Springville, to my family on the farm of Major Blasdell and there rest in quiet. My son, born in Georgia, is there at school. I had no intention at the time referred to of even going South myself. I have been a resident of New York more than twelve years and all my personal interests and affections are here. My political sympathies are with my native State and section. In my breast, therefore, the conflict must continue during the present civil war, the end of which alone can relieve my embarrassment.

I could not take any employment against the South; it is not proper or practicable for me to take an active part against the North. I would therefore wish to retire to my family, and from that sequestered spot observe the desolating conflict. The state of my health, in addition to all other considerations, constrains me to request that I be permitted to do so. I am afflicted with rheumatism and the dampness and confinement here have greatly aggravated it. With reluctance I utter the complaint. I only would wish to carry out my intention of retirement from all political excitements and discussions in the way and at the place indicated. If allowed I promise in good faith so to do. Whether I can keep my word or not I am willing to leave even my enemies to judge.

Very respectfully,

S. J. ANDERSON.

CRAWFORDVILLE, GA., January 26, 1860.

S. J. ANDERSON, New York.

DEAR ANDERSON: Your letter in which you indulge in a certain speculation or rather speculative conjecture as to the probable turn events may take at the Charleston convention came to the office here while I was at Savannah attending the supreme court. Since my return I have been quite busy at my little farm or plantation below this place getting ready for planting a crop or I should have replied to it sooner.

In this matter I shall deal very frankly with you as I always do even though the subject relates to myself. I therefore say in the first place that I think you are entirely mistaken as to the probability on which your conjecture is founded. There are too many men aspiring for office in this country for a draft ever having to be resorted to, and indeed I do not think any such general sentiment would ever converge toward me, as you seem to suppose. In this I do not think I am mistaken. I understand the world and mankind very well; at least I think I know enough of the public men of this country to satisfy me that your notions are not well founded. But in the second place and mainly I do not desire any such result. I have no wish for it. On the contrary I do not intend to allow my name to go before that body. I have so written to a great number of people all over the country, at least to men in several States North and South. It is true some have said that my name would be used without my consent. To this I can only say that I do not want it so used.

It is to tell the plain truth a disagreeable matter to me to see my name even thus associated. If there is anything particularly disgusting to me it is a scramble among Presidential aspirants. There are honorable men who look with ambitious longings to this high office—some of them well qualified to fill it. I do hope some of them may be gratified, but as for myself I can most truthfully and sincerely say that I would not exchange my present place and surroundings for any office in this world. My nature looks not that way for objects to gratify my outgoings of spirit. This is all I can say to you. I feel assured that you who have known me so long and intimately will feel satisfied that it is true.

With best wishes, I remain, yours, &c.,

ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

CRAWFORDVILLE, GA., June 29, 1860.

[S. J. ANDERSON, New York.]

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 24th instant was received last night. I do not know that I fully understand its import or object. It seems to have been written with a view to explain something that I know nothing about. You say for instance, "This is the history of the matter so far as I am concerned." To what matter do you allude? It would seem that something had resulted from the facts detailed by you of which I am entirely unapprised.

A part of what you refer to I fully understand. I gave Doctor Hambleton my views of the position in which the seceders from Charleston stood toward the Baltimore adjourned convention. It was done at his instance freely and cheerfully, but certainly without any idea of what I said being used publicly or having any other influence than the bare statement of the points carried intrinsically in itself, not that I had any secrets on this subject, but I never could have given my consent for my name to have been invoked or used to give force to these points. If they did not have sufficient power to carry conviction of themselves I should have considered all extraneous aids as not only useless but decidedly injurious, and from what you state I am inclined to think probably this was the result by the course adopted; but as your letter found me all in the dark upon the matter you seem to be explaining I should like to hear more fully from you on the subject.

As to the final result at Baltimore I can only add a few words. I feel exceedingly pained and grieved at it. The consequences or effects cannot now be judged of or even conjectured. Madness and folly seemed to have ruled the hour. Why Judge Douglas' friends should have persisted in nominating him after the secession of Tennessee, Kentucky and Virginia, to say nothing of the other Southern States, I cannot imagine. I have heard no explanation and know nothing of what their calculations or expectations are. They must have known what the seceders intended to do; they must have known that the movement at Charleston, so far from having been checked by the popular feeling at the South, had been strengthened and augmented. This they must have known by consultation with the delegations from Tennessee, Kentucky and Virginia. If they did not they were very unfit representatives of their people on such an occasion. And taking it for granted that they did know it, I cannot imagine what object they had in view by the course they took except to put up their man to be beaten to say nothing of breaking up the party at the same time.

As I view the prospect from this point I see no chance for Douglas' election. All he can possibly do will be to carry enough Northern votes to enable Mr. Breckinridge to be borne over him into the House where he may possibly be chosen; I mean Mr. Breckinridge. If Mr. Douglas' friends are satisfied—and with their honor for him they have infinitely less regard for the noble spirit of the man and that favor and distinction which his great merits and talents deserve than I have—his position may be a very useful one to the country. We cannot see results but it can hardly be looked upon as adding to his reputation. Individually he will be but subservient—the stepping-stone of his party rival to elevation and power. By the aid of his back and shoulders Mr. Breckinridge may attain the object of his ambition and the defeat of the Republicans may be achieved.

His I say may be a useful service to the country, but if such service were necessary under existing circumstances I should greatly have preferred to see the duty assigned to some other one—some one who would not have lost reputation by it; some one who would have even gained personal distinction as well as rendered beneficial service to his country. But I can say no more. We have fallen upon evil times. There are I fear but few of our public men nowadays who look to the country through any other medium except themselves and their own ambitious desires.

Yours, respectfully,

ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

JAMESTOWN, GA., July 5, 1860.

MY DEAR SAM: * * * You say you have just returned from Baltimore, whither you had gone and had advocated the claims of Douglas because in your judgment he was the only man who can break the tide of Republicanism, &c.

One thing is certain, the Democratic party have told the country time and again that conservatism was only in them; that the dissolution of the party was but another name for dissolution of the Union and that if the opposition would but support them to elect Buchanan the country would be safe and the Union preserved inviolate, &c. These delusive and unredeemed pledges and promises made fools of many a Southerner and committed them to the support of the party. I did believe for 1850-'51 that there was some hope for the country in Northern Democracy, yet I was suspicious all the time, but when the thin film was cast from my eyes (the first vote that was given in the House of Representatives when the question was direct) I have never had any difficulty in determining Northern policy and national Democracy from that day to this.

So far as my judgment is concerned—it may be bad and misguided, I only know it is honestly entertained—it is this (summing up the whole matter): The Union is inevitably dissolved unless the pocket nerve of the Northern manufacturer and merchant is sufficiently powerful to prevent it. Democracy has no more power over it now than my dog Joler, and in my judgment as a party never cared whether it was dissolved or not so that they held the loaves and fishes in their hands. As to Northern Democratic patriotism—excuse me. I know that crinations will do no good. I am sorry for it but I have no confidence in Douglas or Northern Democracy however much I do have in individuals.

I cannot think of any condition of things that would compel me to make a choice between Douglas and Lincoln. Nothing would induce me to vote for either of them. With regard to our lands. * * *

Very truly, yours,

A. W. REDDING.

DEAR ANDERSON: I have just got home after a two weeks' absence. Both your letters are before me. I am obliged to you for them. I shall accept the position of elector in this State and make the best fight that can be made. Our cause is hopeless in Georgia, but the path of duty is the path of safety. I don't know that my health will permit me to take a very active part in the canvass. I do hope that New York will prevent the election of Lincoln; that will be a great achievement. If Maine should go for Douglas in September it will give him thousands of votes at the South that he would not otherwise get. I have no time to say more. The hour is at hand for closing the mail. I am still feeble, very feeble, but better than when I wrote to you last.

Yours, truly,

ALEX. H. STEPHENS.

S. J. ANDERSON, Esq.

MY DEAR SIR: * * * I should be glad to hear * * * whether you consider the vote in Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana as conclusive of the triumph of Lincoln in those States next month. Your opinion on these points has weight here, and our friends would be much gratified to hear the results of your calm judgment. People here are startled, perplexed and anxious at the prospect now staring them in the face of Lincoln's election. There is a deep-seated determination with many, and influential people too, to bring about a disruption in that event and they will be certain at least to do enough to create a great deal of commotion. This election will immensely increase the disunion sentiment of this section.

Yours,

JAMES GARDNER.

[No. 6.]

JAMESTOWN, GA., December 1, 1860.

S. J. ANDERSON, Esq.

DEAR SAM: * * * You say when you wrote your last letter you was somewhat waspish and that my reply looked that way too. This I think is true of us both and all I will say in justification of myself is that whenever I am told that the conservatism of Northern Democracy is all the South has to look to for her protection I simply know that it is not so, never was and never will be. But I am like Governor [Herschell V.] Johnson, I am willing to let the dead bury their dead and let bygones be bygones. I am willing to let the old party names and lines be obliterated forever with the hope of drawing together the honest of all old parties North and South in one common cause to the rescue of the whole country. On this point I will not enlarge.

You say that you and Stephens were antagonistic on the subject of separate secession. I never differed with him. If he was all the time in favor of making resistance in the Union step by step as proposed by the Georgia platform of 1850 I was never otherwise but with him. I am for co-operation of the Southern States, and when the first Northern State (Massachusetts) passed her law repudiating the fugitive slave law I held then as I do now that Governor Brown, of Georgia, in obedience to authority given him by the Georgia legislature (which I thought to be in exact conformity with the Georgia platform) should then and there have called the legislature together to take measures of redress and pass laws of retaliation after proper negotiations had failed and been refused and unheeded, but he did not do it. He refused to do it and I placed him and his immediate counselors then where I think they will be found now—make a big smoke when there is some one who can't help seeing it but when it is sifted there will be but little fire of the right kind found in it.

Now for Stephens' speech at Milledgeville. I approve every word of it touching our Federal relations; believe that every measure and mode of redress suggested the very best that can be done. It is what ought to be done, and I will sustain so far as I can Stephens or any other leader in this case irrespective of party names. And like you I think it is the highest evidence of a great mind and a thoroughly qualified politician for the occasion. I am with him and always have been before the doctrine of non-intervention by Congress on slavery in the Territories. I want no slave code nor do I think Congress ought to pass any or that our interest requires any. I am much pleased to hear you express the hope that the offending States may repeal those laws on fugitives so justly obnoxious to the South and her interest, and I am sure I have pleasure in knowing that "Little Aleck" shall be the medium through which it may be done, alike honorable to the North and the South. As he has said truly time has laid Massachusetts and South Carolina side by side in their vote upon the tariff. That in 1832 placed these two States so antagonistic; now they meet upon common ground and vote alike for a tariff. May we not hope that the present difficulty may be averted and that soon we of the South and the North may see alike upon this negro question? I verily believe it may be—nay will be so if we can keep such men as Yancey and other unconditional seceders from running away with the people. If the South secede unconditionally or make resistance in or out of the Union I am with her. Her destiny is my destiny, and in her bosom will I live and die and among her hills and valleys shall my bones rest, whether she act wisely or unwisely.

I have always understood that Aleck governed Toombs much more than Toombs did Stephens. This too I suppose should be so, as I never had any difficulty in awarding very superior ability in Stephens over Toombs, yet I am glad that Aleck is separated from Toombs. I have more confidence in his ability and his intentions to do right when I know he is freed from the influence (if any) of Robert Toombs. I cannot but think that we as a nation have not yet fulfilled our destiny, and that somehow or someway else by the blessings of the God of nations and the keeping our powder dry we should weather the storm, yet I confess it looks most dark and forbidding just now. Whenever an opportunity presents itself of disposing of our Worth lands I shall not be slow to let you know it. They are somewhat inquired for by speculators since they were advertised last year, but I have had no offer for them. I have been asked my price, and have said $2 per acre cash would buy them.

I am, truly, yours,

A. W. REDDING.

S. J. ANDERSON, New York.

DEAR ANDERSON: Your letter of the 2d instant was received last night. I also got one from you in November last, which I have not as yet or before this acknowledged. I was truly obliged to you for it, as I am for the one now before me, but was really too much occupied at the time to send an acknowledgment, especially as there was nothing in it that required special reply. I am now more at leisure, though still under pressure. In a few days I am to leave home for our convention to be absent no one knows how long. What our State will do I cannot tell. From reports it appears that the extreme men will be in a large majority in the convention. I shall, however, still hope for the best while I hold myself prepared for the worst. There would be no difficulty in this matter if our people really wanted a settlement of the question—I mean our ultra leading men—but I fear they do not.

What is to become of the country I do not know. My health is very feeble. What I can do to save our institutions shall be done. Let me hear from you often.

Yours, truly,

ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

[No. 9.]

CHARLESTON, February 7, 1861.

DEAR ANDERSON: * * * I must frankly say to you, however, the Democracy of the North must not rely too much upon the hope of a reconstruction of the old Union. It cannot be done. This I am satisfied is a fixed fact. An attempt at such a thing would plunge the South into a bloody conflict at home and for that reason it will be resisted at the threshold. As you say if there ever should be a reconstruction of some sort of union or confederation between the North and the South that it will take place under treaty and compact and not by compromise or amendments to the present or late Constitution. There are other questions in my opinion more vital to the cotton States than slavery that should constitute an impassable barrier to her ever entering into another union with the North.

I will explain. As long as cotton is king and the millions in Europe and Great Britain are dependent on it for employment and the civilized and uncivilized world for raiment so long will the institution of slavery exist and flourish in spite of the howlings and demented cries of the entire crew of abolitionists. For this I have no fears in or out of the Union. But as long as the Constitution contains a clause by which the South can be subject to unlimited taxation by an irresponsible majority in Congress through a tariff professedly for revenue but really to protect and build up the moneyed interest of one section at the expense of the other the cotton States will never consent to go back into the Union. I consider this question of equal if not greater importance than that of slavery. In all the compromises proposed not one word has been said to the South holding out the slightest hope of security on this point in future. But what is the fact in relation to this matter?

While the country is torn to atoms, the Union in fragments and the seat of government absolutely under the control of a military dictator, and the streets bristling with Federal bayonets, another bill of abominations is being urged through Congress. Is it strange then that we should shrink from the reconstruction of a union that will fasten its coils around us as the loathsome reptile would around its doomed victim? Oh, no, the Union cannot be reconstructed—no, never. It then being a fixed fact that the Union cannot be reconstructed, and that henceforth the two sections must work out their own respective forms of civilization under separate governments, what should the North do? Can coercion reconstruct a Union which was a compact founded upon mutual sympathy and good will between independent confederate States? I am sure every thinking man at the North will answer no; a forced union would be a curse to both sections.

Can anything be gained by civil war? The Democracy and conservative men at the North must answer this question. The issues of such a war would be fearful indeed. It would inevitably bring the North in conflict with England and France. We have little or no shipping to care for. England and France would carry our cotton under their flags and bring us wares and merchandise in return, and while the North was waging a bootless war on land letters of marque and reprisal would be sweeping her commerce from the ocean. But let it be the privilege of the Democracy and conservative men of the North and Northwest to roll back this tide of threatened civil war. They can do it, and under a Northern confederacy strangle the Black Republican monster that has robbed them of the rich inheritance of their fathers. Let the South alone and suffer her to form her government in peace. Then such a commercial treaty and compact can be entered into by both nations as will secure the uninterrupted march of each in its onward progress. These are my views plainly and frankly expressed, and I feel satisfied that your judgment will assent to their correctness.

A word now about Fort Sumter and I will not inflict you further. We are all ready for the attack of that fortification. No movement will be made, however, until the action of the Southern Congress is known. If when it is demanded with other Southern forts by the commission from the Southern Confederacy it is not given up it will then be attacked and I can assure you it will be no child's play. The men who had the nerve to fire into the Star of the West with an armed force on board of her with the guns of Fort Sumter frowning upon them with threatening destruction can be trusted in times of danger. Our people are quiet, cool and determined. We can bombard it simultaneously from seven different points. It cannot be re-enforced.

I trust, however, it will not come to this. When it is evident that a Southern confederacy will be formed and recognized by foreign powers I hope there will be good sense enough at least among the leaders of the Republican party if not in the rank and file to see the wisdom of withdrawing the troops and arranging the terms of separation in an amicable manner and on the principles of justice and equality. * * *

I remain, as ever, yours, sincerely,

F. M. ROBERTSON.

S. J. ANDERSON, Esq., New York.

DEAR ANDERSON: Yours with the inclosed slip was received this morning. I am inclined to think that there is not another man in the city of New York who has the moral courage to do what you did on the reception of the news of the organization of the Confederate States of America. I gave the slip to the Mercury and it will appear in the issue to-morrow morning. Would that we had thousands of such firm and clear-headed men at the North. My letter to you was written in a plain, free and frank manner, carefully avoiding anything calculated to hide the truth or mislead any one. I feel flattered that you should have thought it worthy of publication though I am glad you have suppressed my name. I made an effort to get the paper it was published in but could not find it at either of our printing offices. If you can get a paper cut it out and send it to me. I kept no copy of my letter.

I received a letter from Toombs this morning. To my question as to a feeling toward a reconstruction of the old Union he states that there is not the slightest idea of such a thing. To use his own language, "There is no difference of opinion here, and we are working day and night to put into operation as speedily as possible a permanent government forever." If Lincoln does not open his eyes to the true condition of things when he arrives in Washington we shall certainly have war. We shall be ready for him, and I trust the Southern Congress will give the word before he can get warm in his seat. If we are to have war Fort Sumter must be ours before he can possibly re-enforce it. Keep this to yourself. Should anything of interest turn up I will write you again.

Yours, truly,

F. M. ROBERTSON.

CHARLESTON, February 19, 1861.

S. J. ANDERSON, Esq., New York.

DEAR SIR: This morning I received yours of 15th instant. I am unable to say whether any one is in your city employed to give important information in relation to our affairs, but under the system of vigilance and signals that characterize the doings in and about our harbor I greatly doubt the ability of any one much less a body of men to enter it but at great risk. The defenses are almost perfect in every respect with abundant force to work them, and although the Daniel Webster cleared for a port in Texas she may try to enter here. I would rather not be aboard if she does. In five-eighths of a mile of Fort Sumter there is an impregnable mortar and columbiad battery that will tell a tale when necessary. It is externally secured with heavy railroad iron and port holes protected by huge iron doors of great weight. A water battery filled with cotton and palmetto logs to carry four long 42-pounders will be launched to-morrow and will be ready in a few days. It will be anchored in the daytime near Fort Sumter. It is to be hoped that the fort will be surrendered when a demand from the Confederacy is made, for if it is not it will be taken at any cost. Long before you get this you will have read President Davis' inaugural. To my notion it is an excellent production and he means what he says. We can raise right here 5,000 men in a few hours, all well drilled, equipped and officered. I would like to hear from you often. I have two sons in service. One left home 26th of December and was only relieved yesterday.

Very respectfully,

W. M. MARTIN.

[No. 12.]

JAMESTOWN, GA., March 15, 1861.

DEAR SAM: * * * Every man of the South so far as I know or have heard I believe will maintain the present position of the South.

ern Confederacy to annihilation. It is true that the course I thought it best to pursue was not acquiesced in by the majority and I yield to the will of a majority. I still think with the incredulity of the North that had all the Southern States co-operated and made a common demand for redress and grievances I dare say such demand had been insultingly refused, which would have committed the whole South and consequently all would have gone in a body out of the Union or about the same time. It may not be so great a calamity as I once thought it might be for the border States to remain outside the Confederacy as they will make so many outside rows in the political field upon which the enemies of the South may feed upon the shaded and stunted maize of our Southern farm and until we can get more cleared lands in Mexico to extend our cotton and negro influence.

The question of peace or war has been exceedingly complicated when judged of by old Abe's foolish sayings by the wayside, or even by his inaugural or any of his subsequent acts, so far as I can see and judge. The latest accounts we have, however, indicate a disposition to yield to the South the forts now held by the old Government. There are such a multiplicity of sensational items published as emanating from Lincoln and others in authority that I cannot tell when I have seen or heard the truth. I have to wait in painful suspense for many days for its confirmation or denial. I am pretty sure of one thing, that the possession of these forts is nothing more than a question of time; each party I think is studiously avoiding the first overt act. To re-enforce these forts is equivalent to a declaration of war. That Fort Sumter will be compelled to surrender or be re-enforced soon is a military necessity that even such men as I am can foresee. I trust that the sacrifice of human life will be averted which will be required to storm it or to re-enforce it, but if the necessity is forced upon us we will take it.

Our independence we will have acknowledged and maintained. I think the idea of a reconstruction of the Federal Union is lost sight of in Georgia. There are many of us that still love the Union and would be rejoiced to see it reconstructed upon proper and equal terms, yet we are compelled to confess we are in woeful minority now. It is too true that the South has been precipitated into a dissolution of the Union for the sake of disunion and that its leaders have no idea now of ever making any overtures or receiving any. The Government is dissolved and it is forever dissolved. Not a shadow of hope for its reconstruction remains so far as I can see.

I confess to you that while I feel it to be my duty as well as my interest to yield my assent to the powers that be in this new Confederacy and to afford all my influence in its favor, yet I am very jealous of its leaders. The cabinet of President Davis I have but little confidence in—as to Bobnel Toombs I have none. If Aleck was in his place, or was a direct member of the cabinet, I should have much more confidence in it. It appears to me a very egotistical arrangement—a one-sided affair, and until I can see a larger share of magnanimity in it than has yet been manifested I shall have fears and doubts. I know that it is no selfishness in me. I do not want and would not willingly accept any office in the gift of any Government or men, but when I see any order of men appropriate by word or deed all the honor and glory, patriotism or moral worth to themselves I know that set of men whether in church or state, socially or individually, will bear watching—they never prove themselves to be what they profess.

If our Government gets into trouble, and the time should come (God forbid it ever should) when it is being inquired into "Who did it?" I should not be surprised that Bonaparte's example would be too clearly copied by some of the "great I am." I fear there are those in the cabinet who would not scruple to play a coup d'état upon our beloved country. Nevertheless there is an immeasurable difference between our present position and that sought to put us in by our former Northern brethren. I will trust, however, that both our fears proceed more from our anxiety than otherwise. Before this reaches you I hope that things will so far have developed themselves that we shall know what is the policy of Lincoln's (if he have any) Government. Suspense begins to be more onerous than reality in its worst anticipated shape.

Since writing the above Sunday has passed over and another mail arrived which gave us no additional information, except that dame rumor says that the talked-of withdrawal of troops from Fort Sumter is a ruse. I feel deeply mortified that the two sections should be so bitterly arrayed against each other. It is precisely like a family feud. I would treat my Northern brethren with the greatest respect and kindness if they would let me do so and at the same time enjoy my rights and immunities, but so help me God I will spill the last drop of blood in these old veins and spend the last red cent in the locker in the defense of these rights. And what is more, we intend to resist their insidious encroachments now and forever. They have boasted that we of the South cannot get along without their aid. Well, if they so believe, just leave us to our own ruin and we are content. We believe that we have all the elements of greatness as a nation and a people that ever clustered around the glory of any nation; we believe that the development of these elements has been retarded and kept back by Northern capital and Northern cupidity; we believe that that capital has been located North more by accident than otherwise; we believe that the Northern States by nature (not by law) should have been dependent upon the Southern States, and will be so when we assume our natural position—our position in obedience to our natural and physical resources.

* * * I shall be pleased to hear from you frequently. You are in the midst of the enemy's country; you are at headquarters; just give us the dots. I want to know what is the spirit of the yeomanry of the country, &c.

I am, as ever, your friend, most truly,

A. W. REDDING.

NEW YORK, August 6, 1861.

DEAN RICHMOND, Esq.,

Chairman of Democratic State Committee.

SIR: An organization of influential citizens styled the Democratic States Rights Union Association has been formed in this city to sustain and uphold the Constitution of the United States. It is opposed to the coercion of States, hostile to the arbitrary and unconstitutional acts of the present Federal Administration and favorable to peace and a restoration of the Union. Its purpose is to assist in rallying public opinion, now temporarily perverted by misconception or restrained by terrorism, in favor of the objects above indicated, and especially to direct it to the real cause of our national difficulties, viz, the repudiation by the Republican party of the Constitution as it has been truly and justly expounded by the Supreme Court of the United States.

In order to place before your committee more fully the objects of our organization and to offer our co-operation with you for the purposes above indicated a committee was appointed at the last meeting of the association to visit Albany to confer with your committee. This committee is composed of Messrs. Jacob H. V. Cockroft, S. J. Anderson, whom by this letter we beg leave to introduce to you.

By order of the association:

Very respectfully,

R. G. HORTON,
Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 11, 1861.
Lieut. Gen. WINFIELD SCOTT, Washington.

GENERAL: The letter written by Samuel J. Anderson, a political prisoner at Fort Lafayette, to the President has been referred to me. Having examined the case I am satisfied that a discharge of the prisoner from custody would not be compatible with the public safety.

I have the honor to be, general, your very obedient servant,
WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

FORT LAFAYETTE, September 30, 1861
C. WENDELL, Esq., Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: An old friend is in durance vile. If he does not get out in fifteen days he is ruined in more ways than one. There is no charge against him. This you can easily ascertain.

S. J. ANDERSON.

BUFFALO, October 4, 1861.
Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

MY DEAR SIR: I write you on behalf of Mr. Anderson (inclosing papers), now a prisoner in Fort Lafayette, whose wife is a cousin of my wife. I know not on what evidence the Government has arrested and imprisoned him. I do not believe, however, from my many conversations with Anderson he has been playing in any respect the part of a spy or aiding the Southern Confederacy in any way. If he has he must of course suffer the consequences of his own conduct, and I would not attempt to procure his release. As a Southern man he doubtless does to some extent sympathize with his friends of the South. My real opinion in reference to him is that he thinks the South has been too fast and that it would have been much better for them to have quietly submitted to the election of Mr. Lincoln than to have inaugurated a civil war with all its horrors. I am sure as he has often said, taking into consideration his marriage with a Northern lady, his business interests being here, his residence also here, he had a firm purpose to remain neutral and in no manner render himself obnoxious to the censure of the Government. His wife is much distressed at his imprisonment, because he is quite subject to rheumatism and the confinement in so damp a place tends to aggravate his illness. I do not mean that he is sick but that he suffers from rheumatic pains in his limbs considerably. Now I well know you are not deaf to the humanities of life, and if you can consistently with the public safety and your duty as a public servant, I trust you will release Mr. Anderson.

Yours, very respectfully,

JNO. C. STRONG.

William K. Blasdel, of [Buffalo, N. Y.], being duly sworn deposes and says that he is a farmer living on his farm near Springville in the county of Erie; that he is the father-in-law of Samuel J. Anderson now a prisoner in Fort Lafayette; that the family of said Anderson consists of his wife, the daughter of this deponent, an infant child between one and two years of age and a son by a former wife some thirteen or fourteen years of age; that the said family of Mr. Anderson has resided with this deponent for the past two or three years; that deponent has had frequent conversations with said Anderson on political subjects; that he is as deponent understands a native of the State of Georgia; that he owns as this deponent is informed and believes large tracts of land in Georgia and has many friends in the said State; that this deponent believes that he understands the political views of the said Anderson; that he supported Mr. Douglas in the last canvass because in the opinion of said Anderson he occupied middle ground between the extreme sentiments of the anti-slavery men of the North and the proslavery men of the South; that said Anderson went South this last spring to the State of Georgia to look after his interests, remaining South four or five weeks, and on his return spent several weeks with his family in the house of deponent; that he then returned to the city of New York where he has resided for several years past to arrange and settle up his business so he could come and spend the summer and winter on the farm of deponent with his family; that deponent knows it was his intention to come to Erie County and spend the balance of the summer and the coming winter with his family in the house of this deponent; that he had no intention of going South or of participating actively in any manner or form in the civil war now going on in the country; that while deponent knows that the sympathies of said Anderson are those of a Southern man by birth and education he also knows that said Anderson has frequently said to this deponent he regarded the South as having been hasty and too precipitate in the appeal to arms, and that it would have been better to have sought to redress political evils by political remedies; that on his return from the South said Anderson told deponent he had seen both sides of the controversy and heard the prominent men of both sides talk and that he should side with neither party but remain neutral, or words to that effect and import; that from the many and various conversations this deponent has had with Mr. Anderson he is well persuaded that the firm purpose of said Anderson was to remain neutral in this controversy. And deponent firmly believes said Anderson has done nothing inconsistent with the said position; that he desired a preservation of the union of the States. And deponent further says that said Anderson is a slim man, of slender constitution and health, and from the letters of said Anderson to his family and from what deponent knows of his health the confinement of said Anderson will be and is as deponent verily believes prejudicial to his health and very injurious to his business interests and the real welfare of his family. And further deponent saith not.

John C. Strong, of [Buffalo, N. Y.], being duly sworn says that he has known Samuel J. Anderson, spoken of in the foregoing affidavit, for three or four years last past; that he has often conversed with him on the political subjects of the day; that on his return from the South and some time in June last as deponent now remembers the time he had a conversation with said Anderson at the Wadsworth House in this city; that though this deponent cannot remember the precise words of said Anderson he remembers very distinctly that he disapproved of the hasty action of the leaders in the Southern States, and expressed the opinion that the war might have been avoided and all the evils complained of redressed by political means; that from conversations with the said Anderson deponent verily believes it was his firm purpose to attend to his private business in New York and remain neutral during the war, taking no active part with the one party or the other; that while said Anderson had the sympathies and feelings of a Southern man and expressed them deponent believes it was the firm purpose of said Anderson to refrain from all or any active participation in the controversy and attend to his own private business. And further deponent saith not.

SIR: After thanking you for the promptness of your attention to my case I beg leave to say that I shall do myself the honor of calling on you within a few days. I have a letter from John A. Kennedy, esq., to you which I shall retain until I reach Washington. I have taken an obligation which is binding upon me and which I have no inclination to qualify or evade. This obligation was imposed upon me as the condition of my release from a distressing and ruinous imprisonment. I have taken it and will keep it. I shall ask, sir, to be permitted to bring to your official notice certain facts in relation to individuals now incarcerated in Fort Lafayette which from my recent association with them I am enabled to do with accuracy.*

OFFICE OF THE SUPT. METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, October 12, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD.

SIR: The bearer of this is Mr. S. J. Anderson, lately confined at Lafayette. He desires an opportunity to communicate with you personally. I therefore take the liberty to introduce him. He is a man of education and capacity and may prove of value at this time, as he feels himself entirely severed from his former friends by recent events.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY.

ASTOR HOUSE, New York, November 1, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have just returned from Erie County after an absence of some ten days. I can perceive no prospect of obtaining suitable employment for my mental and physical energies hereabouts. My political course and predilections have separated me from my former political friends here, and the conditions of my parole sever me from my friends in the South. Those conditions, however, are subject to remission by the Secretary of State. I have agreed not to go to a seceded State or write to any one therein without permission of the Secretary of State. I am therefore invited indirectly to apply for that permission. Political friends of yours, sir, somewhat interested in my affairs, have kindly tendered their good offices to obtain a passport from you releasing me from my parole. I have concluded, however, to select the more direct method of addressing you personally. I therefore ask you, sir, to grant me a remission of my parole, which I have no inclination to violate. Situated as I now am I am useless to myself and to others. As an humble individual I would appeal to the magnanimity of a powerful Government which could receive no perceptible detriment at my hands even if I were its bitterest foe. But I respectfully submit that I cannot be so considered while I firmly adhere to the motto, "Union and liberty, one and inseparable, now and forever."

I have the honor to be, respectfully and truly, your petitioner,
 S. J. ANDERSON.

NEW YORK, July 22, 1862.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I address this to you for obvious reasons. You are familiar with my case. The present Secretary of War was not in office when I was released from Fort Lafayette on parole. That parole was dictated by you as Secretary of State. From the best information in my power to obtain I was arrested by order of General Scott. When I addressed President Lincoln inquiring as to the charges against me he replied to me in prison through the Adjutant-General. When I was released on parole, however, my release came through your office. I have since had the honor of addressing you on the subject of remitting my parole. It now appears from the public prints that Generals Hill and Dix are to meet for the purpose of agreeing upon a permanent basis of exchange of prisoners, &c., and that lists of all prisoners confined and on parole are to be furnished. I have to request that my name may not be omitted from the list of prisoners on parole.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. J. ANDERSON.

Case of Ellis B. Schnabel.

This person was arrested in Connecticut by the U. S. marshal of that State and committed to Fort Lafayette August 29, 1861, by order of the Secretary of State. He was charged with disloyalty; with making treasonable harangues at peace meetings in Connecticut and with publicly denouncing the Government. An order was issued from the Department of State dated September 5, 1861, directing Colonel Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to release Schnabel on his taking the oath of allegiance. Schnabel declined to take the oath and his release at this time, but subsequently expressed a desire to be released on taking the oath and an order was issued from said Department October 22, 1861, again directing Colonel Burke to release Schnabel on his taking the oath. He was accordingly released October 24, 1861.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: The U. S. marshal of this State has to-day seized two trunks belonging to Ellis B. Schnabel, yesterday arrested in Connecticut and now in Fort Lafayette. He wishes me to direct him what to do with them, and I therefore refer to you for instructions.

A. Q. KEASBEY,

U. S. Attorney.

FORT LAFAYETTE, N. Y., September 8, 1861.
Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: The officer in command of this fort where I am detained as a prisoner at your instance has tendered me an oath as a condition of my release, the phraseology of which is so extraordinary that in my humble opinion no true lover of freedom, no honest supporter of the Constitution and laws can take without incurring the risk of being compelled either to violate his oath or become an auxiliary in the sacrifice of the Constitution in case the Government should adopt measures involving an infraction of that instrument. I can not and will not take an oath which may under certain contingencies oblige me to support a party or sectional organization. I will follow the lead of the Constitution and laws—nothing more, nothing less. Nor will I voluntarily part with my rights (as required by the terms of your oath) to express my opinion on all measures adopted by the Administration for the suppression of the existing war. There is wisdom in a multiplicity of counsel. Besides I have yet to learn that this or any other Administration is, was or will be immaculate. The concluding part of this oath requires me to surrender my constitutional rights. Sir, I will surrender them only with my life. My ancestors shed their blood on the fields of the Revolution to secure these rights for me. I will maintain and transmit them if possible by a like sacrifice.

I am not an advocate for the atrocious doctrine that "amidst arms laws are silent," although I will consent to take an oath to the following effect, drawn up and worded by myself, for until you are proclaimed dictator I shall dispute your right to dictate any oath unknown to and unsanctioned by the Constitution and laws: That I will support and defend the Constitution and obey all the laws of the United States while they are alive upon the statute book, but whilst I will obey a bad law I will at the same time claim the right to advocate its repeal as speedily as possible, else I am a slave. Further in protecting and defending the Constitution I will maintain the undeniable fact that the Union is the greatest blessing to our country (excepting the principles of civil and religious liberty) that a kind Providence has permitted us to enjoy, and that the free States are mainly indebted to that Union for their unparalleled prosperity and can only perpetuate and increase their triumphs beneath that grand Federal arch. But I will take no oath of any description which contains some hidden purpose covering an intended future policy, or is thrust upon me merely to provide a pretext for my release from this Administration jail. If I am guiltless (which you well know whether I am or not) discharge me from that fact; it alone is sufficient.

You, sir, have acted under evil and impolitic advisement in my arrest. I am void of offense. I have not solicited my liberation at your hands and never shall nor has any person to my knowledge; nor have I importuned any one to solicit my release. Sir, I will neither give nor take anything which is not comprised within the laws of my country. The tribunal therein established I seek and demand as the right of an American citizen. When the laws cease to protect the remedy of the outraged citizen then becomes plain and imperative. I await my trial, sir, although I will unhesitatingly make oath to the effect above mentioned for the following reasons:

First. Because I am already bound by a similar oath as a member of the legal profession together with my hereditary obligation and because my sense of duty, my conscience and judgment approve. Up to this moment my whole life attests the faithful fulfillment and observance of these sacred and solemn responsibilities.

Second. Because in case I did not renew this oath the bare fact that an oath was tendered and refused would afford a pretext for the partisan press to charge me with treasonable purposes, otherwise it would be proclaimed I could not reasonably hesitate to take the oath. That press has already abused the public mind by falsehood in relation to the meeting I addressed in Litchfield County, Conn.

I will therefore take the oath described by myself to do my duty (which has been done heretofore and would be equally well done without the additional affirmation) as one mode of self-defense. At the same time I cannot reconcile my mind to the opinion that the mere offer of an oath to a man free from all charge of error is not a sinister mode of casting an imputation upon his conduct, especially as your letter ordering the oath to be tendered directs that I be discharged with a rebuke or reprimand. Sir, until I am proved guilty of some offense, if you or Colonel Burke or President Lincoln himself attempts a reprimand I shall resent on the spot the indignity offered as a gratuitous insult. If I am guilty of treason, hang me; but if my true record shows that I have denounced treason, privation of rights and violation of law do me the justice to which I am entitled uncoupled with unmanly circumstances. I know my rights and yours, as well as the inflexible limits which the people will fix to the exercise of delegated power; hence it is useless at a time like this to approach me in an oblique manner. Prefer your charges, confront me with my accusers, summon a jury of my peers, try me by the laws of the land if there are any remaining. I will abide the result. Or with frank dignity acknowledge your error in my arrest and open the iron doors of your prison to a man whose devotion to the Union and the Constitution is at the very least equal to that of the most valiant champion of your peculiar views. The cause of our unhappy country will be better served by fair dealing tending to allay unnecessary and dangerous excitement rather than by heaping up wrongs calculated to arouse bitter personal hostilities.

I have written in great haste as I have received word from Colonel Burke that my answer is desired at once; hence have neither time nor opportunity to review or digest this communication. May God bless our distracted country, preserve our Constitution, perpetuate our great Union and imbue all public officers and private citizens with a generous love of liberty and strict obedience to the laws.

Respectfully,

ELLIS B. SCHNABEL.

P. S.—It would be well to examine carefully the oath tendered me, as you have made interlineations with a pen in the printed form and erased part of the original the import of which now you may not have sufficiently considered:

I do solemnly swear that I will support, protect and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States against all enemies whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance and loyalty to the same, any ordinance, resolution or law of any State convention or legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and further that I do this with a full determination, pledge and purpose, without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever; and further that I will not by speaking or correspondence interfere with the measures of the Government for suppressing the existing insurrection. So help me God.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, September 10, 1861.

Col. MARTIN BURKE, Fort Hamilton;

You will now retain Ellis B. Schnabel a prisoner, and not again tender him the oath which he refused.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State.

JERSEY CITY, September 12, 1861.

Mr. WEBSTER.

DEAR SIR: It has been reported that a man by the name of Schnabel, now confined at Fort Lafayette, was tendered his liberty yesterday if he would take the oath of allegiance which he refused to take. My object in writing to you is to put you in a way of gaining information regarding this man. I refer you to R. Van Valkenburgh, who can inquire of Mr. Weldon (who you know by reputation), who can give you information by which it can be proven that Schnabel was in Richmond last spring. I have had near 100 arguments with him myself up to within one week of his arrest and upon all occasions he was loud in his denunciations of the present Administration. He is a bad man who with his power of declamation can do great harm. He is well known in Jersey City and all affirm that the Government would do well by keeping him confined until the war is over.

Very respectfully, yours,

B. VAN RIPER,
Superintendent Folding Department, U. S. Senate.

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, September 28, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: In relation to Mr. Ellis B. Schnabel and the propriety of his being speedily released from arrest it is proper that I should say to you that he had attracted my attention before he went to Connecticut to make peace speeches. An agent of Mr. Samuel Colt came down to New York in search of Schnabel in the early part of August, and failing to find him called on the police for assistance. Schnabel was found and an interview was had, but the proceedings were conducted in such a manner as to excite my suspicion that some improper proceeding was contemplated between Colt and Schnabel. I inferred from disconnected remarks of the parties that Schnabel had a commission to purchase arms, which Colt having ascertained had sent his agent to New York to secure the customer, having been long ago convinced that Colt was ready to sell his wares to whoever paid most.

On the strength of this, instead of writing I sent the officer who had assisted in searching up Schnabel to Hartford to report the whole affair to Governor Buckingham and put him on his guard against Colt and Schnabel. His acknowledgment to me of the service is dated August 14, which fixes the time of S. going to Connecticut on the invitation of Colt, and shows that although I was in error in supposing Colt wanted him to buy arms he had other occupation for him, for he immediately opened his peace campaign after reaching Hartford. He had no sooner begun his traitorous harangues than Daniel S. Dickinson fired up and sent me by the hands of his attorney in New York a complaint against Schnabel for having obtained from him under false pretenses his signature to an instrument of writing (a note of hand for $500) in December of 1856. My officer was after Schnabel, and was only an hour or so behind the U. S. marshal of Connecticut when he made the arrest. These papers have since been returned to Mr. Dickinson, he only being influenced by the design of arresting his treason by arresting Schnabel himself.

I know of no good reason for letting him out and keeping others in confinement. He is a very plausible man and had the sagacity with S. J. Anderson to treat Stanley kindly while the others regarded him with suspicion. It would probably be well to institute an inquiry somewhere and ascertain who paid his expenses and was to continue paying them during his sojourn in Connecticut. He had but little money when arrested, and the landlord where he had been stopping in Jersey City has a lien on his baggage of $138. I examined the baggage but found nothing wrong in it.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 16, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I wrote to you on the 8th of September last in reference to a certain oath and reprimand tendered to me. I took exceptions to the oath on account of an interpolation which under certain circumstances would have made me swear away all my rights and interests in my country and her institutions. I felt the reprimand an insult because a reprimand is a penalty imposed as the consequence of a conviction for some offense. I had committed no offense and according to the best information I could get was charged with none and certainly was not tried or convicted of any. You did not answer my letter wherein I offered to take a proper oath embodying everything that comprised true loyalty and unlimited defense of the Constitution.

I waited until I obtained a copy of the usual oath presented to prisoners here, which is a month since. I immediately informed the commanding officer (Lieutenant Wood) that I would take that oath and he promised to inform you to that effect. After a week elapsed upon inquiry I learned that he had not done so. This was extraordinary. I resolved to address Secretary Cameron, between whom and myself friendly relations have existed without interruption from my boyhood. He immediately proclaimed himself my enemy, asserting through the columns of a public print that I had no character and that he returned my communication* unopened. I addressed him because you did not answer my first letter and I inferred that the order to reprimand emanated from you. I endeavored last week to discover who framed the oath and ordered the reprimand. Colonel Burke referred me to the War Department for answers to my interrogatories. This seems to indicate that Secretary Cameron forwarded the oath and ordered the reprimand. If such is the case I would feel relieved to be enabled to qualify my first communication. If it is not inconsistent with your relations with the Secretary of War to inform me I should be very much obliged. In my letter to Secretary Cameron I went into a full account of all the circumstances of my arrest and imprisonment, also informing him that I was ready at all times to take the usual oath of allegiance. I further (as in my letter to you) demanded a trial, stating that he should summon the abolitionists of Litchfield County, Conn., who were at the meeting I addressed in large numbers; that I would be willing to be tried by them alone. I would not call a solitary witness; neither Democrat, peace man nor Republican should be summoned in my behalf. None but those supposed to be my worst enemies should testify and I pledged myself not even to cross-examine them, so conscious am I of being free from all offense, even remotely. Had you been present at the meeting you would have promptly countermanded the order for arrest. I believed then that the order for arrest was on the principle of prevention, for it was after me before I had opened my lips. Thinking that a speedy satisfaction would be accorded me—for you should have informed yourself immediately of the true state of the facts when such extraordinary process is resorted to as the imprisoning of a citizen without warrant or accusation—I went to Connecticut on law business and was invited to address a meeting. I found a bad state of the public mind. I determined to allay the excitement and did perhaps more toward that end than any effort yet made by the Administration. Your Republican friends and even the officer who arrested me (Mr. Peck, of Litchfield) declaring after hearing me that “I had effectually stopped the mouths of all seceders” and will tell you so now. These men you should have consulted before permitting a Northern citizen devoted through his whole life to the Constitution, Union and prosperity of his country to remain thus long in confinement.

This note is simply to remind you again of that which has been before the Government for a month—that I am ready (as I have always been) to take the oath of allegiance presented to others. This an honorable man can faithfully and safely observe. The very day I had the other oath presented me I notified your agents here to the same effect. If the above meets with your views you will please immediately inform me as one of the reasons for haste is the sad afflictions falling upon those nearest and dearest to me on earth. I have received through the hands of Colonel Burke a solemn summons to scenes of sorrow and approaching death, hence I cannot fail to ask a reply without delay for thus only can I discharge dutifully the sacred obligations now suddenly cast upon me.

Very respectfully,

ELLIS B. SCHNABEL.

P. S.—In addition, sir, I would wish in case any immediate action is taken in my case which humanity demands to be informed whether any charge has been brought against me so that I can acquit myself of all censure cast upon me by newspaper misrepresentations, or if it is more agreeable after I attend to the duties that sorrow and distress has imposed unexpectedly upon me signify whether I shall come to Washington to correct the record if any exists

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 21, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: One week since I wrote you a second time in reference to my imprisonment. No notice is taken of my communications to you, and yet you have kept me in prison for two months without assigning cause, without notice of charges, without hope of the writ of habeas corpus, without trial and all defense denied although all these have been demanded by me six weeks ago. These things satisfy me that I am held without any known cause but political vindictiveness. Who the primary persecutors are I am totally ignorant of. Your protracted silence I consider as a refusal to afford the opportunity to an outraged citizen to redress an atrocious grievance.

I have within a short time had the propitious occasion to put in the hands of my friends outside this prison all the documents, letters, correspondence and facts connected with my imprisonment. I retained only a copy of my last letter to you, and herewith send you again a copy asking that it be put on file in the State Department for future reference. With this note and the accompanying copy my intercourse with your Department ceases, from the conviction that I am struggling in vain to obtain justice or even a hearing. About all the injury, loss and suffering that can be put upon me I have already endured. Hence since the innocent are to have no redress but must continue to suffer the wrong I am constrained to abide that period of justification which I trust the future will soon afford. We will both await in our respective positions coming events—you in a position self-chosen; I in one forced in violation of all law and right—denied even the knowledge of any charge against me. I believe there is none, as none can be made with truth where myself or sentiments are known. I now rest with this further demand that you immediately upon receipt of this letter forward to the Hon. Charles O'Connor, of New York City, a pass to visit me forthwith as counsel. This I am entitled to by all the constitutions and laws of my country. I have addressed him to-day upon the subject and consequently insist upon seeing him for the purposes of consultation, defense and redress.

Very respectfully,

ELLIS B. SCHNABEL.

Lieut. Col. MARTIN BURKE, Fort Lafayette, N. Y.

COLONEL: You will release Mr. Ellis B. Schnabel on his taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary of State.

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of Kings, ss:

I, Ellis B. Schnabel, do solemnly affirm that I will support, protect and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States against all enemies whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance and loyalty to the same, any ordinance, resolution or law of any State convention or legislature to the contrary notwithstanding; and further that I do this with a full determination, pledge and purpose, without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever; and further that I will well and faithfully perform all the duties which may be required of me by law. So help me God.

ELLIS B. SCHNABEL.

Affirmed to and subscribed before me this 24th day of October, 1861.

CHARLES W. CHURCH,
Justice of the Peace.

Case of William Patrick and J. C. Rahming.

This person [William Patrick] was arrested in New York by order of the Secretary of War August 28, 1861, and committed to Fort Lafayette. He was charged with having corresponded and transacted business of a commercial character with persons residing in the insurrectionary States in violation of the President's proclamation of August 16, 1861. An order was issued by the Secretary of State September 11, 1861, directing Lieutenant-Colonel Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to release Patrick. The said William Patrick was accordingly released September 13, 1861, unconditionally, claiming to be a British subject.

John C. Rahming was arrested by order of John A. Kennedy, superintendent of police at New York City, September 2, 1861, and by order of the Secretary of State committed to Fort Lafayette. He was charged with attempting to induce the owners of the schooner Arctic to take cannon from Nassau to Wilmington, N. C., for the use of the rebels. An order was issued from the Department of State dated September 14, 1861, directing Colonel Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to tender Rahming his release on his giving a bond with a penalty of $2,500 with sureties, &c., that during his abode in this country he will do nothing hostile to the Government of the United States. He was accordingly released September 18, 1861.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 3, 1861.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September [11], 1861.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have read the communication* of Mr. Archibald to you concerning the case of William Patrick. Intercepted correspondence, letters to Smith, of the house of Smith & Patrick, and similar letters addressed to the care of that firm show that the house has been made a channel for communication between insurgent citizens of the United States at home and their correspondents and agents who are in Europe engaged in procuring munitions of war for the overthrow of this Government.

* Not found.

The Government has been prepared by the favorable reports it has heard of Mr. Patrick since his arrest to believe what Mr. Archibald states—that he has not willingly consented to be implicated in this treasonable correspondence in which his partner Smith is so deeply compromised. I have therefore by authority of the President directed that he shall be released from confinement. This is the more cheerfully done because the publicity of what has happened will probably be sufficient to prevent further attempts to employ the firm of Smith & Patrick as a medium of treasonable communication. I return the communication of Mr. Archibald as proposed.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.:

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to Lord Lyons and acknowledges the receipt under cover from his lordship of a report* from Mr. Archibald, the British consul at New York, relative to the case of Mr. Rahming, a British subject detained at Fort Lafayette. That report is under consideration with other papers appertaining to the case.

COLONEL: You may inform Mr. Rahming, confined at Fort Lafayette, that he may be released upon giving a bond with a penalty to the amount of $2,500 and with sureties to the satisfaction of the U. I am, colonel, your obedient servant,

WASHINGTON, October 14, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

SIR: Her Majesty's Government were much concerned to find that two British subjects, Mr. Patrick and Mr. Rahming, had been subjected to arbitrary arrest, and although they had learned from a telegraphic dispatch from me that Mr. Patrick had been released they could not but regard the matter as one requiring their very serious consideration. Her Majesty's Government perceive that when British subjects as well as American citizens are arrested they are immediately transferred to a military prison and that the military authorities refuse to pay obedience to a writ of habeas corpus. Her Majesty's Government conceive that this practice is directly opposed to the maxim of the Constitution of the United States that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law.

Her Majesty's Government are willing, however, to make every allowance for the hard necessities of a time of internal trouble, and they would not have been surprised if the ordinary securities of personal liberty had been temporarily suspended nor would they have complained if British subjects falling under suspicion had suffered from the consequences of that suspension. But it does not appear that Congress has sanctioned in this respect any departure from the due course of law, and it is in these circumstances that the law officers of the Crown have advised Her Majesty's Government that the arbitrary arrests of British subjects are illegal.

So far as it appears to Her Majesty's Government the Secretary of State of the United States exercises upon the reports of spies and informers the power of depriving British subjects of their liberty, of retaining them in prison or liberating them by his own will and pleasure. Her Majesty's Government cannot but regard this despotic and arbitrary power as inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States; as at variance with the treaties of amity subsisting between the two nations and as tending to prevent the resort of British subjects to the United States for purposes of trade and industry.

Her Majesty's Government have therefore felt bound to instruct me to remonstrate against such irregular proceedings and to say that in their opinion the authority of Congress is necessary in order to justify the arbitrary arrest and imprisonment of British subjects.

I have the honor to be, sir, with the highest consideration, your most obedient, humble servant,

LYONS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 14, 1861.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: I have the honor to acknowledge your lordship's note of the present date. In that paper you inform me that the British Government is much concerned to find that two British subjects, Mr. Patrick and Mr. Rahming, have been brought under arbitrary arrest, and that although Her Majesty's ministers have been advised by you of the release of Mr. Patrick yet they cannot but regard the matters as requiring the very serious consideration of their Government. You further inform me that Her Majesty's Government perceive that when British subjects as well as American citizens are arrested they are transferred to a military prison and that the military authorities refuse to pay obedience to a writ of habeas corpus. You add that Her Majesty's Government conceive that this practice is directly opposed to the maxim of the Constitution of the United States that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law. You then observe that Her Majesty's Government are nevertheless willing to make every allowance for the hard necessities of a time of internal trouble, and they would not have been surprised if the ordinary securities of personal liberty had been temporarily suspended nor would they have complained if British subjects falling under suspicion had suffered from the consequences of that suspension. But that it does not appear that Congress has sanctioned in this respect any departure from the due course of law, and it is in these circumstances that the law officers of the Crown have advised Her Majesty's Government that the arrests of British subjects are illegal.

You remark further that so far as appears to Her Majesty's Government the Secretary of State of the United States exercises upon the reports of spies and assumes the power of depriving British subjects of their liberty or liberating them by his own will and pleasure, and you inform me that Her Majesty's Government cannot but regard this despotic and arbitrary power as inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, as at variance with the treaties of amity subsisting between the two nations and as tending to prevent the resort of British subjects to the United States for purposes of trade and industry. You conclude with informing me that upon these grounds Her Majesty's Government have felt bound to instruct you to remonstrate against such irregular proceedings and to say that in their opinion the authority of Congress is necessary in order to justify the arbitrary arrest and imprisonment of British subjects.

The facts in regard to the two persons named in your note are as follows: Communications from the regular police of the country to the Executive at Washington showed that disloyal persons in the State of Alabama were conducting treasonable correspondence with Confederates, British subjects and American citizens in Europe, aimed at the overthrow of the Federal Union by armed forces actually in the field and besieging the capital of the United States. A portion of this correspondence which was intercepted was addressed to the firm of Smith & Patrick, brokers, long established and doing business in the city of New York. It appeared that this firm had a branch at Mobile; that the partner, Smith, is a disloyal citizen of the United States and that he was in Europe when the treasonable papers were sent from Mobile, addressed through the house of Smith & Patrick in New York. On receiving this information William Patrick was arrested and committed into military custody at Fort Lafayette by order of the Secretary of War of the United States addressed to the police of the city of New York. These proceedings took place on the 28th of August last. Representations were thereupon made to the Secretary of State by friends of Mr. Patrick to the effect that notwithstanding his associations he was personally loyal to this Government, and that he was ignorant of the treasonable nature of the correspondence which was being carried on through the mercantile house of which he was a member. Directions were thereupon given by the Secretary of State to a proper agent to inquire into the correctness of the facts thus presented and this inquiry resulted in the establishment of their truth. Mr. William Patrick was thereupon promptly released from custody by direction of the Secretary of State. This release occurred on the 13th day of September last.

On the 2d day of September the superintendent of police in the city of New York informed the Secretary of State by telegraph that he had under arrest J. C. Rahming, who had just arrived from Nassau where he had attempted to induce the owners of the schooner Arctic to take cannon to Wilmington, in North Carolina, for the use of the rebels, and inquired what should he do with the prisoner. J. C. Rahming was thereupon committed into military custody at Fort Lafayette under a mandate from the Secretary of State. This commitment was made on the 2d day of September. On the 17th day of that month this prisoner after due inquiry was released from custody on his executing a bond in the penalty of $2,500, with a condition that he should thereafter bear true allegiance to the United States and do no act hostile or injurious to them while remaining under their protection.

I have to regret that after so long an official intercourse between the Governments of the United States and Great Britain it should be necessary now to inform Her Majesty's ministers that all executive proceedings whether of the Secretary of War or of the Secretary of State are unless disavowed or revoked by the President proceedings of the President of the United States. Certainly it is not necessary to announce to the British Government now that an insurrection attended by civil and even social war was existing in the United States when the proceedings which I have thus related took place. But it does seem necessary to state for the information of that Government that Congress is by the Constitution invested with no executive power or responsibility whatever, and on the contrary that the President of the United States is by the Constitution and laws invested with the whole executive power of the Government, and charged with the supreme direction of all municipal or ministerial civil agents as well as of the whole land and naval forces of the Union, and that invested with those ample powers he is charged by the Constitution and laws with the absolute duty of suppressing insurrection as well as of preventing and repelling invasion and that for these purposes he constitutionally exercises the right of suspending the writ of habeas corpus whenever and wheresoever and in whatsoever extent the public safety endangered by treason or invasion in arms in his judgment requires.

The proceedings of which the British Government complain were taken upon information conveyed to the President by legal police authorities of the country, and they were not instituted until after he had suspended the great writ of freedom in just the extent that in view of the perils of the State he deemed necessary. For the exercise of that discretion he as well as his advisers—among whom are the Secretary of War and the Secretary of State—is responsible by law before the highest judicial tribunal of the Republic and amenable also to the judgment of his countrymen and the enlightened opinion of the civilized world.

A candid admission contained in your letter relieves me of any necessity for showing that the two persons named therein were neither known nor supposed to be British subjects when the proceedings occurred and that in every case subjects of Her Majesty residing in the United States and under their protection are treated during the present troubles in the same manner and with no greater or less rigor than American citizens. The military prison which was used for the temporary detention of the suspected parties is a fort constructed and garrisoned for the public defense. The military officer charged with their custody has declined to pay obedience to the writ of habeas corpus, but the refusal was made in obedience to an express direction of the President in the exercise of his functions as Commander-in-Chief of all the land and naval forces of the United States. Although it is not very important it certainly is not entirely irrelevant to add that so far as I am informed no writ of habeas corpus was attempted to be served or was even sent out or applied for in behalf of either of the persons named, although in a case not dissimilar the writ of habeas corpus was issued out in favor of another British subject and was disobeyed by the direction of the President.

The British Government have candidly conceded in the remonstrance before me that even in this country so remarkable for so long an enjoyment by its people of the highest immunities of personal freedom war and especially civil war cannot be conducted exclusively in the forms and with the dilatory remedies provided by municipal laws which are adequate to the preservation of public order in a time of peace. Treason always operates if possible by surprise, and prudence and humanity equally require that violence concocted in secret shall be prevented if practicable by unusual and vigorous precaution. I am fully aware of the inconveniences which result from the practice of such precautions, embarrassing communities in social life and affecting perhaps trade and intercourse with foreign nations. But the American people after having tried in every way to avert civil war have accepted it at last as a stern necessity. Their chief interest while it lasts is not the enjoyments of society or the profits of trade but the saving of the national life. That life saved all the other blessings which attach to it will speedily return with greater assurance of continuance than ever before. The safety of the whole people has become in the present emergency the supreme law and so long as the danger shall exist all classes of society, equally the denizen and the citizen, cheerfully acquiesce in the measures which that law prescribes.

This Government does not question the learning of the legal advisers of the British Crown or the justice of the deference which Her Majesty's Government pays to them. Nevertheless the British Government will hardly expect that the President will accept their explanations of the Constitution which thus expounded would leave upon him the sole executive responsibility of suppressing the existing insurrection while it would transfer to Congress the most material and indispensable power to be employed for that purpose. Moreover those explanations find no support in the letter much less in the spirit of the Constitution itself. He must be allowed therefore to prefer and be governed by the view of our organic national law which while it will enable him to execute his great trust with complete success receives the sanction of the highest authorities of our own country, and is sustained by the general consent of the people for whom alone that Constitution was established.

I avail myself of this opportunity to offer to your lordship a renewed assurance of my very high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

FOREIGN OFFICE, November 22, 1861.

Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: Some misapprehension appears to have prevailed in respect to the note which your lordship addressed to Mr. Seward regarding the two British subjects, Messrs. Patrick and Rahming. Your lordship very properly according to the instructions I had given stated to Mr. Seward that in the opinion of the law officers the arrest of British subjects and the refusal of the writ of habeas corpus was illegal.

It seems to have been inferred, and Mr. Seward himself countenances this mistake, that the British Government pretended to set up their reading of the American Constitution as of greater authority than the authority of the President of the United States. Such was obviously not your lordship's meaning or mine. It is necessary in every case where a British subject complains to consult the law of the country in which the complaint arises. Thus when a British subject complained last year of detention in a Prussian prison Her Majesty's Government took pains to ascertain the provisions of the Prussian law on the subject. Thus a few days ago I directed Her Majesty's minister at Madrid to complain of the treatment of a British vessel and her commander on the ground that the Spanish law had been violated by that treatment. It is obvious that so long as the British or any other Government complains of the violation of right it is necessary to ascertain the nature of the laws of which the violation is alleged, otherwise the complaint can only be directed against harshness of administration and excess of rigor.

That Her Majesty's Government were not singular in believing that the writ of habeas corpus can only be suspended by authority of Congress has since the date of your note been abundantly shown. A judge issues a writ of habeas corpus to bring up the body of a minor enlisted and detained in the ranks of the U. S. Army. Not only is the writ disobeyed but a sentinel is placed at the door of the judge. The circuit court of which he is a member having the matter before them decide that they do not doubt their power to regard the return made by the deputy marshal as insufficient in law and to proceed against the officer who had made it and that if they do not proceed further it is because they have no physical power. If this view required confirmation it may be said that very able lawyers have written in support of this doctrine.

To recur, however, to the remonstrance which I directed your lordship to address to Mr. Seward I have to observe that Her Majesty's Government never had it in contemplation to controvert an authoritative declaration of the law of the United States in respect to the liberty of persons residing therein. What Her Majesty's Government doubted was the authority of the President to set aside the law and privilege of habeas corpus by his sole will and pleasure. That doubt has been shared by the circuit court of Washington and by many of the most eminent lawyers of a country fertile in men of legal attainments and judicial fame.

In the particular case of Mr. Patrick it appears that that gentleman was a partner in a firm with another gentleman who has taken part with the South and that the correspondence of enemies to the Government was supposed to be conveyed by means of their firm. When it is considered that a year ago two members of a firm who belonged one to the Northern and the other to the Southern States were considered equally loyal citizens; that a commercial firm cannot be dissolved in a day; that letters sent through a firm are not usually submitted to the principal partners of that firm; that no pains were taken to ascertain the character and political sentiments of Mr. Patrick before he was subjected to the indignity and pain of an arrest, this case unavoidably suggests the reflection that the possession of arbitrary power in whatever hands it may be placed is sure to lead to abuse. Among the necessities of civil war this wanton and capricious arrest of Mr. Patrick cannot be reckoned, and the remonstrance of Her Majesty's Government must remain on record.

You may give a copy of this dispatch to Mr. Seward.

I have, &c.,

RUSSELL.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 13, 1862.

Right Hon. Lord LYONS, &c.

MY LORD: You have kindly left with me a copy of an instruction which you had received from Earl Russell, dated on the 22d of November last.

I have great pleasure in stating to you for the information of his lordship that the President frankly and unhesitatingly accepts the explanations given by Earl Russell of what was the meaning of the British Government in the views which at their instance you had heretofore submitted to me concerning the right of the President to suspend the habeas corpus in time of insurrection without waiting for direct authority from Congress.

I have to regret, however, that while the misapprehension which has existed upon this one point is thus generously removed by Earl Russell he deems it necessary to persist in the opinion that the President's proceedings under a suspension of the habeas corpus in the case of William Patrick was wanton and capricious and that it had not been rendered necessary by the exigencies of the civil war.

As Government must proceed always upon information and often with great promptness and energy it could hardly be possible to avoid the commission of occasional errors in the exercise of precautionary power to repress insurrection manifesting itself more or less formidably in every State of the American Union. I cannot but think that a prompt correction of the error in such a case—such a correction as was made in the case of Mr. Patrick—is all that could reasonably be required by persons willing to deliberate carefully and anxious to interpret the action of the Government with candor and impartiality as I am sure Earl Russell is.

I cheerfully consent to leave Earl Russell's protest on the record where it will lie side by side with the decisions of this Government which show that during a civil war now of nine months' duration no complaint of any kind has been denied a hearing; not one person has been pressed into the land or naval service; not one disloyal citizen or resident, however guilty of treason or conspiring, has forfeited his life except in battle; not one has been detained a day in confinement who could and would give reliable pledges of his forbearance from evil designs, nor indeed has one person who could or would give no such pledges been detained a day beyond the period when the danger which he was engaged in producing had safely passed away.

Happily it is not the judgments of even great and good men like Earl Russell, pronounced in the excitement of the hour and possibly subject to the influences of disturbing events, which determine the character of States. From such judgments we carefully appeal to that of history, confident that it records no instance in which any Government or people has practiced moderation in civil war equal to that which thus far has distinguished this Government and the American people.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to your lordship the assurance of my high consideration.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Case of Benjamin F. Grove.

Benjamin F. Grove, a native of Virginia but a resident of Brooklyn, N. Y., was arrested August 31, 1861, by U. S. Marshal Robert Murray and delivered into the custody of Lieut. Col. Martin Burke at Fort Lafayette by order of the Secretary of State dated August 31, 1861. He was charged with disloyalty and with holding treasonable correspondence* with active secessionists in Virginia. The charges were supported by the contents of letters of Grove intercepted at Pittsburg. One addressed to Hon. William Smith, attorney, &c., Warrenton, Va., says: "I am informed that General McClellan says the war is now to be fought [with] artillery and especially heavy guns. I hope you will meet him with as long and as large guns as he brings against you. * * * If employment could be had but few would go against the South." An order was issued from the Department of State dated September 30, 1861, directing Lieutenant-Colonel Burke commanding at Fort Lafayette, &c., to release Grove on his taking the oath of allegiance and giving his parole of honor to do no act hostile to the United States. He was released October 8, 1861.—From Record Book. State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

NEW YORK, August 15, 1861.

MR. JAMES A. GROVE, Stevensburg, Va.

MY DEAR BROTHER: Your welcome favor of July 27 was received this morning. It is postmarked Franklin, Ky. Write soon again and often and forward as before. * * * The habeas corpus case before Judge Garrison, of Brooklyn, Long Island, shows how completely the military is overriding the civil power in the North under a Northern political abolition administration of the Federal Government. Counsel in this case, Messrs. Algernon R. Wood, formerly of Frederick County, Va., and L. C. Vanloon. Mr. Wood intends to apply for a writ in the case of Austin E. Smith, esq.,* son of ex-Governor Smith, of Warrenton, Va. Mr. Smith is confined in Fort Lafayette, and I suppose ex-Minister Charles James Faulkner,† who has just been arrested in Washington will be taken there also. Fort Lafayette stands in New York Bay about eight miles below the city and in the immediate vicinity of Fort Hamilton, Kings County, Long Island. Col. Martin Burke, formerly of Virginia, is in command, as you will see from the papers. He acts according to orders from Washington. I have been down to the fort but no one can see or communicate with any of the prisoners. The sheriff of Kings County can lawfully collect a force sufficient to compel obedience to the decision of Judge Garrison but it is a matter of doubt whether it will be done. We will see. Have written to ex-Governor Smith.

The great battle of Manassas was a terrible one indeed. The loss was dreadful on both sides but the triumph of the South was complete and overwhelming. No such victory has been gained during the present century. General Scott's army was 55,000 strong, thoroughly armed and equipped for the contest, but it was utterly wrecked and ruined at Manassas. There is now a great deal of crimination and recrimination among the officers and men. The officers charge the defeat upon the men and the men in turn charge the defeat upon the officers. Many regiments are charged with cowardice. The Fire Zouaves, the Fourteenth and Eighth Regiments of this State and the Fourth Regiment of Pennsylvania came in for a large portion of severe condemnation. The officers of the Fourteenth Regiment of Brooklyn upon their return a few days ago had a terrible fight among themselves.

Recruiting or re-enlisting is now uphill work. Bounties of from $30 to $50 are offered and but few are willing to go. None would go if employment could be had. This abolition war has ruined the country and men must go to war or starve. All the soldiers that have returned are loud in complaints of severe treatment and have great difficulty of getting their pay. Old "Sennacharib" and his "piratical abolitionists" are almost bankrupt, and Secretary Chase came on here a few days ago and told the banks that unless they furnished money very liberally the Lincoln Government would at once go down. I have heard returned soldiers say that the Government at Washington was in the hands of an infernal pack of abolition speculators who were enriching themselves by ruining the whole country. All of the leaders at Washington are abolitionists of the Helper book, Greeley and Beecher school.

* See case of Smith, p. 424 et seq.

Mr. W. A. Ladden, brother of the Rev. A. P. Ladden, had a son, W. A. Ladden, jr., in the Fourteenth Regiment of this State. He was wounded. The Federal loss in killed, wounded and missing cannot be far short of 5,000. The rush from Bull Run by the whole army and the abolition spectators, Senators, Congressmen and all over the dead and the dying must have been dreadful in the extreme. In achieving such an important triumph the South lost many brave and gallant men. Peace to their ashes. Heaven bless and protect their families. To all those who are yet able to defend the right I can only say courage and energy and a final and glorious triumph will soon be secured. We have now more than 100 of the best newspapers in the North against an unjust and unholy war. Ministers, ruined business men, mechanics and all classes and conditions are beginning to condemn this abolition war. The Federal prisoners that have returned say that the Confederate officers are perfect gentlemen and that Southern people treated them with the utmost kindness.

Try and send this letter to brother George Addison with the slips for him to read. When you write give me all the news about our friends, and once more I say remember myself and family affectionately to all of our dear relatives you may chance to see.

With best wishes for your health and happiness, I remain, your affectionate brother,

BENJAMIN F. GROVE.

Show Captain Long the slips and the letter too if you think proper. The slip in regard to the writ of habeas corpus and others are worth publishing when you are done with them. Remember myself and family to the folks at Oak Grove. General Ben McCulloch has given the abolitionists a tremendous defeat in Missouri, so says the late news.

SIR: Inclosed you will please find a package of letters and papers found in possession of Benjamin F. Grove, who was delivered into the custody of Col. Martin Burke at Fort Lafayette by your order of August 31, 1861.

Yours, respectfully,

FORT LAFAYETTE, *September 3, 1861.*Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: As a prisoner at this fort my case is in your hands and I feel constrained to address you. As I have not committed an overt act nor verbally said anything offensive to the Government or contrary to the Constitution or laws of my country I am led to suppose that the charges against me are founded upon certain letters written to Virginia. One I addressed to Hon. William Smith* and the other to my brother.† In those two letters I inclosed slips from various papers. The letters I sent by express, but forgetting to put the stamps on them I afterward sent them by mail to Mr. McGoodwin. I had no authority to send letters to Mr. McGoodwin but supposed he would attend to the matter as the law allowed. Since the date of those two letters I have not put a pen to paper except on matters of business. I determined immediately after the date of the two letters in question not to write any more to any one on political matters. It has been some time since the letters in question were written and I cannot remember their contents. They grew out of the excitement of the times and criminations and recriminations of the public press, and when in consequence of the ruin of trade and commerce and consequent want and distress in my own family my frenzied brain was almost distracted with anxiety and care. I can say in truth that much of the harshness in them did great injustice to my head and heart. Much of what I said was caught up from the columns of the newspapers circulating in New York. I did not solicit information from any one, and the harsh expressions and condemnations improperly used were betrayed into my feverish and excited brain by reading newspaper articles.

For my errors of omission or commission I know I must atone to the offended laws. To err is human and natural; to forgive is divine. What I have to ask for is mercy and not justice. I ask therefore for a merciful consideration of my case for myself, my precious wife and four helpless children now crushed with most poignant anguish. The pressure of the times and my situation here reduces us all to utter helplessness and want. If then it is consistent with justice and mercy to spare my family and restore me to the precious ones do favor us with this unspeakable blessing. Whatever reparation I can make I will faithfully do and in after life I will endeavor to evince that your favor and mercy were not unmerited, and I will for the future earnestly do my duty to the Government, the Constitution and the laws. Owing to the depressed state of business affairs and through excited feelings and mistaken views I did at one time since the war troubles began contemplate a return South, but reflection satisfied me that I now owed my allegiance to this section and ought to remain here. Indeed for the last few months I have been so much troubled in regard to various matters that I have hardly comprehended what to say or do, and no doubt have done a great deal that I ought not to have done and utterly neglected important matters that really claimed my attention. My painful and terrible situation and the deep anguish that rends the hearts of my precious household render it the solemn, bounden duty of my existence to appeal to you for mercy.

Hoping for a favorable response, and promising faithfully to observe all that you require at my hands for my further fidelity, I remain, yours, truly,

B. F. GROVE.

FORT LAFAYETTE, September 16, 1861.

Hon. JOSEPH S. WILSON,
General Land Office, Washington City.

MY DEAR SIR: I once more take the liberty of writing to you. A short time since I inclosed to your address a communication which I asked you to do me the favor to hand to the Hon. William H. Seward, Secretary of State. In connection with my application or appeal to the Secretary of State I now inclose a letter* from my wife. I suppose it was written on the 13th instant. It is from a truthful and affectionate wife and mother. My wife has been in delicate health for a long time but now she is prostrated and suffering the most poignant distress. Our four children are young and helpless and all of us reduced to want. I am restrained of my liberty and unable to minister to my precious household. For myself and family I have therefore appealed to the Secretary of State for a merciful consideration of my case. Whatever reparation or atonement I can make for errors of head or heart against the laws of my country or for offenses of omission or commission against the constituted authorities it is the solemn, bounden duty of my existence to accomplish. If I were alone in the world I could abide my time and without complaining endure such punishment as the public good requires, but the appeal from my devoted wife and precious little ones is heartrending in the extreme, and they at least stand in innocence and through trials and privations unnumbered and innumerable and in tones of the deepest anguish plead for a merciful consideration of my case at the hands of the Secretary of State. My poor heart is too much troubled on my own account as well as on the account of my stricken and distressed family to write even what I desire to say. My heart is too full of painful and anxious cares to speak itself. Should the Secretary of State find it consistent with the public good and the administration of justice to give my case a favorable response I will earnestly endeavor for the future to discharge faithfully all the duties devolving upon me as a good and loyal citizen, and will strive to evince that mercy in my case was not altogether unmerited. I have not asked the privilege of writing to you in regard to this matter but may I not hope that you will do me the great favor I ask?

Regretting from my heart to be compelled to trouble you, and hoping you will find it consistent to serve me, I remain, yours, respectfully,
 BENJAMIN F. GROVE.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 21, 1861.

Very truly, yours,

Hon. W. H. SEWARD.

BURLINGTON, [N. J.,] October 3, 1861.

MY DEAR SIR: Permit me to call your attention to the case of Mr. Grove now confined at Fort Lafayette. During my confinement there I had ample opportunity to learn the character of the man and I can assure you he has neither the intellect nor the influence to harm the Government even if so disposed. He has a wife and four children dependent upon his daily exertions for their support and they are at this moment in most indigent circumstances. His wife is in very delicate health and the misfortune that has now fallen upon her has aggravated her disease to such a degree that she cannot last long. For the sake of a common humanity, by the mercy that you hope for from the Great Searcher of Hearts in the final day of accounts, do give immediate attention to this poor man's case. If he has been imprudent, and that is the extent of his offenses as far as I can learn, he has suffered enough. By a word you can open his prison doors and let him go free and the blessings of those who are ready to perish will reward you.

* Omitted.

Yours, respectfully,

JAMES W. WALL.

SIR: Let B. F. Grove, a prisoner held in custody in Fort Lafayette, be discharged on taking the oath of allegiance stipulating that he will do no act hostile or injurious to the Government of the United States; that he will not hold any correspondence or communication whatever with anybody in the seceded States during the present insurrection without permission of the Secretary of State.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 4, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: I feel constrained to make this communication and I entertain a good hope that justice and the public safety will admit of a favorable response. More than a month has elapsed since I was conveyed to this fortress. I was taken from my usual calling and my family left in destitute circumstances in a strange city and among strangers. My wife had been in delicate health for some time past and now in consequence of the sudden and severe trials and privations pressing upon her mind and heart so heavily she is completely prostrated and for most of the time is confined to her bed and without assistance, except the relief occasionally afforded by kind-hearted neighbors. I think I can say for her that she is one of the best women that ever was made and that her life is one of innocency. Tenderly devoted to her family she deserves all the kindness and lenity that can be manifested toward her and her household. We have four small children utterly helpless and entirely dependent upon their mother and she in the painful situation I have represented, and even if my wife had the physical strength for needlework or something of the kind she could not now get anything to do. I have not got a dollar in money to depend upon or to relieve the present wants of my family. The approaching winter must necessarily bring greatly increased privations and disasters to myself and my precious ones. I am restrained of my liberty and of course cannot render my family the least aid in any way. I can only comprehend their alarm and distress but cannot alleviate their painful circumstances. Just now it is a difficult matter to earn a support in any branch of business but untiring industry can always accomplish something, and to be in a position to take advantage of the first return of commercial prosperity is of the greatest importance to any young tradesman.

Earnestly appealing for a merciful consideration of my case I beg to be informed whether there is anything in my power that I can do to obtain my release and once more join my family. If it has been my misfortune or fault, or both, to do any public or private wrong or private injury to those in authority I can but regret it and am truly sorry for it and I beg to be forgiven. For any errors of omission or commission as a good citizen I am willing to make any atonement in my power. All that justice and the public good requires I am willing to do to enable me to join my family and once more give them the care and protection it is the solemn, bounden duty of my existence to afford. I ask therefore for a lenient and merciful consideration of my case on my own account and also and more especially on account of my stricken and suffering household. All that justice and the public safety can command and the National Administration approve I am willing to do as far as in my power lies, and for my fidelity to any engagement you may deem proper I can give satisfactory assurances or bonds to almost any amount.

Hoping for a favorable response, respectfully,
BENJAMIN FRANKLIN GROVE.

Case of Robert Mure.

Robert Mure, of Charleston, S. C., a naturalized citizen of Scottish birth, was arrested in New York on the 14th day of August, 1861, by order of the State Department transmitted to the superintendent of police the preceding day. This order was issued upon information communicated to the Department in substantially the following form:

Robert Mure, an Englishman by birth but resident of Charleston, S. C., for the last thirty years, is to take the steamer at New York Wednesday for Europe. He has highly important dispatches from Confederate Congress very carefully concealed. Intercept dispatches and the Confederates will be in your power.

* Not found.

Mure was found to have letters of appointment and instructions as bearer of dispatches from the British consul at Charleston to the British secretary of state for foreign affairs; also a canvas bag alluded to in his instructions as containing his dispatches sealed with a consular seal. He had also a large number of letters to a great number of parties in Europe. No dispatches from the Confederate Congress nor other papers or documents except those mentioned above were found in his possession. Allegations were made that Mure was a colonel in the militia of South Carolina and served in that capacity at the attack on Fort Sumter. On the 17th day of October, 1861, Mure was released on giving his parole not to enter any of the insurrectionary States nor hold any correspondence with persons residing therein, nor do any act of hostility or injury to the United States during the insurrection.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

OFFICE OF THE SUPT. OF METROPOLITAN POLICE,
New York, June 20, 1861.

Hon. W. H. SEWARD.

SIR: * * * In connection with this matter I may as well mention that the British consul at Charleston, Mr. Bunch, is a notorious secessionist, and that he has used his position in every way he could since the troubles began in aiding the secession movement. To say nothing of furnishing Trappman, a native of the United States, with a passport and making him bearer of dispatches for Lord Lyons I have several other cases where he has furnished passports to citizens of the United States. I think I can procure one of the passports given to a young man who is now here and I learn is about to be an officer in Sickles' brigade. He had been in the secession service before Fort Sumter.

What I was about to refer to was the use he has made of his office for facilitating the transmission of treasonable correspondence between Charleston and other places. A Belgian by the name of Du Clos, formerly a merchant here—one of the most outspoken of Southern sympathizers—for several weeks before he left for Europe, as is supposed on the business of the Confederate States of America, was in the habit of receiving letters from Charleston at the office of Mr. Archibald, the British consul, which were inclosed under the consulate seal of Mr. Bunch, the consul, in one of which he said he received $500 and on which he entered on his travels. On inquiring at Mr. Archibald's office into this practice the vice-consul avowed that up to the stoppage of the mails South they were in the constant receipt of packages of letters from Mr. Bunch for strange persons of whom they had no knowledge which they delivered to whoever asked for them, the office of the consul being thus made a convenience for all operations with Confederates here that the ordinary securities of the mail were regarded too insecure to furnish.

I mention this now in view of the connection Mr. Bunch's name has with Trappman, but not with the thought of involving Mr. Archibald who was used as the convenient instrument of others. I may be able to procure for you a photograph of Captain Trappman in full uniform in a few days

Very truly, yours,

Superintendent.

OFFICE SUPERINTENDENT OF POLICE,
*New York, August 14, 1861.*Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Your telegram of 13th was received last night, and this morning a short time before the departure of the steamer Africa Mr. Robert Mure, of Charleston, to whom you referred went on board with his baggage, whereupon the officers to whom I had intrusted the business took him in custody and brought him and his baggage to my office. He immediately presented me with his credentials as bearer of dispatches from Mr. Robert Bunch, consul of Her Britannic Majesty at Charleston, S. C., and an open letter of instructions from Mr. Bunch dated Charleston, August 7, 1861, the originals of both of which are herewith inclosed. On examining his baggage the canvas bag alluded to in the instructions addressed to "Lord John Russell" was found and apparently sealed with a genuine consular seal. No other papers or documents were found in his possession except a large number of what appears to be private letters from persons in the South to others in England, but which I have not yet had an opportunity to examine carefully. A portion of these letters are unsealed and the rest are sealed, by which I believe he renders himself subject to treatment under the postal laws.

The bag addressed to "Lord John Russell" I intrust to the charge of Detective Robert King to deliver with this note to you in Washington, pursuant to the instructions received in your telegram of to-day. On counting the letters I find there are four unsealed and sixty-six sealed. Several of them are bulky and appear to contain a number in each of the envelopes. I respectfully request instructions from you as to the manner in which I shall dispose of these letters.

Very truly, yours, &c.,

Superintendent.

I inclose one of several pamphlets* found among his things which appears to have been printed for foreign circulation.

We therefore request that he may be permitted to pass freely and that he may receive all proper protection and assistance in virtue of his employment by us.

BRITISH CONSULATE, Charleston, August 7, 1861.

ROBERT MURE, Esq., Bearer of Dispatches.

SIR: You will receive herewith a bag of dispatches addressed to Lord John Russell, Her Majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs, which I beg you to convey with all convenient speed to Liverpool. Should you upon reaching that port not proceed immediately to London you will be so good as to deliver the bag to Her Majesty's postmaster at Liverpool with the request that he will forward it at once to the foreign office. I beg to impress upon you that these dispatches are of the greatest importance and I would suggest that you should keep them by you as much as possible, not allowing them to go into your luggage. In the improbable event of your being detained on your road to New York by any authority of the United States I have no objection to the bag being delivered to an officer of rank upon his giving a receipt for it and promising to have it delivered to Her Majesty's minister at Washington. But I can scarcely suppose the possibility of your detention. Should you unfortunately be detained in New York by illness or otherwise the bag may be delivered to Her Majesty's consul with the request that he will forward it. But I prefer that it should go with you.

Wishing you a safe and pleasant journey, I am, sir, your faithful servant,

ROBERT BUNCH.

OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT OF POLICE,
New York, August 15, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: This morning I conveyed Robert Mure to Fort Hamilton and delivered him into the custody of Lieut. Col. Martin Burke, who immediately transferred him to Fort Lafayette.

On my return to town I found among my letters an anonymous one which is represented to be from an intimate acquaintance of Mure. He says Mure is a Scotchman, not an Englishman; that his relatives reside in the vicinity of Kirkcudbright, Scotland; that he has resided in Charleston about thirty years; that before the breaking out of this rebellion he held a commission in a Charleston militia company; that during the last spring he was acting as a field officer of a Charleston regiment; that he was in such service during the attack on Fort Sumter and that he is a citizen of the United States, having been naturalized many years ago. But he declines to make himself known on account of previous intimacy.

From my conversation with Mure I had concluded he was a Scotchman who had resided a long time in this country. He professed to have been perfectly neutral on the rebellion question; that he deplored the existence of war of such a kind; that it had ruined his business of cotton merchant; that he was in the habit of visiting Europe annually and always took with him the dispatch bag of the British consul as an accommodation for himself; that as soon as it became known that he was about to leave for Europe letters were left at his house by everybody; that he intended putting them in the New York post-office on arrival here but was prevented by want of time; that he don't know who any letter in particular is from and supposes they are all on private affairs, as the disarrangement of the mails has nearly destroyed private correspondence between persons in the South and those in Europe, &c. I have examined the letters found on him and none but one addressed to William H. Trappman are apparently for any known secessionist abroad.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN A. KENNEDY,
Superintendent.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, August 16, 1861.

JOHN A. KENNEDY, Esq.,
Superintendent of Police, New York.

SIR: The bearer, Mr. Robert King, has delivered to me a letter addressed to Mure and inclosed in an envelope directed to me; also a bag addressed to Lord John Russell and a pamphlet, thus fully executing the trust reposed in him. You will please send me all other papers and documents found in the prisoner's possession, allowing him to retain none, and thus enable me to understand and properly decide upon the case.

Very truly, yours,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

BROOKLYN, August 16, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: I take the liberty of introducing Mr. Stanton Blake, banker, who visits Washington for an interview with you on behalf of the friends of Mr. Robert Mure, of Charleston, recently arrested and now confined in Fort Lafayette.

I am not acquainted with Mr. Blake but give the letter on application of Messrs. James and Samuel McLean, members of two extensive and respectable mercantile firms of New York with whom I have been long and intimately acquainted and in whom I have the most entire confidence. They are originally from the same town in Scotland, and their boyhood intimacy with Mr. Mure has been kept up by correspondence and visiting in this country for the past twenty years.

They spent the whole of the evening prior to his arrest in unreserved conversation with Mr. Mure in the public room of the Brevoort Hotel and are fully persuaded that his intended visit to England was on his own private business, and that he is entirely innocent of the charge on which he is alleged to be held, viz, bearing dispatches from the Confederate Government, and is guiltless of any connection with such so-called Government or any of its members.

I am, sir, yours, truly,

EDWARD W. FISKE.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, August 17, 1861.

ALEXANDER H. SCHULTZ, Esq., New York.

SIR: With the dispatches herewith intrusted to you you will proceed to London by the Cunard steamer which will start from Boston on Wednesday next. On arriving at London you will deliver the dispatches for Mr. Adams to him and as soon as convenient you will proceed to Paris and deliver to Mr. Dayton those addressed to him also. You will remain in Paris for any dispatches which Mr. Dayton may have to send by you and you will return by the way of London for any which Mr. Adams may have. You will exercise all practicable diligence in the discharge of this duty for which you will be allowed a compensation at the rate of $6 a day and your necessary traveling expenses of which you will keep an account, to be supported by vouchers in every instance where they can be obtained. The sum of $400 is now advanced to you on account of your expenses.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, August 17, 1861.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, Esq., &c.

SIR: Alexander Schultz, a special messenger, will deliver to you this dispatch together with a bag containing papers addressed to Lord John Russell.

On the 13th instant I was advised by a telegram from Cincinnati that Robert Mure, of Charleston, was on his way to New York to embark at that port for England and that he was a bearer of dispatches from the usurping insurrectionary authorities at Richmond to Earl Russell. Other information bore that he was a bearer of dispatches from the same authorities to their agents in London. Information from various sources agreed in the fact that he was traveling under a passport from the British consul at Charleston.

Upon this information I directed the police at New York by telegraph to detain Mr. Mure and any papers which might be found in his possession until I should give further directions. He was so detained and he is now in custody at Fort Lafayette awaiting full disclosures. In his possession were found seventy letters, four of which were unsealed and sixty-six sealed. There was also found in his possession a sealed bag marked "Foreign office 3," with two labels as follows:

On Her Brit. Maj.'s service.—The Right Honorable the Lord John Russell, M. P., &c. Dispatches in charge of Robert Mure, esq.

ROBERT BUNCH.

On Her Brit. Maj.'s service.—The Right Honorable the Lord John Russell, M. P., H. B. M.'s principal secretary of state for foreign affairs, foreign office, London.

R. BUNCH.

The bag bears two impressions of the seal of office of the British consul at Charleston and seems to contain voluminous papers.

There were also found upon Mr. Mure's person in an open envelope what pretends to be a passport in the following words.* Also a letter of instructions which is as follows.*

There were also found several unsealed copies of a printed pamphlet entitled, "A narrative of the battles of Bull Run and Manassas Junction, July 18 and 21, accounts of the advance of both armies, the battles and rout of the enemy, compiled chiefly from the detailed reports of the Virginia and South Carolina press, Charleston steam-power press of Evans & Cogswell, Nos. 3 Broad and 103 East Bay streets, 1861."

This pamphlet is manifestly an argument for the disunion of the United States. Several copies of it were found in envelopes addressed to persons in England.

The marks and outward appearance of the bag indicate that its contents are exclusively legitimate communications from the British consul at Charleston to Her Britannic Majesty's Government. Nevertheless I have what seems to me good reasons for supposing that they may be treasonable papers designed and gotten up to aid parties engaged in arms for the overthrow of this Government and the dissolution of the Union. These reasons are:

First. That I can hardly conceive that there can be any occasion for such very voluminous communications of a legitimate nature being made by the consul at Charleston to his Government at the present time. This circumstance, however, is admitted to be very inconclusive.

Second. Consuls have no authority to issue passports, the granting of them being as I understand not a consular but a diplomatic function. Passports, however, have in other times been habitually granted by foreign consuls residing in the United States. But soon after the insurrection broke out in the Southern States a regulation was made by this Department which I have excellent means of knowing was communicated to the British consul at Charleston to the effect that until further orders no diplomatic or consular passport would be recognized by this Government so far as to permit the bearer to pass through the lines of the national forces or out of the country unless it should be countersigned by the Secretary of State and the commanding general of the Army of the United States. Mr. Mure had passed the lines of the army and was in the act of leaving the United States in open violation of this regulation. Moreover the bearer of the papers, Robert Mure, is a naturalized citizen of the United States, has resided here thirty years and is a colonel in the insurgent military forces in South Carolina.

Third. If the papers contained in the bag are not illegal in their nature or purpose it is not seen why their safe transmission was not secured as it might have been by exposing them in some way to Lord

* Omitted here; see ante.

Lyons, the British minister residing at this capital, whose voucher for their propriety would as Mr. Bunch must well know exempt them from all scrutiny or suspicion.

Fourth. The consul's letter to the bearer of dispatches attaches unusual importance to the papers in question while it expresses great impatience for their immediate conveyance to their destination and an undue anxiety lest they might by some accident come under the notice of this Government.

Fifth. The bearer is proved to be disloyal to the United States by the pamphlet and the letters found in his possession. I have examined many of the letters found upon the person of Mr. Mure and I find them full of treasonable information and clearly written for treasonable purposes.

These I think will be deemed sufficient grounds for desiring the scrutiny of the papers and surveillance of the bearer on my part.

Comity toward the British Government together with a perfect confidence in its justice and honor as well as its friendship toward the United States, to say nothing of a sense of propriety which I could not dismiss, have prevented me from entertaining for a moment the idea of breaking the seals which I have so much reason to believe were put upon the consular bag to save it from my inspection while the bearer himself might remove them on his arrival in London after which he might convey the papers if treasonable to the agents of the insurgents now understood to be residing in several of the capitals in Europe.

I will not say that I have established the fact that the papers in question are treasonable in their nature and are made with purposes hostile and dangerous to this country, but I confess that I fear they are so, and I apprehend either that they are guilty dispatches to the agents of disunion or else that if they are really addressed to the British Government they are papers prepared by traitors in the insurrectionary States with a view to apply to the British Government for some advantage and assistance or countenance from that Government injurious to the United States and subversive of their sovereignty. Of course I need hardly say that I disclaim any thought that Earl Russell has any knowledge of the papers or of their being sent, or that I have any belief or fear that the British Government would in any way receive the papers if they are illegal in their character or dangerous or injurious to the United States. It is important, however, to this Government that whatever mischief if any may be lurking in the transaction be counteracted and prevented.

I have therefore upon due consideration of the case concluded to send the bag by a special messenger who will deliver it into your care and to instruct you to see that it is delivered according to its address exactly in the condition in which you receive it.

You will also make known to the Earl Russell the causes and circumstances of the arrest and detention of Mr. Mure and his papers, adding the assurance that this Government deeply regrets that it has become necessary and that it will be very desirous to excuse the brief interruption of the correspondence of the British consul if it is indeed innocent, and will endeavor in that case to render any further satisfaction which may be justly required.

On the other hand you will in such terms as you shall find most suitable and proper intimate that if the papers in question shall prove to be treasonable against the United States I expect that they will be delivered up to you for the use of this Government, and that Her

Britannic Majesty's consul at Charleston will in that case be promptly made to feel the severe displeasure of the Government which employs him, since there can be no greater crime against society than a perversion by the agent of one Government of the hospitality afforded to him by another to design against its safety, dignity and honor.

I think it proper to say that I have apprised Lord Lyons of this transaction and of the general character of this letter, while he is not in any way compromised by any assent given to my proceedings or by any opinions expressed by him or asked from him.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, August 17, 1861.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, &c.

SIR: Among the letters found on the person of Robert Mure mentioned in my dispatch of this date there are many which more or less directly implicate Mr. Robert Bunch, the British consul at Charleston, as a conspirator against the Government of the United States. The following is an extract from one of them:

Mr. Bunch on oath of secrecy communicated to me also that the first step to recognition was taken. He and Mr. Belligny together sent Mr. Trescot to Richmond yesterday to ask Jeff. Davis, President, to ——— the treaty of ——— to ——— the neutral flag covering neutral goods to be respected. This is the first step of direct treating with our Government. So prepare for active business by January 1.

You will submit this information to the British Government and request that Mr. Bunch may be removed from his office, saying that this Government will grant an exequatur to any person who may be appointed to fill it who will not pervert his functions to hostilities against the United States.

I am, sir, respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, September 3, 1861.

Right Hon. Earl RUSSELL, &c.

MY LORD: I have the honor to inform your lordship that I have received by the hands of a special messenger of the Government just arrived in the steamer Europe from the United States a sealed bag marked "Foreign office 3," with two labels as follows:

On Her Brit. Maj.'s service.—The Right Honorable the Lord John Russell, M. P., &c. Dispatches in charge of Robert Mure, esq.

ROBERT BUNCH.

On Her Brit. Maj.'s service.—The Right Honorable the Lord John Russell, M. P., H. B. M.'s principal secretary of state for foreign affairs, foreign office, London.

R. BUNCH.

Agreeably to instructions communicated by my Government to me to see that this bag is delivered according to its address in exactly the condition in which I received it, I have the honor to transmit the same by the hands of my assistant secretary, Mr. Benjamin Moran, who is directed to deliver it into your own hands if present, or if absent into those of one of the undersecretaries of state for foreign affairs.

It now becomes my duty to explain the circumstances under which this bag has found its way from the possession of the person to whom it was originally intrusted into that of the authorities of the United States. It appears that the Secretary of State of the United States on the 15th of August last received information deemed worthy of confidence that Mr. Robert Mure, the bearer of this bag, was at the same time acting as a bearer of dispatches from the insurrectionary authorities of Richmond to your lordship. Other information came that he was a bearer of dispatches from the same authorities to their agents in London, and still other information from various sources agreed in affirming that he was traveling under a passport issued by Her Majesty's consul at Charleston. Upon this information instructions were sent forthwith to the police of New York to detain Mr. Mure and any papers which might be found in his possession. He was accordingly detained and is now in custody at Fort Lafayette awaiting full disclosure. A large number of papers were found upon him, an examination of which was found fully to sustain some portions of the information which had been furnished, and to prove that Mr. Mure was acting as the bearer of a treasonable correspondence between persons acting in open arms against the Government of the United States and their friends and emissaries in Great Britain. He had also with him several copies of a printed pamphlet purporting to be a narrative of the events of the 21st of July at Manassas Junction addressed to persons in England and evidently intended to further the purpose of the conspirators in South Carolina. Robert Mure, the bearer of these papers, is represented to be a naturalized citizen of the United States where he has resided for thirty years and as actually holding a commission of colonel in the insurgent forces of South Carolina.

It turned out to be true that in the hands of this gentleman were found in an open envelope a paper purporting to be a passport, a copy of which I have the honor to append to this note,* and a letter of instructions signed by Robert Bunch, Her Majesty's consul for the United States residing at Charleston, a copy of which is likewise appended.* In the absence of all other evidence against Mr. Bunch to prove his departure from the line of his legitimate duty it is quite enough to call the attention of your lordship to the fact that in issuing such a paper as this passport he has acted in direct contravention of a regulation issued by the proper Department of the United States, of which he had received notice, which forbids all recognition of any diplomatic or consular passport so far as to permit the bearer to pass through the lines of the national forces or out of the country unless it should be countersigned by the Secretary of State and the commanding general of the Army of the United States. Mr. Mure attempted to do both with a paper bearing no such signatures.

There is, however, other and still more serious cause of complaint against Mr. Bunch as disclosed by the papers of Mr. Mure, the exposition of which I am compelled to reserve for a separate communication. The present purpose is confined to an explanation of the reasons which have actuated the Government of the United States in taking the extraordinary step which has had for one of its consequences the effect of diverting, be it but for a moment, a part of the official correspondence of Her Majesty's Government from the channel in which it was originally placed. I am directed to express the regret the Government feels that such a measure had become imperative, and to assure your lordship of its earnest desire to make any suitable amends which may justly be required. If in the process there may have happened a slight interruption of the correspondence of the British consul it is their desire that the pressing nature of the emergency may induce your lordship to excuse it.

It is needless to say that the bag passes into the hands of your lordship in precisely the same condition in which it came from those of Mr. Mure. Comity toward the Government of a friendly nation together with a full confidence in its justice and honor to say nothing of a sense of propriety would deter the Government which I have the honor to represent from entertaining the idea of breaking the seals which protect it even were there ten times more reason than there is to presume an intention under so sacred a sanction to perpetrate a wrong certainly on one and perhaps on both Governments.

Still less is it the intention of the American Government to intimate the smallest suspicion of any privy whatever on the part of the authorities in Great Britain in aiding, assisting or countenancing a supposed design injurious to the United States and subversive of their sovereignty. Much ground as there is for presuming that it never was the intention of those who prepared the package to forward it to its nominal address but that it was rather the design after bringing bad matter under this sacred sanction safely through the dangers of hostile scrutiny to open the bag themselves and to disseminate the contents far and wide among the evil-disposed emissaries to be found scattered all over Europe, this consideration has never weighed a single moment to change their views of this trust when put in the balance with the strong reliance placed upon the good faith of Her Majesty's constitutional advisers. Least of all has it been in the thought of any one that your lordship would consent in any way to receive the papers if they are really illegal in their character or dangerous or injurious to the United States.

Should it, however, prove on inspection that any abuse has been attempted in America of the confidence to which Her Majesty's Government is in every way entitled I am directed to express to your lordship the hope that any papers of a treasonable character against the United States may be delivered up to me for the use of my Government and that Her Majesty's consul at Charleston if shown to be privy to the transmission of them under such a form may be made promptly to feel the severe displeasure of the Government whose good faith he has sought to dishonor; for there can be no difference of opinion as to the nature of an offense which involves the perversion by the agent of one Government of the hospitality afforded to him by another to conspire against its safety, dignity and honor.

I pray your lordship to accept the assurance of the highest consideration with which I have the honor to be your lordship's most obedient servant,

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, September 3, 1861.

Right Hon. Earl RUSSELL, &c.

MY LORD: The undersigned, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States, deeply regrets the painful necessity that compels him to make a representation to the Right Hon. Lord Russell, Her Majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs, touching the conduct of Mr. Robert Bunch, Her Majesty's consul for the port of Charleston in the United States. It appears from the contents of one of the many letters found in the possession of Mr. Robert Mure, bearer of dispatches from Mr. Bunch to the Government of Great Britain but detained as an agent of the enemies of the United States, that the following statement is made of the action of Mr. Bunch in Charleston:

Mr. B. on oath of secrecy communicated to me also that the first step to recognition was taken. He and Mr. Belligny together sent Mr. Trescot to Richmond yesterday to ask Jeff. Davis, President, to ——— the treaty of ——— to ——— the neutral flag covering neutral goods to be respected. This is the first step of direct treating with our Government. So prepare for active business by 1st of January.

The undersigned is instructed to submit this information to Her Majesty's Government with a request that if it be found to be correct Mr. Bunch may be at once removed from his office. The undersigned is further instructed to add that the President will cheerfully accord an exequatur to any person who may be appointed to succeed him who will faithfully perform his functions without injury to the rights and the interests of the United States.

The undersigned avails himself of this occasion to renew to Lord Russell the assurances of his highest consideration.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, September 9, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the reception at the hands of your messenger, Captain Schultz, of a bag purporting to contain public dispatches from Mr. Robert Bunch, the consul at Charleston, to Lord Russell, the head of the foreign office in London.

In conformity with the instructions contained in your No. 63 dated the 17th of August I immediately addressed a note to Lord Russell explanatory of the reasons why such a bag was received through this channel, a copy of which is herewith transmitted. In it you will perceive that I have endeavored to adhere as closely as possible to the language of your communication to me. At the same time in obedience to the directions contained in your No. 64, dated the 17th of August, I addressed another note to his lordship stating the grounds of dissatisfaction felt by the President with the conduct of Mr. Bunch and requesting his removal. A copy of this note is likewise appended to the present dispatch. These two notes together with the bag in exactly the same condition in which I received it from Captain Schultz I directed my assistant secretary, Mr. Benjamin Moran, to take with him to the foreign office and there to deliver into the hands of his lordship if present, or if absent from town into those of one of Her Majesty's under secretaries of state for foreign affairs.

Accordingly on the afternoon of Tuesday the 4th instant at about quarter past 3 o'clock, as Mr. Moran reports to me, he went to the foreign office and finding Lord Russell to be absent from town he delivered the bag and the notes into the hands of Mr. Layard, one of the undersecretaries. Since that time I have had no reply from his lordship although I received on Saturday last two notes from him on matters of minor consequence. I had hoped to send something by Captain Schultz who returns in the Great Eastern and I shall yet do so if it should come before the bag closes. I have consented to the departure of Captain Schultz mainly because Mr. Dayton has expressed a great desire that he should take charge of his dispatches as soon as possible.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, September 14, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I now have the honor to transmit copies of two notes received yesterday from Lord Russell in answer to my notes of the 3d of September transmitting to him the bag of Mr. Bunch.

It appears from one of them that Mr. Bunch has been acting under secret instructions which are only now acknowledged because they have come to light, and that his granting a safe conduct to an emissary of secession charged with treasonable papers is no objection to his neutral character in the eyes of his employers.

With regard to the question presented in the other note it is satisfactory to me at least in so far as it devolves all responsibility for the further treatment of the question into more capable hands. I transmit also a copy of my reply.

I shall not dwell further on the difficulties this question may occasion but proceed rather to another subject not altogether foreign from it which will not fail to require speedy attention.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

FOREIGN OFFICE, September 9, 1861.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, Esq., &c.

SIR: I received with some surprise from Lord Lyons an intimation that a sealed bag directed by one of Her Majesty's consuls to Her Majesty's secretary of state had been seized and detained by order of the Secretary of State of the United States. It seems to have been suspected that Her Majesty's consul had inserted in his official bag and covered with his official seal the correspondence of the enemies of the Government of the United States now engaged in open hostilities against them.

Had Her Majesty's consul so acted he would have no doubt been guilty of a grave breach of his duty both toward his own Government and that of the United States. But I am happy to say there does not appear on opening the bag at the foreign office to be any ground for such a suspicion.

Her Majesty's Government were advised that the suspension of the conveyance by post of letters from British subjects between the Northern and the Southern States was a contravention of the treaty on this subject contracted by the two Governments. Her Majesty's Government have been unwilling to press this view on the United States. But this stoppage of the post has occasioned great inconvenience to individuals and I inclose a copy of a note from Mr. Bunch to the undersecretary of foreign affairs showing the mode in which he has endeavored to palliate the evil by inclosing private letters in his consular bag.

I shall address any further communication I may have to make on this subject to Lord Lyons.

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

RUSSELL.

[Sub-inclosure.]

CHARLESTON, August 5, 1861.

HER MAJESTY'S UNDERSECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS:

Mr. Bunch presents his compliments to Her Majesty's undersecretary of state for foreign affairs and takes leave to inclose to him herewith certain letters which are intended for the post.

They are principally letters of servants, governesses, &c. (British subjects), which owing to the discontinuance of the post they are unable to send in any other way. Some also contain dividends, the property of British subjects, which they could scarcely receive without Mr. Bunch's intervention.

Mr. Bunch hopes that there is no irregularity in this proceeding. No expense of postage is incurred by the foreign office as the bag in which the letters are contained goes by a private hand to Liverpool.

[Inclosure No. 2.]

FOREIGN OFFICE, September 9, 1861.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, &c.

SIR: The undersigned, Her Majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs, has received a communication from Mr. Adams, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States at this court, dated the 3d instant giving some information regarding the conduct of Mr. Bunch, Her Majesty's consul at Charleston in the United States, and requesting on the part of the Government of the United States that Mr. Bunch may at once be removed from his office.

The undersigned will without hesitation state to Mr. Adams that in pursuance of an agreement between the British and French Governments Mr. Bunch was instructed to communicate to the persons exercising authority in the so-called Confederate States the desire of those Governments that the second, third and fourth articles of the declaration of Paris should be observed by those States in the prosecution of the hostilities in which they were engaged. Mr. Adams will observe that the commerce of Great Britain and France is deeply interested in the maintenance of the articles providing that the flag covers the goods and that the goods of a neutral taken on board a belligerent ship are not liable to condemnation. Mr. Bunch therefore in what he has done in this matter has acted in obedience to the instructions of his Government who accept the responsibility of his proceedings so far as they are known to the foreign department and who cannot remove him from his office for having obeyed his instructions.

But when it is stated in a letter from some person not named that the first step to the recognition of the Southern States by Great Britain has been taken the undersigned begs to decline all responsibility for such statement. Her Majesty's Government have already recognized the belligerent character of the Southern States and they will continue to consider them as belligerents. But Her Majesty's Government have not recognized and are not prepared to recognize the so-called Confederate States as a separate and independent State.

The undersigned requests Mr. Adams to accept the assurance of his highest consideration.

RUSSELL.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,

Right Hon. Earl RUSSELL, &c.

MY LORD: The undersigned envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States has the honor to acknowledge the reception this day of two notes from the Right Hon. Earl Russell, Her Majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs, both dated the 9th of September and both in reply to notes addressed to his lordship by the undersigned on the 3d instant touching the case of Mr. Bunch, Her Majesty's consul at Charleston, and the mode of transmission of his dispatches. The undersigned has the honor to inform his lordship that copies of these notes will be transmitted by the next steamer for the consideration of the Government of the United States.

The undersigned requests Earl Russell to accept the assurance of his highest consideration.

Hon. F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: Mr. Mott, who was associated with us for Mr. Mure, of Charleston, now in Fort Lafayette, having left for Saint Louis the further care of the matter has devolved upon us. May we ask the favor of you to inform us by letter as soon as the Department is in receipt of the expected information bearing upon the case that we may apply for a personal interview with the Secretary of State, and oblige,

Yours, very truly,

FOSTER & THOMSON.

WASHINGTON, September 28, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: Mr. Robert Mure, of Charleston, S. C., now confined in Fort Lafayette expresses his ignorance of the contents of the letters in his possession when he was arrested and states himself to be innocent of any complicity with treason to the United States Government. In his behalf I would respectfully request an opportunity for him to give his deposition under oath upon the subject, to be added to such other evidence as may be obtained bearing upon his case, to be made the basis of an application to your Department for his release from imprisonment. To obtain the deposition of Mr. Mure I would respectfully ask either that a pass may be given to myself accompanied by some person competent to administer an oath or that some Government officer or other person may be appointed by the Department to examine Mr. Mure and reduce his deposition to writing.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES THOMSON,
69 Wall Street, New York.

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 2, 1861.

MY DEAR SIR: The receipt of your note of 27th ultimo conveying a letter from Mr. Middleton was truly cheering and most gratefully appreciated by me. Poor fellow, he knows how innocent I am of any treason. I am glad you read his letter for it speaks for itself. Hearing Mr. Thomson has returned from Washington without reaching any satisfaction in my case is disappointing, but I have reconciled myself to whatever Mr. Seward has in store for me, satisfied of my own innocence and that the Government is acting oppressively and wrongfully with me. I inwardly feel this which nerves me to stand up against my present trials, hopeful that brighter and happier days will soon be restored to the country. I can never repay you for the untiring interest you have taken in my misfortune. I hope to see the end of all this and prove to you and others my innocence of the course the Government is pursuing with me.

They require me to take an oath before I can get out of here, without guaranteeing my personal security in South Carolina, or the safety of my property there. Now as matters stand I hope soon to have protection worth having for I intend to return to my own dear native land where I can secure myself by returning to my first allegiance, the home of my birth.

I have a letter from my son Robert. Poor lad, he is distressed about me but hopes I will soon be in Scotland. I observe the Liverpool cotton market is advancing. As I have no late letters, I do not know how my interest there stands but presume my friends have sold out some time ago which may be unfortunate, but I wait advices. When does your father return home? I suppose he is only on a business trip and may soon be home again. There have been 136 prisoners in this fort, but are now reduced to 106. We are too crowded for comfort, but I rejoice to say the most of the inmates are gentlemen and deserve another fate than mere confinement on suspicion. The President says no one is in here but on satisfactory evidence of treason. Alas, I feel this is not so, but we must all yield to the powers that be, be they for good or evil.

It is really wonderful my friends in Charleston could so well keep Mrs. Mure in ignorance of my arrest. I question if such a course is prudent. It in the end may be more severe upon her. I trust not, however. I have really nothing to write you from here.

Yours, faithfully,

ROBT. MURE.

P. S.—This must not be published.

FORT LAFAYETTE, October —, 1861.

MESSRS. FOSTER & THOMSON, New York.

GENTLEMEN: I wrote you a note on the 4th stating I had just then received your favor of 20th instant* setting forth the result of your (Mr. Thomson's) interview with Mr. Seward at Washington. The more I reflect on your letter the more I feel Mr. Bunch is too honorable to have complicated me in using his consular seal to cover treasonable matter to his Government. If the evidence of such be established then Mr. Bunch's exequatur should be promptly taken from him—in fact his Government should recall him and hold me harmless for his acts when I merely conveyed a sealed bag without the least knowledge of its contents. I insist that my deposition be taken and if you have not power to get this done other counsel be called to your aid and I would suggest the name of the Hon. Edwin M. Stanton at Washington (late Attorney-General). Mr. Seward takes such grounds as are not likely to be sustained if properly and boldly set before him.

Touching what is set forth as a passport it was simply an open letter. The application of a "British merchant" was not improperly applied, for with the exception of myself and one other house in Charleston there are none of British birth and in that way the name of a British merchant has often been applied to me in Charleston. My business is confined to England mainly, but I myself placed no weight on Mr. Bunch's letter beyond instructions how to act in case any Government agent or official required my authority for carrying the dispatches. I left Charleston as has been my custom for twenty years as an American citizen. I was arrested as a British subject and being such in one sense made no formal objection for proof of which but conferred with Mr. Archibald or his vice, Mr. Edwards, informing him upon all points as to my citizenship, &c.

As matters now stand I hold that Mr. Seward should give me every opportunity to establish my innocence by procuring such information from Charleston as to set at rest as to my knowledge of what was in the dispatch bag and that I traveled as an American citizen although bearing a letter from Mr. Bunch. I apprehend, however, such treatment to a loyal citizen will drive him hereafter to other and that to his mother allegiance. I had full assurance before leaving home I would have no difficulty in proceeding via New York to Liverpool, otherwise I never would have started although domestic matters in Scotland claimed my presence. Had I been acting in any way against the Government by taking up arms, &c., there might have been grounds for confining me here, but as I did nothing against the Government but carry a dispatch bag and a few friendly letters which the powers at Washington thought proper to break open and publish, I contend for the latter I am subject to no offense. The former is a matter that remains with Mr. Bunch.

* Not found.

It may now become a matter for the two Governments to settle. Meantime I may have to suffer my liberty and be otherwise subjected to dishonorable imputations, not to name what I am other ways losing in a domestic and pecuniary way from my long confinement, up to this time now nearly two months, which may be extended to an indefinite time. I urge you therefore to again write or see Mr. Seward and if need be employ the additional assistance of Edwin M. Stanton, who I know to have influence at Washington.

Very respectfully,

ROBT. MURE,
Of Charleston, S. C.

Let me hear from you soon either direct or through Mr. McGowan. The rules of this fort demand that no portion of this letter be published.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 15, 1861.
Lieut. Col. MARTIN BURKE, Fort Lafayette, N. Y.

SIR: Let Robert Mure, a prisoner confined at Fort Lafayette, be released on engaging upon his honor that he will neither enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State. And also that he will not do any act hostile or injurious to the United States during the present insurrection. I transmit this order to Robert Murray, esq., U. S. marshal, who has been instructed by this Department to cause a police examination to be made in some cases of the persons and baggage of prisoners discharged from custody to the end that no correspondence or other improper papers be conveyed by them to persons outside the fort.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

FORT HAMILTON, N. Y., October 17, 1861.

I, Robert Mure, do hereby engage on my honor not to enter any of the States in insurrection against the authority of the United States Government nor hold any correspondence whatever with persons residing in those States without permission from the Secretary of State; and also that I will do no act hostile or injurious to the United States during the present insurrection.

ROBT. MURE.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 23, 1861.
CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, Esq., &c.

SIR: I recur once more to your dispatch of September 14. On the 3d of that month you addressed a note to Earl Russell in which you informed him by my direction that from the contents of the many letters found in the possession of Mr. Robert Mure, bearer of dispatches to the Government of Great Britain but detained at New York as an agent of the enemies of the United States, the following statement is made of the action of Mr. Bunch in Charleston:

Mr. Bunch on oath of secrecy communicated to me also that the first step to recognition was taken; that he and Mr. Belligny together sent Mr. Trescot to Richmond yesterday to ask Jeff. Davis, President, to ——— the treaty of ——— to ——— the neutral flag covering neutral goods to be respected. This is the first step of direct treating with our Government. So prepare for active business by 1st of January.

You submitted this information to Her Majesty's Government with a request on the part of the President of the United States that if it should be found to be correct Mr. Bunch might be at once removed from his office. And you further added by my direction that the President would cheerfully accord an exequatur to any person who might be appointed to succeed Mr. Bunch who would faithfully perform his functions without injury to the rights and interests of the United States.

There is appended to your dispatch now before me the written answer of the Earl Russell to your note thus recited. His lordship answers that he will without hesitation state to Mr. Adams that in pursuance of an agreement between the British and French Governments Mr. Bunch was instructed to communicate to the persons exercising authority in the so-called Confederate States the desire of those Governments that the second, third and fourth articles of the declaration of Paris should be observed by those States in the prosecution of the hostilities in which they were engaged. His lordship then asked you to observe that the commerce of Great Britain and France is deeply interested in the maintenance of the articles providing that the flag covers the goods and that the goods of a neutral taken on board a belligerent ship are not liable to confiscation.

Earl Russell thereupon proceeds to say that Mr. Bunch in what he has done in this matter has acted in obedience to the instructions of his Government, who accepts the responsibility of his proceedings so far as they are known to the foreign department and who cannot therefore remove him from his office for having obeyed their instructions. But his lordship adds that when it is stated in a letter from some person not named that the first step to the recognition of the Southern States by Great Britain has been taken he (Earl Russell) begs to decline all responsibility for such statement, and he remarks on this branch of the subject that Her Majesty's Government have already recognized the belligerent character of the Southern States and they will continue to consider them as belligerents, but that Her Majesty's Government have not recognized and are not prepared to recognize the so-called Confederate States as a separate and independent State.

You are instructed to reply to this note of Her Majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs:

First. That Her Majesty's Government having avowed that Mr. Bunch acted under their instructions so far as his conduct is known to the foreign department, and that Government having avowed their responsibility for his proceedings in that extent, it is admitted that so far as that portion of the subject is concerned the matter is to be settled directly with Her Majesty's Government.

Second. That a law of the United States forbids any person not specially appointed or duly authorized or recognized by the President, whether citizen or denizen, privileged or unprivileged, from counseling, advising, aiding or assisting in any political correspondence with the Government of any foreign State whatever with an intent to influence the measures of any foreign Government or of any officer or agent thereof in relation to any disputes or controversies with the United States or to defeat the measures of the Government. The proceeding of Mr. Bunch was clearly and distinctly in violation of this positive law.

Third. This Government finds no sufficient justification or excuse for the proceeding of Mr. Bunch thus shown to be in violation of the law of the United States in the consideration that Great Britain was deeply interested in the maintenance of the articles which provide that the flag covers the goods and that the goods of a neutral taken on board a belligerent ship are not liable to confiscation.

It is enough to say on this subject that in our view the proper agents of the British Government to make known that interest here are the diplomatic not the consular agents of Her Majesty, and that the only authority in this country to which any diplomatic communication whatever can be made is the Government of the United States itself.

Still less can the United States admit that communication by Mr. Bunch while exercising consular privileges with which he was clothed by the consent of the United States with insurgents in arms against the Federal Government is justified by the declaration of the British ministry that they have already recognized the belligerent character of the insurgents and that they will continue to consider them as belligerents. It is indeed understood to be true that Her Majesty's Government have heretofore issued a royal proclamation which they interpret as declaring that they recognize the insurgents as a belligerent. But it is also true that this Government has with equal decision and with equal resolution announced to the British Government that any such declaration made by the British Government would not be accepted as modifying in the least degree the rights or powers of this Government or the obligations due to them by Great Britain as a friendly nation.

Still adhering to this position the Government of the United States will continue to pursue as it has heretofore done the counsels of prudence and will not suffer itself to be disturbed by excitement. It must revoke the exequatur of the consul, who has not only been the bearer of communications between the insurgents and a foreign Government in violation of our laws but has abused equally the confidence of the two Governments by reporting without the authority of his own Government and in violation of their own policy as well as of our national rights that the proceeding in which he was engaged was in the nature of a treaty with the insurgents and the first step toward a recognition by Great Britain of their sovereignty. Moreover the conduct of the person in question even while this correspondence has been going on as well as before it commenced has been that not of a friend to this Government or even of a neutral but of a partisan of faction and disunion.

In reviewing this subject it would be unjust to Her Majesty's minister residing here as well as to Her Majesty's Government to omit to say that that minister has in all his proceedings carefully respected the sovereignty and the rights of the United States, and that the arrangements which have been made by him with the approval of this Government for communication between the British Government and its consuls through the national vessels of Great Britain entering blockaded ports without carrying passengers or private letters seems to forbid any necessity for a recurrence of such proceedings as those which have brought about these explanations.

You will inform Earl Russell that the exequatur of Mr. Bunch has been withdrawn because his services as consul are not agreeable to this Government, and that the consular privileges thus taken from him will be cheerfully allowed to any successor whom Her Majesty's Government may appoint against whom no grave personal objections shall exist. It is a source of satisfaction to the President to reflect that the proceeding which I have been considering occurred some time ago and that the part of it which was most calculated to offend and to which exception is more especially taken finds no support in the communication of Earl Russell.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, November 22, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the reception of the missing dispatch of the 23d of October from the Department, which relates as I had conjectured to the case of Mr. Bunch, the British consul at Charleston. In conformity with the instructions therein contained I have addressed a note to Lord Russell on the subject, a copy of which I have the honor to transmit herewith.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

[Inclosure.]

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, November 21, 1861.

Right Hon. Earl RUSSELL, &c.

MY LORD: The undersigned, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States, has the honor to inform the Right Hon. Earl Russell, Her Majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs, that he has now just received the answer of his Government to the note addressed by his lordship to the undersigned on the 9th of September last touching certain representations made by him under instructions from his Government of the conduct of Mr. Robert Bunch, Her Majesty's consul at Charleston, and he now proceeds to submit the substance of the same to his lordship's consideration.

And first it is a source of satisfaction to the undersigned to be able to say that the President finds that that part of Mr. Bunch's proceedings which was most calculated to offend the United States and to which exception was more especially taken has no support in the communication of his lordship to which it is now proposed to reply. If it be true that Mr. Bunch made any assurances direct or implied to the insurgents in the United States of a disposition on the part of Her Majesty's Government to recognize them as a State it is now clear that he acted utterly without authority. Whatever is the responsibility which may be supposed to attach to Mr. Bunch for such an act there is no disposition left to assign the smallest share of it to the source to which he is indebted for his official position.

But though there is great cause for gratification in this view of his lordship's note the undersigned is constrained to admit that in another the President has received it with somewhat less satisfaction. It would appear that Her Majesty's Government has avowed that Mr. Bunch did act under instructions so far as his conduct was known to the foreign department and that that action went to the extent of communicating to the persons exercising authority in the so-called Confederate States the desire of Her Majesty's Government that the second, third, and fourth articles of the declaration of Paris should be observed by the States in the prosecution of the hostilities in which they were engaged. The undersigned regrets to be obliged to submit to his lordship's consideration the fact that Mr. Bunch received from the Government of the United States a recognition exclusively confined to the performance of consular duties and that in proceeding to execute others which very nearly approach if they do not absolutely belong to those of diplomatic agents only he seems to them to have transcended the just limits of any authority which they had ever consented to vest in him.

Well aware of the great difficulties necessarily in the way of an intimate acquaintance with the laws of a foreign State the undersigned will not pretend to claim of Her Majesty's Government that it should be familiar with those of the United States; but it becomes his duty to point out the fact that Mr. Bunch in accepting the post which he did under Her Majesty's authority voluntarily made himself amenable at least during the period of his residence to the authority of those laws. When therefore he received a direction from the foreign department to do an act which was not known by it to be a violation of one of those laws but which he was bound to know to be such his duty clearly should have been instead of proceeding at once in contravention of the law to apprise his Government of the position he was placed in and to await their decision after a full consideration of the question involved. The statute to which allusion is made forbids under a heavy penalty any person not specially appointed or duly authorized or recognized by the President, whether citizen or denizen, privileged or unprivileged, from counseling, advising, aiding or assisting in any political correspondence with the Government of any foreign State whatever with an intent to influence the measures of any foreign Government or of any officer or agent thereof in relation to any disputes or controversies with the United States or to defeat the measures of their Government.

Neither is the undersigned so fortunate as to see in this proceeding of Mr. Bunch thus shown to be on his part a wanton violation of the law of the United States a sufficient justification or excuse in the consideration that Great Britain is deeply interested in the maintenance of the articles which provide that the flag covers the goods, and that the goods of a neutral taken on board a belligerent ship are not liable to confiscation. It is enough to say on this subject that in the view of nearly all civilized nations the proper agents to make known such wishes are the diplomatic, not the consular agents of a Government, and that the only authority in the United States to which any diplomatic communication whatever can be made is the Government of the United States itself. The undersigned is too confident of the soundness of the principles which have ever actuated the Government of Great Britain in all its relations with foreign countries not to affirm that it would never give countenance for a single moment to the application of any other doctrine than this to the management of its own affairs.

Least of all will the undersigned be permitted to admit that communication by Mr. Bunch while exercising consular privileges granted to him with the consent of the United States with insurgents endeavoring to overthrow the Government can be justified by the declaration of Her Majesty's ministers that they have already recognized the belligerent character of those insurgents and will continue so to consider them. It is indeed true that Her Majesty's proclamation has been issued for the regulation of all her own subjects and that it has been interpreted by her Government as recognizing the insurgents as a belligerent. But it is equally true that the Government of the United States declines to accept any such interpretation as modifying in the least degree its own rights and powers or the obligations of all friendly nations toward it.

Still adhering to this position the undersigned is instructed to announce as the result of the most calm and impartial deliberation upon the question thus submitted for its decision the necessity which his Government feels itself under to revoke the exequatur of Mr. Bunch. Neither has this step been taken without the pressure of a strong conviction that independently of the facts already alleged his personal conduct even down to the time this correspondence has been going on as well as before it commenced has been that not of a friend to the Government nor even of a neutral but of a partisan of faction and disunion.

In conclusion it is with much pleasure that the undersigned has it in his power to convey to Earl Russell the sense entertained by the President of the action of Her Majesty's representative at Washington. It is felt to be due to him as well as to his Government to say that in all his proceedings he has carefully respected the sovereignty and the rights of the United States, and that the arrangements which have been made by him with the entire approval of the Government for establishing a communication between his Government and its consuls through the national vessels of Great Britain entering blockaded ports without carrying passengers or private letters bid fair to preclude all necessity for a recurrence of such proceedings as those which have necessitated this painful correspondence.

Having thus performed the duty imposed upon him of announcing that the exequatur of Mr. Bunch has been withdrawn because his services are no longer agreeable to the Government of the United States the undersigned is further instructed to say that the consular privileges thus taken from him will be cheerfully allowed to any successor whom Her Majesty may be pleased to appoint against whom no grave personal objections are known to exist.

The undersigned has the honor to renew to Earl Russell the assurances of the highest consideration with which he is his lordship's most obedient servant,

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

Case of Henry A. Reeves.

This person was arrested by order of the Secretary of State about the 2d of September, 1861, at Greenport, Long Island, and committed to Fort Lafayette. He was the editor of a paper published at Greenport called the Republican Watchman, which by its secession teachings and attacks upon the acts of the officers of the United States Government and the Administration afforded aid and comfort to the insurrectionists. An order was issued from the Department of State October 3, 1861, directing Lieutenant-Colonel Burke, commanding at Fort Lafayette, to release Reeves on his taking the oath of allegiance and stipulating not to do any hostile act against the Government of the United States. The said Henry A. Reeves was accordingly released October 5, 1861.—From Record Book, State Department, "Arrests for Disloyalty."

U. S. MARSHAL'S OFFICE, New York, August 31, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: I have this day mailed for your perusal several copies* of the Republican Watchman, published at Greenport, Long Island, and await your opinion as to whether the editor shall be confined at Fort Lafayette or not.

Yours, respectfully,

ROBT. MURRAY.

WASHINGTON, September 2, 1861.

ROBERT MURRAY, U. S. Marshal:

Arrest the editor of the Greenport Republican Watchman and send him to Fort Lafayette and deliver him into the custody of Col. Martin Burke. If he has left home for Syracuse arrest him anywhere on the road where he can be found.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

UNION OFFICE, Riverhead, Long Island, September 3, 1861.

DEAR GOVERNOR SEWARD: Pardon me for trespassing upon your time for a moment. It is high time that the arm of the Government was stretched out down this way. The traitor press and traitors' mouths ought to be hermetically sealed. We have in Greenport a paper called the Republican Watchman which according to its small ability is doing what mischief it can and weekly teaches secession. Already the proprietor has notified the sheriff of our county of his expectation of a cleaning out by the loyal people of the place in order of course to secure damages; but it would be well for the Government to step in before the people do and suppress it lawfully. It is a most pestilent sheet, supported mainly by Ben Wood as I understand, and ought to be stopped. According to its power it is equally as bad as the New York News, Journal of Commerce or Day Book. If you do not interpose the people will and for one I deprecate their taking the law into their own hands.

There are many individuals among us who ought to be arrested. In every way, by words at least and by act if they could, they malign and damn the Government and make themselves so obnoxious to the wrath of our well-disposed people that I have wondered these sympathizers with Southern traitors have not already been tarred and feathered. It is a state of things we cannot long submit to and I fear the word will soon be given that will produce lawless but deserved deeds. A few detectives or a marshal down here to gather names and facts would do something perhaps to allay the feeling, but the suppression of the Watchman would strike terror to their cowardly hearts and keep them silent. I sincerely trust that something will be done. We have murderers enough in front without being obliged to look after assassins at our backs. One of the fiercest has a son, postmaster, who pretends to be a Republican, both no doubt playing into each other's hands as they have done heretofore. We are getting to be weary of these things and we beg you to help us.

I am, dear sir, with highest esteem and regard, faithfully yours, and my country's,

W. VAN ZANDT.

SMITHTOWN, LONG ISLAND, September 9, 1861.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: I have been earnestly requested by a large number of the friends of Mr. Henry A. Reeves, of Greenport, Long Island, now a prisoner at Fort Lafayette, to inquire into the causes of his arrest and to use my influence for his release. I have known Mr. Reeves for a long time and have always esteemed him as a gentleman of worth and integrity. The course he has pursued during the present disastrous condition of the country has not met with my approbation, but I have still deemed him loyal though I think his views erroneous and untenable. He has a mother and sister entirely dependent upon his exertions for support. May I not ask his release upon the condition that his future course will be more in accordance with the sentiment so loyally and almost universally expressed by the masses of the North, to which I think he ought unhesitatingly to subscribe?

Should you deem that a compliance with the above request would not be prejudicial to the public interest you would receive the grateful thanks of his family and friends and much oblige, yours, respectfully,

EDWD. HENRY SMITH,

Member of Congress, First District of New York.

P. S.—I am also requested to ask permission to visit Mr. Reeves for the purpose of consulting with him upon his affairs, which visit (if granted) must of course be subject to any conditions the Government may see fit to impose. An early answer is respectfully requested.

E. H. S.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 13, 1861.

HON. EDWARD HENRY SMITH, Smithtown, N. Y.

SIR: Your letter of September 9 has been received. Mr. Reeves has the opportunity to submit anything to the Government here that he desires through the hands of Colonel Burke. Any communication that he might desire to make would receive due consideration; but it is not deemed expedient by the public authorities to grant permission for visits to the prisoners at Fort Lafayette except in compliance with wishes expressed by themselves. I should be happy to accede to your wishes if it were compatible with regulations which have been made out of regard to the public safety and welfare.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

FORT LAFAYETTE, Saturday, September 21, 1861.

S. WELLS PHILLIPS, Watchman Office, Greenport, Long Island.

DEAR FRIEND: Your favor of the 17th was received this morning and its contents noted with the attention its importance demands. I have addressed a letter to the Secretary of State to-day of which I inclose a copy. As to my giving proof of loyalty, taking an oath, &c., while utterly denying that I have done anything to warrant even a colorable pretense of necessity for any such test, and while as utterly repelling the imputation that arises from the very attempt to impose it, I am yet willing to accept any conditions necessary to effect my release from this prison which are compatible with my own honor and self-respect. Anything that does not leave me the possession of these essential elements of manhood without which life would be simply intolerable and useless can never obtain the sanction of my judgment nor the assent of my mind. I recognize the full importance of my being at liberty, both as respects my own and the interest of others, nor am I inspired with any quixotic folly of affecting the glories of martyrdom, however tempting the occasion or worthy the cause, but I could not live outside these walls if to purchase such liberty I had subscribed to conditions in any wise derogatory to my personal self-respect. Retaining that I can calmly endure whatever measure of calamity the future may have in store; losing that the amplest freedom of action and the largest degree of prosperity are alike worthless to reconcile me with an existence void of all inward support and satisfaction.

Still this is presupposing a state of facts that may never arise. Until I know definitely the grounds on which I am held and the terms proposed to be submitted for my acceptance or rejection I cannot of course tell what I can do. Meanwhile I am exceedingly obliged to you, to Mr. Smith and to all others who have so kindly volunteered their services on my behalf, and we will hope that affairs will soon be brought to some decisive issue. * * * Mr. Smith will get a letter from me in a day or two reciting what I have done and inclosing a copy of my letter to Seward. Good-bye. Best wishes to your folks and to all inquiring friends.

Very truly and sincerely, yours,

HENRY A. REEVES.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: I am this day in receipt of a letter covering a copy of a communication from yourself to Hon. E. H. Smith in response to his inquiries relative to my case, in which you state that I have "opportunity to intrust anything to the Government here that he (I) desires through the hands of Colonel Burke," and that "it is not deemed expedient by the public authorities to grant permission for visits to the prisoners at Fort Lafayette except in compliance with wishes expressed by themselves." I have been unable to fully satisfy my mind as to the precise meaning or force rather of the italicized clause, but if it reaches to the extent of making permission to receive visitors dependent on my previously expressed wish I hereby respectfully signify my wish that Hon. Mr. Smith be permitted to visit me at this place at as early a date as may comport with his convenience.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FORT LAFAYETTE, October 1, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: Hon. E. H. Smith has visited me to-day in pursuance of your pass. Acting on his advice I have to request that you will with as little delay as possible forward to me copies of the charges and specifications if there be any which are lodged against me in the State or other Department of the Government, to the end that I may know the grounds on which I am held and thus be enabled to determine whether or not I can accept any proposed terms of release.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
HENRY A. REEVES.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 3, 1861.

Lieut. Col. MARTIN BURKE, Fort Lafayette, N. Y.

SIR: Let H. A. Reeves be released from custody on his taking the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States and engaging that he will do no act and hold no correspondence that is disloyal or prejudicial to the Union. I dispatch this by the hand of the Hon. William H. Ludlow to Robert Murray, esq., the U. S. marshal, who has been instructed to cause a police examination in certain cases.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

SMITHTOWN, October 4, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with the permission granted by the Department I visited H. A. Reeves at Fort Lafayette on Tuesday last. One object I had in view was to gratify his mother who is much distressed, and another to induce him to apply for his release on condition of his pledging himself to give his support to the Government and taking the necessary oath. With the permission of Colonel Burke I placed before him the inclosed letter from Dr. B. D. Carpenter, an influential man and a neighbor of Reeves. I deeply sympathize with the family of Mr. Reeves, who by his incarceration are entirely dependent upon friends and neighbors for support. I also sympathize with him as an old and warm friend, but utterly disapprove the course he has pursued during the deplorable condition in which our country has been placed by the foul rebellion which is pervading the land.

He (Reeves) is anxious to know what charges were made against him with a view to disprove them or to make the necessary amends if in his power, which if he will do I respectfully ask his release. The immediate friends of Mr. Reeves express themselves willing to pledge the future of his paper to an honest and loyal course, giving an unwavering adherence to the Union and Constitution, which if faithfully performed will undo what mischief in any way he has caused. I wish it to be distinctly understood that I have no sympathy with treason, but deem it the duty of every citizen to sustain the Government in its hour of peril and to insist upon the preservation of the Union and the maintenance of the laws. I do not wish to be intrusive or occupy unnecessarily your valuable time. I call your attention to the latter part of the inclosed letter. Will you have the goodness to let me know the conditions upon which Reeves will be released if at all?

Most respectfully, your humble servant,
EDWD. HENRY SMITH,
Member of Congress.

[Inclosure.]

CUTCHOGUE, September 26, 1861.

Hon. EDWARD H. SMITH.

DEAR SIR: I understand that you are in possession of a letter from the Secretary of State touching the arrest of Mr. Reeves. Do you not think with us that it would be well for you to have a personal interview with the honorable Secretary? By doing so you will be able to more fully explain Mr. Reeves' position and the most influential causes that resulted in his arrest. It is now well ascertained that a personal feeling was the motive to the charges made against him and that not the good of the State but desire to gratify personal malice the reason that his arrest was so diligently pursued. This feeling was constantly exerted to stimulate a warm and ardent but honest nature until he was led without doubt into imprudent, intemperate expressions, not willfully designing to injure the State, neither to embarrass the Administration. If rightfully understood the Secretary will readily conclude with us who see and feel the workings of it, but Mr. Reeves in his arrest is doing more to create a feeling of repugnance to the Administration than he could possibly have accomplished by any course that he might pursue with his paper. It being known that the local influence was not a political but a personal one tends to increase the feeling. Mr. Reeves himself is a Democrat, but his relatives are nearly all Republicans. They and others are by this arrest entirely diverted from their old party affinities.

You have our pledge that in case Mr. Reeves is released and again takes charge of his paper it shall be conducted as a Democratic paper, but not offensively so. Indeed every effort will be made by the patrons of the paper (and their efforts can be relied on) to make it an open, fair, but not obnoxious opponent.

Thine, as ever,

B. D. CARPENTER.

Another reason why the arrest of Reeves is creating a prejudicial feeling in the community is the fact that he is poor, very poor, and besides has a mother, sister and imbecile brother entirely dependent upon him, and that they are now being supported by voluntary contributions. You will see at once what effect such a combination of circumstances would be likely to produce acting on the sympathies of a community like ours.

FORT HAMILTON, October 5, 1861.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

SIR: According to your orders of the 3d instant I have this day released * * * Henry A. Reeves, and herewith inclose their [his] separate oath of allegiance and parole.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

MARTIN BURKE,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding.
